Emblemas morales (1591); Tesoro de la lengua castellana (1611, enlarged 1673), ed. M. de Riquer (1943). E.M.W.

Coverdale, Miles (*Yorkshire 1488; †19 II 1568), English translator. Educated at Cambridge, Coverdale became bishop of Exeter in 1551, but queen Mary and queen Elizabeth did not favour his Lutheran ideas. He was the first scholar to translate the whole of the Bible into English.

Biblia. The Byble: that is the Holy Scripture of the Olde and New Testament faythfully translated into Englysche (Zurich?, 1535); Writings of Myles Coverdale, ed. G. Pearson (1844); Remains of Myles Coverdale, ed. G. Pearson (1846).

B. F. Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (1905); A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911). W.A.A.

Cowley, ABRAHAM (*London 1618?; Chertsey 28 VII 1667), English poet and ssayist, educated at Westminster School 1628?–36) and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow (1640) nd wrote The Guardian to entertain Prince Charles. Cowley joined the court at Ox- ord (1643), became secretary to Jermyn nd Henrietta Maria in France (1646), was n Jersey and Holland on royalist affairs, nd an agent in cipher correspondence with Charles I. In 1654 Cowley returned o England: he claims as a spy, possibly ubmitting to Cromwell (1656) as a cloak, or he returned to France in 1659. He etired from politics after 1660 and lived quietly at Chertsey. Cowley's early works how the good ear and fine sense of form hat always redeem the least inspired of his ater work. Advancing years made him more expert rather than maturer as a poet. His Cutter of Coleman Street is workman- ke, but much of his verse is ingenious ather than intense. Metrically he was killed, in his occasional verse, his free des, his anacreontics and heroic couplets f the epic Davideis.

Works, ed. T. Sprat (1668; repr. 12th ed. 721); The Poems, ed. A. R. Waller (1905); Essays, Plays and Sundry Verses, ed. A. R. Waller (1906); The Mistress, etc., ed. J. Spar- ow (1926).

J. Loiseaux, A. C. (1931); A. H. Nethercot, A. C. The Muse's Hannibal (1931).
B.L.J.

Cowper, WILLIAM (*Great Berkhamp- tead 15 XI 1731; †Dereham 25 IV 1800), English poet and letter-writer; educated t Westminster; his unambitious legal areer was interrupted by a mental breakdown, after which he retired to the country, passing the remainder of his life with his riend Mary Unwin and, with some tragic nterludes, savouring the daily joys of a ircumscribed round of study, writing, walks and visits. These are reflected in the divine chit-chat' of his letters to his riends. His sensibility to natural beauty, reshness of feeling and exquisite appre- iation of trifles cast an enchantment over he conventional measures of his poetry, nd his Task and 'On Receipt of my Mother's Picture' were, like his playful John Gilpin', welcomed by his age.

Anti-Thelyphthora (pub. anon. 1781); Poems by William Cowper of the Inner Temple, Esq. (1782); The Task (with Epistle to Joseph Hill, John Gilpin, etc., 1785); Homer's Iliad nd Odyssey (2 vols, 1791).—Poems (inc. Mother's Picture', 1798).

W. Hayley, Life and Posthumous Writings 1803), Life and Letters of W. C. (1804).—Works (15 vols, ed. R. Southey, with memoir, 1834–37).—Poetical Works of W. C., ed. J. Bruce (3 vols, 1865).

C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Causeries du Lundi (1868); Lord David Cecil, The Stricken Deer: or the Life of C. (1929).
R.M.H.

Crabbe, GEORGE (*Aldeburgh 24 XII 1754; ∞1783 Sarah Elmy; †Trowbridge 3 II 1832), English poet. Crabbe's early life was spent in Suffolk where his father was a customs official, but after an unsuccessful attempt at medical practice he came to London to live by writing. Soon almost destitute, he was befriended by Burke who helped him to publish, introduced him into Johnson's circle and encouraged him to take Orders. He became chaplain to the duke of Rutland and later rector of Trowbridge.

Crabbe modelled his style upon the couplet of Pope, to which he adhered to the end. Grimly realistic in outlook, he described the Suffolk life and landscape he knew, with minute attention to detail and a sense of character and anecdote. If his imaginative scope was limited and his satire monotonous in its dark pessimism, his poetry gained force and directness from his courageous fidelity to fact and scorn of facile sentimentality.

VERSE: The Library (1781); The Village (1783); The Newspaper (1785); Poems (previous works, with The Parish Register, Sir Eustace Grey and other new poems, 1807); The Borough (1810); Tales in Verse (1812); Tales of the Hall (2 vols, 1819); The Poetical Works: With his letters and journals and his Life, by his Son (including Posthumous Tales, 8 vols, 1834); Poetical Works, ed. A. J. and R. M. Carlyle (1908); Poems (selected with intro. and notes by P. Henderson, 1946).—PROSE: Posthumous Sermons, ed. J. D. Hastings (1850).

The Life of G. C., by his Son (intro. by E. M. Forster, 1932; by E. Blunden, 1947); A. Ainger, C. (1903); René Huchon, G. C. and His Times (tr. F. Clarke, 1907); J. H. Evans, The Poems of G. C.: a Literary and Historical Study (1933).
R.F.

Craik, DINAH MARIA, née Mulock (*Stoke-upon-Trent 20 IV 1826; ∞1864 George Lillie Craik; †Bromley 12 X 1887), English writer of tales and verses for children and of novels mirroring the domestic morality of her age.

Cola Monti (1849); Alice Learmont (1852); Little Lame Prince (1874); Children's Poetry (1881).—NOVELS: The Ogilvies (3 vols, 1849); John Halifax, Gentleman (1857), ed. G. Home (1914).—VERSE: Poems (1859); Poems of Thirty Years, new and old (1881).

Women Novelists of Queen Victoria's Age (by various hands, 1897).
R.M.H.

Crane, RALPH (*1589 ?; fl. 1625; †London), English verse-writer and lawyer's clerk who was associated with Sir Kenelm Digby and transcribed MS. poems.

The Workes of Mercy (1621; as The Pilgrimes New-Yeares-Gift, 1625 ?). B.L.J.

Crane, STEPHEN (*Newark, N.J. 1 XI 1871; ∞1898 Cora Taylor; †Badenweiler, Germany 5 VI 1900), American novelist and short-story writer. He spent his boyhood in upstate New York, then slummed with Manhattan art students. His first novel, Maggie: A Girl of the Streets (1892), had a sordid Bowery setting, remaining unrecognized until the success of The Red Badge of Courage (1895). He wrote this realistic masterpiece of a young soldier caught in the fury of civil war battle with no personal experience of war; on the strength of it he became a war reporter in Mexico, Cuba and Greece. His naturalistic short stories deal with poverty, war, cruelty and death; best known is 'The Open Boat', based on events which happened to him after the sinking of a ship. The details of his life, as with Poe, are confused with myth; his early death was caused by tuberculosis.

VERSE: The Black Riders (1895); War Is Kind (1899).—SHORT STORIES: The Open Boat and Other Tales of Adventure (1898); The Monster and Other Stories (1899); Wounds in the Rain (1900); Whilomville Stories (1900).—NOVELS: The Third Violet (1897); Active Service (1899).—The Works of S. C., ed. W. Follett (12 vols, 1925–26).

T. Beer, S. C.: A Study in American Letters (1923). H.L.C.

Cranley, THOMAS (fl. 1635), English poet and friend of George Wither. Cranley's Amanda which he wrote when 'a prisoner in the King's Bench' gives a lively description of town life, competently written.

Amanda, or the Reformed Whore (1635; reissued as The Converted Courtezan, 1639; repr. F. Ouvry, 1869). B.L.J.

Cranmer, THOMAS (*Aslackton 2 VII 1489; †Oxford 21 III 1556), English reformer. Archbishop of Canterbury (1533), Cranmer rejected papal jurisdiction and helped to compose the First (1549) and Second (1552) Books of Common Prayer before his martyrdom.

A Defence of the True and Catholike Doctrine of the Sacrament (1550); An answer of the most reverend Father in God (1551); Writings and Disputations of T. C., ed. J. E. Cox (1844); Miscellaneous Writings and Letters of T. C., ed. J. E. Cox (1846).

J. Strype, Memorials of T. C. (1694); A. F. Pollard, C. and the English Reformation (1926) A. C. Deane, The Life of T. C. (1927). W.A.A.

Craon, AMAURI, MAURICE and PIERRE D (fl. early 13th century). Five poems, tw only of certain attribution, are assigned i the MSS to one or other of the above, al members of the powerful family of Craor (Mayenne). Maurice de Craon is th titular hero of a Middle High Germa romance, Moriz von Craon (ed. E Schröder, 1894).

Ed. and discussion in A. Långfors, 'Le chansons attribuées aux seigneurs de Craon' Mem. soc. neophil. Helsingfors, 6 (1917). F.W.

Crashaw, RICHARD (*London 1612/13 ? †Loreto 21 VIII 1649), English religiou poet, educated at Charterhouse (1629–31 and Pembroke College, Cambridge, Fellow of Peterhouse (1635); possibl ordained by 1639, he became a splendi preacher, devoting time to poetry, musi painting and teaching. Anticipatin ejection he left, possibly for Oxford, an visited Leiden and Paris (1643–45). A Paris he associated with Cowley an Henrietta Maria, entering the Roma church. Despite her patronage his visit t Rome brought poverty and neglect. Employed (1647) by cardinal Pallotta, Crashav received a post at Loreto (1649). Crashaw' verse shows less structural and imaginativ strength but more colour and intensity o symbolism than that of his Englis contemporaries: it shows a personality b no means absorbed in itself whos extravagances derive from sincerity no affectation.

Epigrammatum Sacrorum Liber (1634) Steps to the Temple (1646; 1648); Poems English Latin and Greek, ed. L. C. Marti (1927).

R. C. Wallerstein, R. C. (1935); Austi Warren, R. C., A Study in Baroque Sensibilit (1939). B.L.J.

Crates (fl. c. 450–425 B.C.), poet o Athenian Old Comedy. Some 10 play recorded: Theria ('The Beasts') portraye a meatless Golden Age, where food serve itself. Aristophanes found his work subtl and polished, if somewhat meagre; Aristotle says he began the development fron the satirical comedy towards a general an coherent plot.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta I (1880); J. Demiańczuk, Supplementun Comicum (1912).

G. Norwood, Greek Comedy (1931, with trs). E.W.H.

Crates of Thebes (*c. 365; †285 B.C.), Greek philosopher, followed the doctrines of Diogenes of Sinope, the Cynic. The Cynics formed no school: the name is given to those who preached and practised self-sufficiency and voluntary poverty. Crates, a cheerful and popular example, lived as a wandering beggar, preaching his doctrine and giving practical moral advice from house to house. He taught Zeno, the founder of the Stoic school.

A. Nauck, Tragicorum Graecorum Fragmenta (2nd ed. 1889); H. Diels, Poetarum Philosophorum Graecorum Fragmenta (1901).

D. R. Dudley, A History of Cynicism (1938). D.J.F.

Cratinus (*c. 490; †soon after 423 B.C.), poet of Athenian Old Comedy. His 28 or 29 plays had themes of myth-burlesque or were built round personal satire of politicians, poets and others. Cratinus achieved much by apparent disorder and juxtaposition of the present with his own version of the past. Archilochoi (prob. 448) set 'Archilochus and friends' against Homer and Hesiod; in Ploutoi (437–430) the 'Spirits of Wealth' judged the contemporary rich; Dionysalexandros (430–429) was a skit on the judgment of Paris and an attack by innuendo on Pericles; Putine ('The Flagon', 423) brought on Cratinus himself, with Comedy, his wife, and Drunkenness, his mistress. Rich in invention, austere and direct in style, bitter in attack, Cratinus stands out as the Aeschylus of comedy.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, I (1880); important supplements in J. Demiańczuk, Supplementum Comicum (1912) and D. L. Page, Greek Literary Papyri, I (Loeb Libr. 1942).

F. Pieters, Cratinus (1946, Dutch, with Fr. summary); G. Norwood, Greek Comedy (1931, with trs). E.W.H.

Crawford, Francis Marion (*Bagni di Lucca 2 VIII 1854; ∞1884 Elizabeth Berdan; †Sorrento 9 IV 1909), American short-story writer, novelist, critic. Of his 45 novels, including historical romances, his 15 studies of Italian life show his greatest skill.

Mr Isaacs (1882); Saracinesca (1887); Sant' Ilario (1889); Greifenstein (1889); Don Orsino (1892); The Novel: What It Is (1893).

M. H. Elliott, My Cousin, F. M. C. (1934). H.L.C.

Crawford, Isabella Valancy (*Dublin 25 XII 1850; †Toronto 1887), Canadian poet and story writer.

Collected Poems (1905).

K. Hale, I. V. C. (with biblio., 1923). M.H.M.M.

Creanga, Ioan (*Humulesti, Moldavia 1 III 1837; ∞1859 Ileana Grigoriu; o|o after 1862; †Jassy 31 XII 1889 [12 I 1890]), Rumanian author. Although his output was small—two small volumes and a few elementary textbooks—Creanga is still the most popular writer in Rumania. Son of a Moldavian peasant he was ordained deacon (1859) but decided to give up the church and take up teaching (1862). He lost his teaching job and was deprived of his deaconship (1872) for 'unseemly' behaviour (going to theatres, potting crows on the belfry, wearing an ordinary hat instead of the 'comanac'). Reinstated by Maiorescu (1874) he joined the Junimea group (1875) and so became a friend of Eminescu. His work appeared in Convorbiri Literare ('Literary Talks') between 1875 and 1882.

Creanga's art is natural and spontaneous. There are no foreign influences in his work for he knew no foreign languages and read very little. In his naïve tales he reveals the mentality of the Moldavian peasant.

Scrierile: vol. I, Povestii (1890; some of these tales tr. by L. Byng, Old Nichifor the Impostor, 1921; Recollections and three other tales, 1930); vol. II, Aminţiri din copilărie (1892; Recollections and other tales, tr. M. Beza, 1930).

J. Boutière, La Vie et l'œuvre de C. (1930); L. Predescu, C., Vieţa şi opera (2 vols, 1932); G. Calinescu, Vieţa lui C. (1938). A.V.W.

Creasy, Sir Edward Shepherd (*Bexley 1812; †Hampton Wick 27 I 1878), English historian, whose Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World (1852) became a popular success as well as winning approval of military experts.

Historical and Critical Account of the Several Invasions of England (1852); History of Ottoman Turks (1878).—Men of the Time, ed. T. H. Ward (1887). R.M.H.

Crébillon (fils), Claude-Prosper Jolyot de (*Paris 14 II 1707; ∞1748 Lady Henrietta Maria Stafford; †ibid. 12 IV 1777), French writer, son of the dramatist. His licentious stories and novels acquire a literary value by their taut and often witty style. They painted the male and female libertines of contemporary high society, whose vices they claimed to expose.

L'Ecumoire, ou Tanzaï et Néardarné (1733); Les Egarements du cœur et de l'esprit (1736); Le Sopha (1745); Les heureux orphelins (1754); La nuit et le moment (1755); Le Hasard du coin du feu (1763).—Œuvres complètes (1772).

O. Uzanne, Les Conteurs du 18e siècle (1879). G.B.

Crébillon (père), PROSPER JOLYOT DE (*Dijon 13 II 1674; †Paris 17 VI 1762), French dramatist. After Voltaire he was the chief 18th-century writer of tragedies; his 9 plays mingled pathos and horror with romantic complications derived from the 17th-century novelists. Boileau described him as a 'drunken Racine'. He was a good-natured pipe-smoker, fond of dogs and cats. His theatrical violence has left little trace as literature.

Idoménée (1705); Atrée et Thyeste (1707); Electre (1709); Rhadamiste et Zénobie (1711); Xerxès (1714); Sémiramis (1717); Pyrrhus (1726); Catalina (1748); Le Triumvirat (1754).—Théâtre complet, ed. A. Vitu (1885).
M. Dutrait, C. (1895). G.B.

Crémazie, (JOSEPH) OCTAVE (*Quebec 16 IV 1827; †Le Havre 16 I 1879), French Canadian poet, often called 'the father of French poetry in Canada'. He set up as a bookseller in Quebec in 1848, when the romantics of France were arousing in French Canadians a lively interest in the literature of the mother country, and his shop became a centre of intellectual activity. But in 1868 business reverses compelled him to flee to France where he spent the rest of his life under the name of Jules Fontaine, and wrote a journal describing the siege of Paris. His poem 'Le Drapeau de Carillon' was the first patriotic poem to stir the hearts of French Canadians and is still immensely popular.

After his death his verses, scattered in various periodicals, were collected by the Institut Canadien de Quebec and published in a volume with some of his letters. His strong influence on the Quebec writers of his day was largely due to his wide acquaintance with the more recent writing not only of France but of several other European countries. There is some uncertainty about the exact date and circumstances of his birth; see Émile Chartier in Bulletin des recherches historiques, 39.

Œuvres complètes (1883).
T. Chapais, Soirées canadiennes, II (1883); H. R. Casgrain, O. C. (1912); S. Marion, Origines littéraires du Canada français (1951) and Lettres Canadiennes d'autrefois, 5 (1947). B.K.S.

Cremer, JACOBUS JAN (*Arnhem 1 IX 1827; ∞1852 Johannette L. Brouwérius van Nideck; †The Hague 5 VI 1880), Dutch writer of sentimental sketches of country life in dialect, and of novels with a social aim; much admired reciter from his own works.

Betuwsche Novellen (1852–55); Over-Betuwsche Novellen (1856–77).
E. J. Potgieter in De Gids, 26 (1862) J. ten Brink, Geschied. Noord-Nederl. Letteren 2 (1904; with biblio.). J.W.W.

Crenne, HÉLISENNE DE (fl. Picardy c 1540), French novelist. Her chief work Les Angoisses douloureuses, is a very earl example of the 'confessional' novel Though borrowing from Boccaccio's Fia metta, it is predominantly her own frustrated love-story.

Les Angoysses douloureuses qui procèden d'amours (1538); Epistres familières et invective (1539); Le Songe de Madame Hélisenne (1540) —Œuvres, ed. C. Colet (1550).
G. Reynier, Le Roman sentimental avan l'Astrée (1908); L. Loviot, 'H. de C.', in Rev des livres anciens (1917). G.B.

Crescas, ḤASDAI (*Barcelona 1340; †Saragossa 1410), Spanish Hebrew philosopher He was chief rabbi of the Jews of Aragon during and after the disastrous pogrom of 1391, of which he wrote a historical account. With his magnum opus, Or Adonai (Ferrara, 1555), he is the first medieval philosopher to deny the validity of Aristotle's system of physics, applying to it the method used in talmudic discussion. He directly influenced Pico della Mirandola; the ideas of Galilei and Giordano Bruno show surprising similarity to his. He liberated Jewish religious thought from its intellectualist bias.

H. A. Wolfson, Crescas' Critique of Aristotle (1929); M. Waxman, The Philosophy of Don H. C. (1920); I. Husik, Hist. of Medieval Jew. Philos. (1946). C.R.

Crétin, GUILLAUME (*Paris c. 1465; †1525), French poet and chronicler. He became chaplain to the Sainte-Chapelle (1476) and almoner to Louis XII. His works comprise short poems in the style of the rhétoriqueurs—many being on religious subjects—and 12 books of rhymed chronicles for François I. His matter is impersonal and dull, his manner uninspired, and his rhymes too often equivocal.

Œuvres poétiques, ed. K. Chesney (1932).
H. Guy, 'La Chronique française de maître G. Crétin', in Revue des Langues Romanes, 47–48 (1904–05). M.Y.

Creutz, COUNT GUSTAF PHILIP (*Anjala gård, Finland V 1731; †Stockholm 30 X 1785), Swedish politician and poet. Brought up as a member of the 'Hat' party, he became a friend of the future Gustav III. He was Swedish minister (1766) and ambassador (1772) in Paris, and had a brilliant career. He was a friend of Voltaire, Marmontel and other notable Frenchmen and was an important cultural link between France and Sweden. After making a treaty between Sweden and U.S.A. in 1783 he was recalled by the king to be president of the council. All his writing was done before 1763, and, though slight in bulk, it had considerable importance in Swedish literature. Exquisite in form, rococo in spirit, and reflecting the sensuous, elegant and attractive personality of its author, his poetry may be said to mark the beginning of modern Swedish verse. His most important work, Atis och Camilla (1761), is a pastoral love-poem in five cantos. Together with his friend Gyllenborg he was admitted to the Tankebyggarorden in 1753 and became a close associate of Fru Nordenflycht.

Contributions to Tankebyggarordens Våra Försök (1753–56) and Witterhetsarbeten (1759–62); Daphne (1762).—Witterhetsarbeten av C. och Gyllenborg (1795); Skrifter, ed. A. Hultén (1913).

G. Castrén, G. Ph. C. (1917); M. Lamm, Upplysningstidens romantik, 1 (1918).

B.M.E.M.; A.H.J.K.

Crèvecoeur, MICHEL-GUILLAUME JEAN DE (*Caen 31 I 1735; ∞1769 Mehetable Tippet; †Sarcelles 12 XI 1813), American essayist. He married and settled in New Jersey; a loyalist, disillusioned by the revolution. His Letters from an American Farmer (1782) give an arcadian description of various colonies and talk of the future composite American nationality.

Sketches of 18th-century America (1925).

J. P. Mitchell, St J. de C. (1916).

H.L.C.

Cricius (Krzycki), ANDRZEJ (*Krzyck 7 VII 1482; †Cracow 10 V 1537), Polish-Latin poet. In 1535 he became archbishop. He wrote, in Latin, panegyrical, satirical, epigrammatical and other occasional verses.

In Sigismundi regis . . . et reginae Barbarae connubium carmen (1512); Encomium divi Sigismundi . . . (1512); Deploratio immaturae mortis Barbarae . . . (1515); Religionis et Rei Publicae querimonia (1522).—Carmina (1887; crit. ed. with intro. C. Morawski). S.S.

Crisolora, MANUELE (*1350?; †Costanza 15 IX 1415), nobleman and diplomat from Constantinople. He taught Greek at Florence from 1397 to 1400 and is considered the father of Greek studies in Italy. His works include a Greek grammar, and a Latin translation of Plato's Republic.

Graecae Grammaticae institutiones (1534).

E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique, I (1885); R. Sabbadini, 'Ultimo Ventennio della vita di M.C.', in Giorn. ligust., 17 (1890).

C.P.B.

Critias OF ATHENS (late 5th century B.C.), Greek politician, a relative of Plato and pupil of Socrates. He was one of the Thirty Tyrants (404 B.C.); this contributed to Socrates' unpopularity with the restored democracy. Critias wrote inter alia books of Constitutions, one in prose and one in verse, and in a drama expounded the view that the gods are a legislators' fabrication. His style was praised by rhetoricians.

H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, 2 (6th ed. 1952; Ancilla to the Pre-Socratic Philosophers, tr. K. Freeman, 1948).

K. Freeman, Companion to the Pre-Socratic Philosophers (1946); H. T. Wade-Gery, 'Kritias and Herodes', in Class. Quart., 39 (1945). D.J.F.

Crockett, SAMUEL RUTHERFORD (*Little Duchrae 24 IX 1860; ∞1887 Ruth Mary Milner; †21 IV 1914), Scottish novelist. Educated Castle Douglas and Edinburgh University. Free Church minister at Penicuik, Midlothian, 1886, but abandoned the church for writing. The Stickit Minister (1893) and The Lilac Sunbonnet (1894) place him in the 'Kailyard' school, with its false sentiment and excessive use of dialect, but The Raiders (1894) is an exciting adventure story set truthfully in the Galloway scene.

Dulce Cor (verses, 1886); Mad Sir Uchtred (1894); The Men of the Moss Hags (1895); Cleg Kelly (1896); The Grey Man (1896).

Ed. S. Colvin, Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson; M. M. Harper, C. and Grey Galloway (1907); G. Blake, Barrie and the Kailyard School (1951). G.W C.

Crocus, CORNELIUS (*Amsterdam c. 1500; †Rome 1 X 1550), Dutch educationist and neo-Latin playwright, studied at Louvain, was ordained priest (by John Fisher, bishop of Rochester?) and became headmaster at Amsterdam (1528–49). He opposed Luther in De fide et operibus (1531), the Anabaptists in Dissertatio cum Anabaptistis and defended the Roman Catholic church in De vera ecclesia. He wrote a number of school plays (for instance Joseph, 1535, which ran through at least 5 editions) and a manual, Colloquiorum puerilium formulae ex optimis quibusque auctoribus coactae (1536). Shortly before his death he resigned his office, journeyed on foot to Rome and was accepted into the Jesuit order by Ignatius Loyola himself.

Ed. of the most important works, A. Schott (1612); K. J. Derks in Nieuw Nederl. Biogr. Wdb., III (1914); J. F. M. Sterck, Onder Amsterdamsche humanisten (1934). J.J.M.

Croker, JOHN WILSON (*Galway 20 XII 1780; †London ? 10 VIII 1857), Irish biographer and journalist; barrister; M.P. for Downpatrick; secretary to the Admiralty; contributor to the Quarterly Review. He clashed politically with Lord Macaulay, and his strongly anti-romantic writing made him the foe of the romantics; was better equipped as a controversialist than as a writer.

On Boswell's Life of Johnson (1831); Essays on French Revolution (1857); Memoirs, Diaries and Correspondence of C., ed. L. Jennings (1884). R.McH.

Croker, THOMAS CROFTON (*Cork 15 I 1798; ∞1830 Marianne Nicholson; †Old Brompton 8 VIII 1854), Irish antiquary. Helped by his wife he collected folk traditions of Munster. His early collections were popular. His Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland (1825) ran through several editions and was translated into German by the brothers Grimm.

Researches in the South of Ireland (1824); Legends of the Lakes (1829), reissued as A Guide to the Lakes (1831) and as Killarney Legends (1876); edited Popular Songs of Ireland (1839).
T. F. Dillon Croker, memoir in Fairy Legends (1859); article in Dublin University Magazine (Aug. 1849). R.McH.

Croly, GEORGE (*Dublin 17 VIII 1780; †Walbrook 24 XI 1860), Irish author and divine. Settled London 1810; dramatic critic and periodical essayist; a romantic writer of gorgeous and unreal style.

NOVEL: Salathiel (1829).—DRAMA: Cataline, a tragedy (1822).—VERSE: Paris in 1815 (1817).
F. Croly, memoir of G. C. in The Book of Job (1863). R.McH.

Crompton, HUGH (fl. 1657), English poet and friend of Winstanley. He emigrated to Ireland before 1687. He was influenced by Waller, is often pleasant, sometimes coarse.

Poems. Being a Fardle of Fancies (1657); Pierides, or the Muses Mount (1658?). B.L.J.

Cronegk, JOHANN FRIEDRICH REICHSFREIHERR VON (*Ansbach 2 IX 1731; †Nuremberg 1 I 1758), German dramatist. While a student in Leipzig Cronegk became a friend of Gellert, Rabener and Weisse. His plays, written in alexandrines, derive from the tradition of French classical drama which was fostered in Germany by Gottsched.

Codrus (1750); Olint und Sophronia (left unfinished 1757); Schriften (2 vols, 1760–61).
W. Gensel, C., sein Leben und seine Schriften (1894). H.B.G.

Cros, CHARLES (*Fabrezan 1 I 1842; †Paris 9 IX 1888), French poet. Cros invented colour-photography and, in 1877, the phonograph, though his achievements in these fields were little known. He lived a bohemian existence in Paris, and published a curious collection of prose poems, Le Coffret de Santal (1873), the product of a mystical and tormented mind. He is regarded today as one of the true precursors of symbolism.

Poèmes et Proses, ed. H. Parisot and M. Saisset (1944).
E. Raynaud, La Bohême sous le Second Empire (1930). M.G.; J.P.R.

Crossman, SAMUEL (*Monk's Bradfield, Suffolk 1624 ?; †Bristol 4 II 1684), English poet and divine, educated at Cambridge. He wrote sacred poems and religious tracts. His style is lucid and fluent. J.J.Y.L.

The Young Mans Meditation; Sacred Poems (1664; repr. 1863). B.L.J.

Crotus Rubeanus (or RUBIANUS), Latin name of Johann Jäger (*Dornheim c. 1480; †1539 or later), German humanist, member of Mutian's circle at Erfurt and main author of the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum (q.v.).

G. Kampschulte, De J. Croto Rubiano (1862); C. Diesch, 'C. R.', in Altpreussische Biographie, I (1941). D.G.D.

Crowe, CATHERINE STEVENS (*Borough Green, Kent 1800; ∞1822 Lieutenant Stevens; †Edinburgh 1876), English amateur of supernatural horrors in Night Side of Nature (1848) and of such domestic horrors as murder and abduction in her ingenious novels.

Susan Hopley (1841); Lilly Dawson (3 vols, 1847); Spiritualism and the Age we live in (1859).
E. F. A. Sargeant, 'C. S. C.', in Women Novelists of Queen Victoria's Reign (1897). R.M.H.

Crowe, EYRE EVANS (*Redbridge, Southampton 20 III 1799; reared in Ireland; †London 25 II 1868), novelist; contributor to Blackwood's. Wrote novels and historical works of some merit.

Vittoria Colonna (1825); Charles Delmer (1853); History of France (1858–68). R.McH.

Crowe, SIR JOSEPH ARCHER (*London 20 X 1825; ∞1861 Asta von Barby; †Baden 6 IX 1896), English art historian and journalist, who, with Cavalcaselle, wrote art histories stimulating great interest by their new critical methods.

Early Flemish Painters (1856); New History of Painting in Italy (3 vols, 1864–68); History of Painting in North Italy (2 vols, 1871); Titian: Life and Times (2 vols, 1877); Reminiscences (1895). R.M.H.

Crul, CORNELIS (*c. 1500; †Antwerp c. 1550), Dutch merchant and poet in the Rederijker tradition. He wrote a number of didactical refrains, a Protestant prayer in the form of a ballad: Eenen gheestelycken AB, a satirical poem: Mondt toe Borsse toe, a clever and witty rendering of the adventures of an Antwerp rake: De cluchte van Heynken de Luyere, Cluchte van eenen Dronckaert and a translation of 4 of Erasmus' Colloquia.

C. Kruyskamp, Cornelis Crul, Heynken de Luyere en andere gedichten (1950). J.J.M.

Crusenstolpe, MAGNUS JACOB (*Jönköping 11 III 1795; †Stockholm 18 I 1865), Swedish journalist, historian, novelist, pamphleteer. He began as a liberal, then worked for Fäderneslandet as a royalist agent, changed sides again, was charged with high treason in 1838 and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. He vented his resentment in pamphlets and in so-called historical novels, which in their day enjoyed enormous popularity.

PAMPHLETS: Vidräkning och reform (1839); Röst ur ett svenskt statsfängelse (1839).—NOVELS: Morianen eller Holstein-Gottorpska huset i Sverige (6 vols, 1840–44); Carl Johan och Svenskarna (3 vols, 1845–46); Huset Tessin (5 vols, 1847–49).—HISTORICAL WORKS: Karakteristiker (1851); Historiska personligheter (2 vols, 1861–63).

A. Ahnfelt, M. J. C. (2 vols, 1880–81); R. G. Berg, Litteraturbilder (1912); T. Nerman, Crusenstolpes kravaller (1938). B.M.E.M.; A.H.J.K.

Cruz, AGOSTINHO DA (*Ponte da Barca 1540; †Setúbal 1619), Portuguese poet. A Franciscan monk, he lived for many years as a hermit in the Serra da Arrábida. Like his brother, Diogo Bernardes, he is a sensitive pastoral poet. Devotional subjects predominate in his extant verses, the poet having destroyed his more profane lyrics on entering the religious life.

Várias poesias (1771); Obras, ed. J. Mendes dos Remédios (1918).

H. Arantes, Frei A. da C. (1909); F. Ramos, 'A ascenção mística de Fr. A. da C.', in Ensaios de crítica literária (1933). T.P.W.

Cruz, SOR JUANA INÉS DE LA=Juana Inés de Asbaje y Ramírez de Cantillana (*nr Mexico City 1651; †ibid. 1695), Spanish poet and dramatist. After a precocious girlhood she became lady-in-waiting to the wife of the viceroy. She took the veil after the death of the man she loved. Two years before she died she sold her library and scientific instruments and gave the money to the poor.

Her poems are always ingenious and sometimes moving in the 17th-century manner, though much of her verse is occasional. She wrote an excellent auto sacramental (q.v.) and two comedies which are variations on Calderonian formulas. In prose she wrote an attack on Vieyra, a theological letter and several biographical documents. She is perhaps the last considerable Spanish poet in the Golden-Age tradition.

Inundación Castálida (1689); Segundo tomo de las obras (Seville, 1691); Fama y obras póstumas (1700).—M. Menéndez y Pelayo, Antología de poetas hispanoamericanos, I (1893); Bibl. Autores Esp., XLIX; Obras completas, ed. A. Méndez Plancarte (Mexico, 1951 ff).

A. Nervo, Juana de Asbaje (1910); E. A. Chávez, Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz. Su vida y su obra (1931); K. Vossler, Die Welt ein Traum (1941) and Escritores y poetas de España (1944). E.M.W.

Cruz Cano y Olmedilla, RAMÓN DE LA (*Madrid 1731; ∞Margarita Beatriz de Magán; †ibid. 1794), Spanish dramatist. Throughout his life he held a minor bureaucratic post, but was a protégé of the duke of Alba, and of the duchess of Benavente in whose house he lived and died. His reputation rests on his sainetes, short, humorous one-act plays portraying 18th-century Madrid lower- and middle-class people and manners. Derived from the entremeses and pasos of the 16th and 17th centuries, Cruz's sainetes have an artistic, documentary and human value second only to Goya's tapestries (e.g. La pradera de san Isidro, El fandango del candil, Manolo, La Petimetra). His great contribution to the evolution of the zarzuela (q.v.) was to substitute its mythological characters for popular types.

Sainetes, ed. E. Cotarelo in Nue. Bibl. Autores Esp., 23, 26; Pride's Fall, tr. W. Knapp Jones, Spanish One-Act Plays (1934).

E. Cotarelo, Don R. de la C. y sus obras: ensayo biográfico y bibliográfico (1899); A. Hamilton, A study of Spanish Manners, 1750–1800, from the Plays of R. de la C. (Illinois, 1926) and 'C.'s debt to Molière', in Hispania (1921). R.M.N.

Cruz e Silva, ANTÓNIO DINIS DA (*Lisbon 4 VII 1731; †Rio de Janeiro 5 X 1799), Portuguese poet. In 1756 he helped to found the Lisbon Arcádia Lusitana. He introduced the Pindaric ode into Portugal but is now chiefly remembered for his satirical poem O Híssope.

Odes pindáricas (1801); O Hyssope (London, 1802; tr. of Canto V by E. Prestage, 1916); Poesias (6 vols, 1807–17).—T. Braga, Arcádia Lusitana (1898). T.P.W.

Csezmiczey, JÁNOS, latinized JANUS PANNONIUS (*Csezmice 29 VIII 1434; †Medvevár 27 III 1472), Hungarian poet. The best-known Hungarian humanist poet, Janus was educated in Italy in the schools of Guarino and Galeotto, and returned to become bishop of Pécs. His verse, all Latin, consists of over 400 epigrams, 34 elegies and 5 panegyrics, and was written mainly in Italy.

Jani Pannonii poemata, ed. Teleki (2 vols, Utrecht, 1784).

J. Huszti, Janus Pannonius (1931). G.F.C.

Csokonai Vitéz, MIHÁLY (*Debrecen 17 XI 1773; †ibid. 28 I 1805), Hungarian poet and playwright. Despite his poverty-stricken, roving existence Csokonai wrote lively and graceful lyric verse, best seen in his Lilla (3 vols, 1805). His comic epic Dorottya (1804) is reminiscent of Pope's Rape of the Lock. Using a mixture of styles, he anticipated Petőfi in his use of everyday language.

VERSE: Alkalmatosságra írt versek (1805); Odák (2 vols, 1805).—PLAYS: Tempefői (1793); Gerson du Malheureux (1795).—Csokonai Vitéz Mihály összes művei, ed. Harsányi and Gulyás (3 vols, 1922).

Z. Ferenczi, Cs.V.M. (1907); J. Horváth, A magyar irodalmi népiesség Faluditól Petőfiig (1927). G.F.C.

Ctesias (fl. c. 400 B.C.), Greek historian. Native of Cnidus, court physician to Artaxerxes of Persia. Author of works on Assyrian and Persian history, and on India—a jumble of sober fact and wild invention.

C. Müller, 'Ctesiae Cnidii fragmenta', in F. Dübner, Herodoti Historiae (1862); R. Henry, Ctésias, La Perse, l'Inde (Les sommaires de Photius) (1947).

J. W. McCrindle, Ancient India as described by C. (1882); J. Gilmore, The Fragments of the Persica of C. (1888); W. Reese, Die griech. Nachrichten über Indien (1914). R.B.

Cubillo de Aragón, ÁLVARO (*Granada 1596 ?; †Madrid 1661), Spanish dramatist. He lived in Granada, Seville and Madrid, where he became notary to the city corporation. His plays owe much to other dramatists, especially Calderón, but his two best-known comedies have an original refinement and charm.

El enano de las Musas (1654); Bibl. Autores Esp., XLVII; Las muñecas de Marcela, y El señor de Noches Buenas, ed. A. Valbuena Prat (1928). E.M.W.

Čubranović, ANDRIJA (*1480; †Ragusa 1520), Dalmatian poet. Little is known of his life except that he was a goldsmith by trade. Apart from one or two love lyrics, his only extant work is a poem in six cantos in the form of fortune-telling and advice addressed at carnival time by a gypsy-woman to six different ladies. The last canto, consisting of a half-serious, half-satirical declaration of love on behalf of a bashful suitor is especially admirable, and the whole work is one of the most entertaining and original in early Ragusan literature.

Pokladna pesma Jedjupka (1599). S.C.

Cudworth, RALPH (*Aller, Somerset 1617; †Cambridge 26 VI 1688), English divine, preacher and philosopher, a fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1639) who tutored Sir William Temple. A leading Cambridge platonist, Cudworth is renowned for his The True Intellectual System of the Universe (1678) and a sermon to the Commons (31 Mar. 1647) denouncing Puritan magnification of dogmatic differences. B.L.J.

A Treatise concerning Eternal and Immutable Morality, ed. E. Chandler (1731), J. Harrison (3 vols, 1845).

C. E. Lowrey, The Philosophy of C. (1884); F. J. Powicke, The Cambridge Platonists (1926); W. C. De Pauley, The Candle of the Lord (1937). J.R.B.

Cueva, JUAN DE LA (*Seville 1550 ?; †ibid. 1610 ?), Spanish poet and dramatist. He was in Mexico 1574–77; the rest of his life was spent in Seville, where he devoted himself to literature. His 14 surviving plays were acted 1579–81, published 1588. The tragedies are full of horrors; the comedy El infamador looks forward to Lope de Vega. Three plays are based on Spanish legend; ballads are imitated or incorporated into them. His verse treatise on poetics was written in 1609. His lyrics vary in merit; his long poems have few readers today. The latter include an epic about the conquest of Andalusia.

Obras (1582); Coro febeo de romances historiales (1588); Comedias y tragedias (1588), ed. F. A. de Icaza (1917); La conquista de la Bética (1603, 1795); F.-A. Wulff, Poèmes inédits de J. de la C. (Lund, 1886–87); E. Walberg, J. de la C. et son Exemplar poético (Lund, 1904); El infamador, Los siete Infantes de Lara y el Ejemplar poético, ed. F. A. de Icaza (1924).

F. A. de Icaza, Sucesos reales que parecen imaginados (1919); J. P. Wickersham Crawford, Spanish Drama before Lope de Vega (1937). E.M.W.

Cumberland, RICHARD (*Cambridge 19 II 1732; ∞1759 Elizabeth Ridge; †Tunbridge Wells 7 V 1811), English playwright who turned his hand to comedy, farce and tragedy, to pamphlet-, essay- and novel-writing and translation. Many of his comedies were played with great success. Sheridan caricatured him as Sir Fretful Plagiary in The Critic.

The Brothers (1769); The West Indian (1771); Memoirs of R. C. (written by himself, 2 vols, 1807); six plays in Mrs Inchbald's Modern Theatre (1811).

T. Davies, Life of Garrick (2 vols, 1780); S. Williams, R. C., his life and dramatic works (1917). R.M.H.

Cunha, EUCLIDES DA (*Santa Rita do Rio Negro 20 I 1866; †1909), author of Os Sertões (1902), the most famous book of Brazilian literature. It is at once descriptive and a chronicle; it presents the hinterland of northern Brazil, a forgotten scrubland; it chronicles the campaign (1896–97) of the republican authority against Antonio Conselheiro and his followers, a strange example of individual and mass religious deviation. Out of this unpromising material da Cunha created by sheer force of style a masterpiece acclaimed both at home and in Portugal. In purpose it is not unlike Sarmiento's Facundo and greatly surpasses it in artistry.

R. B. Cunninghame Graham, A Brazilian Mystic (1920). E.Sa.

Cunha, JOSÉ ANASTÁCIO DA (*Lisbon 1744; †1 I 1787), Portuguese poet. He became a professor of mathematics at Coimbra. Strongly influenced by contemporary English writers, the impassioned, vehement tone of many of his poems marks the advent of Portuguese romanticism.

Composições poéticas (1839).

H. Cidade, A obra poética do Dr J. A. da C. (1930). T.P.W.

Cunningham, ALLAN (*Keir 7 XII 1784; ∞1811 Jean Walker; †London 30 X 1842), Scottish man of letters. Apprenticed to a stone-mason as a boy, Cunningham devoted his leisure to literature. Befriended by Hogg and Scott, he contributed in prose and verse to Cromek's sham Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song (1810) and became a leading contributor to the London Magazine. His songs, modelled on Burns, are popular still; and his work on Burns, particularly in biography, was an important contribution to scholarship.

Traditional Tales of the English and Scottish Peasantry (2 vols, 1822); The Songs of Scotland, Ancient and Modern (4 vols, 1825); Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects (6 vols, 1829–33); The Maid of Elvar (1833); The Works of Burns (8 vols, 1834); The Life and Correspondence of Burns (1836); The Life of Sir David Wilkie (3 vols, 1843).

D. Hogg, The Life of A. C. (1875). J.K.

Cuoco, VINCENZO (*Civitacampomarano 1770; †Naples 1823), Italian historian. Exiled from Naples on the return of the Bourbons in 1800, he lived for a time in Milan, where he published his Saggio storico sulla rivoluzione napoletana del 1799 (1801). In Platone in Italia (1804–06) he affects to have discovered an ancient Greek MS. recording the travels of Plato in Italy, seeking thus to rouse Italians to a sense of shame at their present servitude by reminding them of their past glories. He publicized the works of Vico.

Opere, ed. F. Niccolini and N. Cortese (5 vols, 1924).

F. Battaglia, L'Opera di V. C. e la formazione dello spirito nazionale in Italia (1925); M. Ruffini, V. C. (1936). B.R.

Curtis, GEORGE WILLIAM (*Providence, R.I. 24 II 1824; ∞1856 Anna Shaw; †Staten Island, N.Y. 31 VIII 1892), American essayist, editor. Travel abroad initiated his first books; Potiphar Papers (1853) satirizes New York social life. As editor of Harper's Weekly (1863–92), he strenuously supported social reforms.

Nile Notes of a Howadji (1851); The Howadji in Syria (1852); Lotus-Eating (1852).

E. Cary, G. W. C. (1894). H.L.C.

Curtius Rufus, QUINTUS (fl. 1st century A.D.), Roman historian, wrote in the reign of Claudius a history of Alexander the Great in ten books, of which 1, 2 and parts of others are lost. The treatment is rhetorical and anecdotal and shows no power of historical criticism. Curtius was long a standard schoolbook.

G. Hedicke (ed. min. 1931); P. Damsté (1897); Fr. tr. by Crépin (1932).

S. Dosson, Étude sur Quinte-Curce (1897); F. Helmreich, Die Reden bei Curtius (1927); G. Radet, 'La valeur historique de Quinte Curce', in Comptes rendus (1924). J.A.W.

Cynddelw Brydydd Mawr, Cynddelw the Great (fl. c. 1155–1200), the greatest of the court poets of medieval Wales. Most of his eulogies and elegies are addressed to the princes of Powys, but he also sang the praises of some of the greatest princes of Gwynedd and Deheubarth and composed religious poems, flyting poems and a poem expressing his devotion to Eva, daughter of the prince of Powys. The austere grandeur and compression of his art is matched by the stark realism of his references to the carnage he had witnessed.

The Black Book of Carmarthen, ed. J. G. Evans (1907); Llawysgrif Hendregadredd, ed. Morris-Jones and Parry-Williams (1933); The Poetry of the Red Book of Hergest, ed. J. G. Evans (1911); Poetry by Medieval Welsh Bards, II, ed. J. G. Evans (1926); The Myvyrian Archaiology of Wales (2nd ed. 1870).

D. M. Lloyd, 'Barddoniaeth C. B. M.', in Y Llenor, XI (1932), XIII (1934); J. Vendryes, 'Trois Poèmes de C.', in Études Celtiques, IV (1948). B.Re.

Cynewulf (fl. 9th century?), Anglo-Saxon poet. Nothing is known of his life. Early scholars attributed to him much of the Anglo-Saxon poetry that is extant, but only four poems—Elene, Juliana, The Ascension (Christ II) and Fates of the Apostles, each of which has a runic 'signature' interweaved in the verse—are certainly his.

The Ascension and Juliana, in The Exeter Book, ed. G. P. Krapp and E. V. K. Dobbie (1936); Fates of the Apostles and Elene, in The Vercelli Book, ed. G. P. Krapp (1932).

K. Sisam, 'C. and his Poetry', in Proc. Br. Acad., XVIII (1932); C. Schaar, Critical Studies in the C. Group (Lund, 1949). For an up-to-date biblio. see G. K. Anderson, The Literature of the Anglo-Saxons (1949). R.W.B.

Cyprian, Caecilius Cyprianus (*Carthage? c. 200; ∼c. 246; martyred 258), ecclesiastical writer. He became bishop of Carthage in 248 or 249, whence he was driven by the Decian persecution in 251. The treatment of backsliders in this persecution gave rise to much controversy in which Cyprian took a vigorous part. His works are almost entirely on theology and church discipline, while his letters are of particular value for ecclesiastical history. His style is less harsh than that of Tertullian, whom he esteemed highly, but lacks his force. Cyprian was one of the most influential of the Fathers in the middle ages and the reformation.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 3–4; best ed. W. Hartel (3 vols, 1868–71); Letters, tr. H. Cary (1844).

O. Ritschl, C. von Carthago und die Verfassung der Kirche (1885); E. Freppel, St Cyprien et l'Église d'Afrique (3rd ed. 1890); E. W. Benson, C., His Life, his Times, his Work (1897); H. v. Soden, Das Lateinische Neue Testament in Afrika (1909). J.A.W.

Cyrano de Bergerac, Savinien (*Paris 6 III 1619; †ibid. 28 VII 1655), French writer. He led an impecunious, vagabond life, but bore little other resemblance to the hero of E. Rostand's romantic play. His half-satirical 'journeys' to the sun and moon are full of fantastic inventions and boldly irreligious opinions which make of him a baroque Swift. His comedy, Le Pédant joué (1654), furnished Molière with two scenes for Les Fourberies de Scapin. (Que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère?)

La Mort d'Agrippine (tragedy, acted 1653); L'Autre Monde ou Les Etats et Empires de la Lune (1657) and Les Etats et Empires du Soleil (1662), ed. F. Lachèvre as Œuvres libertines de C. de B. (2 vols, 1921).

P. A. Brun, S. de C. de B., l'histoire et la légende (1909). G.B.

Cyril, Saint, Constantine the Philosopher (*Salonika 826 or 827; †Rome 14 II 869), was sent (together with his brother Methodius) by the East Roman emperor, Michael III, in 863 to preach the gospel in the vernacular to the Slavs of the Moravian empire. He devised a Slavonic alphabet (probably that now called Glagolitic) and the brothers translated parts of the gospels and certain liturgical texts into a form of Macedonian Slavonic. This (Old) Church Slavonic language was the vehicle of the earliest literature of the eastern and southern Slavs.

P. A. Lavrov, Materialy po istorii voznikhoveniya drevneyshey slavyanskoy pis'mennosti (Leningrad, 1930); F. Pastrnek, Dějiny slovanských apoštolů Cyrila a Methoda (Prague, 1902); V. Jagić, Entstehungsgeschichte der kirchenslavischen Sprache (1913); F. Dvorník, Les légendes de Constantin et de Méthode vues de Byzance (Prague, 1933). R.A.

Cyril, Bishop of Turov (fl. c. 1150), Russian preacher and religious writer. His elaborate sermons, as well as the 22 prayers ascribed to him, abound in poetic beauties and lyrical passages.

K. Kalaydovich, Pamyatniki ross. slovesnosti, XII (1821). J.L.

Cyril of Alexandria (†27 VI 444), Greek ecclesiastical writer. Nephew and successor of Theophilus (Patriarch of Alexandria, 385–412), he was involved in bitter polemics with the Nestorians. Author of many exegetical and dogmatic works, letters and a reply to the emperor Julian's treatise 'Against the Christians'. His works, though marred by fanaticism and carelessness of literary form, were important in the history of orthodox dogma.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 68–77; P. E. Pusey, ed. Cyrilli in XII prophetas (2 vols, 1868), Cyrilli in D. Ioannis Evangelium (3 vols, 1872), Epistulae tres oecumenicae, libri quinque contra Nestorium, XII capitum explanatio, XII capitum defensio utraque, scholia de incarnatione Unigeniti (1875), De recta fide ad imperatorem, de incarnatione Unigeniti dialogus, de recta fide ad principissas, de recta fide ad Augustus, quod unus Christus dialogus apologeticus ad imperatorem (1877); J. B. Chabot, Corpus Script. Christ. Orient., Script. Syri, ser. IV, vol. I (1912); C. of A.'s Commentary on St John's Gospel, tr. H. P. Liddon (2 vols, 1874–85); E. B. P(usey), Select Works of C. of A. (1881); R. P. Smith, C. of A. commentary on the Gospel according to St Luke (1859).

J. N. Hebensperger, Die Denkwelt des heiligen C. v. A. (1927); J. van der Dries, The Formula of St C. of A. (1939); H. Manoir de Juyae, Dogme et spiritualité de Saint C. d'A. (1944). R.B.

Cyril of Jerusalem (c.* 313; †386), Greek ecclesiastical writer. Consecrated bishop of Jerusalem in 348, twice deposed by Arian synods and exiled for eleven years by the Arian emperor Valens. Author of 24 homilies to catechumens on Christian doctrine which, vivid and simple in style, throw much light on the development of Christian dogma in the 4th century.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 33; W. K. Reischl and J. Rupp, Cyrilli Opera (2 vols, 1848–60); R. M. Woolley, The Catecheses of St C. of J. (1930; Eng. tr.).

G. Delacroix, S. C. de J. (1865); J. Mader, Der heilige C. (1891); B. Niederberger, Die Logoslehre des heiligen C. (1923). R.B.

Cyril of Scythopolis (fl. 6th century), Greek hagiographer who spent most of his life in Palestinian monasteries. His most important works are detailed biographies of St Euthymius (†473) and St Sabas (†531). They were later translated into Slavonic and influenced early Russian hagiography.

Vitae, ed. E. Schwartz (1939); E. Stein, 'Cyrille de Scythopolis', in Analecta Bollandiana, 62 (1944). J.M.H.

Czajkowski, Michał (*Hałczyniec 1804; †suicide, Borki 4 I 1886), Polish novelist. After the 1831 rising he emigrated to France. In 1853 he became a Moslem and in 1870 when back in Russia joined the Orthodox church. His various historical novels though lacking in psychological analysis are colourful; but he overidealizes his Cossacks and the Ukraine.

Powieści Kozackie (1837; Contes Kosaks, tr. W. M(ickiewicz), 1857); Wernyhora (Paris, 1838; Ger. tr. G. Diezel, 2 vols, 1842); Kirdżali (1839; Kirdgeali, Fr. tr., 2 vols, 1839); Stefan Czarniecki (1840); Hetman Ukrainy (2 vols, Berlin, 1841; Der Kosakenhetman, tr. J. P. Jordan, 1843).—Pisma (12 vols, Leipzig, 1862–85).

F. Rawita Gawroński, M. C. (Sadyk-Pasza) (1900); A. Lewak, 'M. C.', in Pol. Słown. Biogr., IV (1938). S.S.

Czartoryski, Adam Jerzy, Prince (*Warsaw 14 I 1770; †Montfermeil 15 VII 1861), Polish statesman, poet and writer. From 1795 to 1806 he was at St Petersburg as a hostage. In his Ossianic poem he describes the desolation of Poland, though maintaining his faith in her messianic role.

Verse: Bard polski (Paris, 1840; crit. ed. J. Kallenbach, 1908).—Various: Mémoires et correspondance avec l'empereur Alexandre I (2 vols, 1887; Eng. tr. A. Gielgud, 2 vols, 1888).

B. Zaleski, Żywot księcia A. J. C. (1881); W. Włoch, Polska elegia patriotyczna w epoce rozbiorów (1916); M. Kukiel, Książę Adam (Paris, 1950). S.S.

Czepko von Reigersfeld, Daniel (*Koschwitz 23 IX 1605; †Schweidnitz VIII 1660), German poet. A Lutheran, he became an official at the court of Brieg, later in imperial service at Ohlau, and was raised to the nobility in 1656. He was a man of wide knowledge, much influenced by the works of Jacob Böhme and the medieval mystics, especially in his Sexcenta monodisticha sapientum (1640–47), which were imitated by Angelus Silesius in his Cherubinischer Wandersmann. Only a few minor works were printed in his lifetime, though some had circulated in manuscript.

Geistliche Schriften, ed. W. Milch (1930); Weltliche Dichtungen, ed. W. Milch (1932).

W. Milch, D. v. C. (1934). L.W.F.

Daalberg, Bruno, pseud. of Petrus de Wakker van Zon (*Amsterdam 9 VIII 1758; †The Hague 8 XII 1818), Dutch novelist and essayist. His work is tiresome owing to its continuous banter, but fascinates as an image of the time.

Novels: Willem Hups (1805); Steenbergsche familie (4 vols, 1806–09); Jan Perfect (1817).—Essays: Nog wat lectuur . . . (1806–07).

J. Koopmans, in De Beweging, VII (1911). J.W.W.

Dabīr (*1803; †1875), like Anīs one of the foremost writers of Urdu elegies at the court of Oudh. H.G.R.

Dach, Simon (*Memel 29 VII 1605; †Königsberg 15 IV 1659), German poet. He became a teacher at the cathedral school at Königsberg in 1633 and later professor of poetry at the university. He was the principal poet of the 'Königsberg circle', with Robert Robertin and Heinrich Albert. His health was weak throughout his life and he finally died of consumption. The Great Elector gave him a small estate in 1658. His attractive but melancholic character expresses itself in straightforward and sincere poetry (e.g. 'Der Mensch hat nichts so eigen'); some of his hymns have found a place in English hymnals. Much of his work consisted of occasional poetry written to order; his more successful verses often represent the tradition of the 16th-century Gesellschaftslied in the new style and the new poetic forms introduced by Opitz.

Poetische Werke (1696); Gedichte, ed. W. Ziesemer (4 vols, 1936–39; standard edition, based largely on MS. material).

W. Ziesemer, 'Simon Dach', in Altpreuss. Biographie, I (1941); Oesterley's biog. in his ed. of the Gedichte (1876) is still useful; E. Trunz, Deutsche Literaturzeitung (1939, p. 154 ff.); J. Julian, Dictionary of Hymnology (1892).
L.W.F.

Da Costa, Isaac (*Amsterdam 14 I 1798; ∞1821 Hanna Belmonte; †ibid. 28 IV 1860), Dutch poet, historian and religious leader. Hailing from a devout Portuguese Jewish family, he became at an early age a pupil of Bilderdijk and a friend of W. de Clercq. He studied at Amsterdam and Leiden and was converted to Christianity in 1822. His spiritual kinship to Bilderdijk—already evident in his early poetry—became even more conspicuous in a spectacular anti-liberal pamphlet, Bezwaren tegen den Geest der eeuw (1823). Years of struggle and disparagement followed. His religious leadership in the Réveil and great political 'songs of the times' gradually won for him more general recognition and appreciation.

Verse: Poëzy (2 vols, 1821–22); Hagar (1852); Politieke Poëzy (1854); Hesperiden (1855). Kompleete Dichtwerken, ed. J. P. Hasebroek (3 vols, 1861–62).—Prose: Voorlezingen over de verscheidenheid en overeenstemming der vier evangeliën . . . (2 vols, 1840–41), The four witnesses being a harmony of the Gospels on a new principle, tr. David Scott (1851); Israël en de volken (1848–49), Israel and the Gentiles, tr. Mrs W. Kennedy (1850).

E. J. Potgieter, 'Hollandsche politieke poëzy', in Kritische Studiën, II and 'Herinneringen en mijmeringen', in Studiën en Schetsen, I; C. Busken Huet, 'I. d. C.', in Litterarische Fant. en Krit., I and XIV; A. Pierson, Oudere Tijdgenoten (1888); W. G. C. Byvanck, De jeugd van I. d. C. (2 vols, 1894); J. Meyer, I. de C.'s weg naar het Christendom (1941).
J.W.W.

Daems, Servaas (*Noorderwijk 4 VI 1838; †Tongerlo 30 VII 1903), Flemish poet and playwright, wrote simple and neat, devout as well as witty poems, Dit sijn suverlike liedekens (1878), Gedichten (1878), Luit en Fluit (1884); a play about St Dimphna, remarkable for his time, Sinte Dimphna's Marteldood (1874), and a humorous little book De Kruiwagens (1869, under pseud. Peeter Klein).

Voor twee vaders (1868, Fr., Ger., Eng. and Czech trs).

R. Sterkens, S. D. en zijn letterkundige Werken (1935).
R.F.L.

Dafydd ab Edmwnd (fl. c. 1450–80), Welsh poet. A native of Hanmer, Flintshire, he belonged to the landed gentry. He won the chair at the Carmarthen Eisteddfod (c. 1450) for poetic composition and for an authoritative definition of the bardic metres, which has never been superseded. The greater part of his verse consists of love-poems, almost all of which are in the cywydd metre, but he was also the author of eulogies, elegies, poems soliciting gifts and religious poems. He is renowned for his metrical ingenuities, his metaphors and similes and the limpid musical quality of his lines.

Gwaith D. ab E., ed. T. Roberts (1914).
B.Re.

Dafydd ap Gwilym (*Brogynin, Cardiganshire, fl. 1340–70), Welsh poet, sprung from a powerful family whose original home was in north Pembrokeshire, and whose members had held various important offices under the crown for several generations before Dafydd's time. The bulk of his works consists of love and nature poems and is notable for the fertility of imaginative invention and extraordinary sensitiveness displayed. He developed and perfected the new cywydd metre and showed a remarkable mastery of the resources of the Welsh language and of the intricate metrical requirements of the age. He was unique among his contemporaries in Wales, and his nature poetry is unsurpassed in the whole range of medieval European literature.

W. Owen and O. Jones, Barddoniaeth D. ab G. (1789); I. Williams, D. ap G. a'i Gyfoeswyr (1935); H. I. and D. Bell, D. ap G., Fifty Poems (1942); T. Parry, Gwaith D. ap G. (1952); T. M. Chotzen, Recherches sur la Poésie de D. ab G. (1928).
T.P.

Dafydd Nanmor (fl. c. 1450–80), Welsh poet. He was a native of Nanmor, Merionethshire, but left Gwynedd for S.W. Wales. Most of his eulogies and elegies are addressed to gentlefolk of the latter region, particularly to Rhys ap Maredudd, of Tywyn near the mouth of the Teivi, and his descendants. He also sang the praises of Edmund, Jasper and Henry Tudor. The remainder of his work consists of love-poems and a few miscellaneous pieces. Perfection of form and calm lucidity of style characterize his work, while his praise-poems show that he not only appreciated the sensuous delights of civilized living but also realized the true significance of a traditional aristocracy.

The Poetical Works of D. N., ed. T. Roberts and I. Williams (1923).
Saunders Lewis, 'D. N.', in Y Llenor, 4 (1925). B.Re.

Dahl, VLADIMIR IVANOVICH, also wrote under pseud. KAZAK LUGANSKY (*10 XI 1801; †22 IX 1872), an early pioneer of the realistic ethnographic school in Russia. His best work was, however, his Tolkovy slovar' zhivogo velikorusskogo yazyka (dictionary of the Great-Russian language, 4 vols, 1861–68; rev. B. de Courtenay, 1903–14). His complete works, in 10 vols, were pub. in 1897–98.

A. N. Pypin, Istoriya russkoy etnografii, I (1890); S. Vengerov, Istochniki slovarya russkikh pisateley, II (1910). J.L.

Dahlgren, FREDRIK AUGUST (*Värmland 20 IX 1816; †Djursholm 16 II 1895), Swedish philologist. In literature Dahlgren is best known for his fresh and unmannered songs in Värmland dialect. He translated a number of classical dramas (Calderón, Shakespeare, Lessing) and wrote one still popular musical play, Wermlänningarne (1846; music by A. A. Randel).

Viser på varmlandske tongmåle, deckta åttå Fredrek på Rannsätt (1875); Speller nye viser (1876); Siste viser (pub. 1897).
G. Fröding, 'Fredrek på Rannsätt', in Samlade skrifter, IX (1922); L. Dahlgren, Ransäter (5th ed. 1923). C.H.K.

Dahlstierna, GUNNO (*Dalsland 7 IX 1661; †Pomerania 1709), Swedish poet and foremost Swedish exponent of Marinism. His florid style is particularly noticeable in the long and patriotic threnody (1698) intended for Charles XI's funeral. His allegorical epic, Giöta kiämpa-wisa om kåningen å herr Pädar (c. 1701), a mixture of folk-song and biblical images, presaged the Swedish political saga. His other verse includes the song of Charles XII's feats in Saxony (Swea lands frijds-frögd i Saxen, 1707).

Svenska författare, ed. Sv. vitterhetssamfundet, VII (1920–28).
M. Lamm, G. D. Minnesteckning (1946). C.H.K.

Dahn, FELIX (*Hamburg 9 II 1834; †Breslau 3 I 1912), German novelist and professor of law. Best known as author of 'donnish novels', i.e. material of academic research presented in the style of Sue. Of his enormous output only Ein Kampf um Rom (4 vols, 1876) has stood the test of time.

Sämtliche Werke poetischen Inhalts (21 vols, 1899).
H. Meyer, F. D. (1913); T. Siebs, F. D. und J. Scheffel (1914). R.W.L.

Daini NO SAMMI, pseud. of FUJIWARA NO KATAKO (*1000; †c. 1050), Japanese poet, like her mother, Murasaki Shikibu. She was traditionally believed to have written Sagoromo monogatari, a novel imitating the style of Murasaki's Genji monogatari. E.B.C.

D'Alcamo, CIELO (fl. 1st half of 13th century), the reputed author of a famous contrasto, or verse-dialogue between a lover and a lady, the Rosa fresca aulentissima: the lover urging her to consent to his desire, she resisting him but eventually yielding. Written between 1231 and 1250, the poem has 32 stanzas, each of three monorhymed alexandrines and an endecasyllabic couplet. Its vivacity and its curious blend of the courtly and the plebeian have won it a good deal of attention from scholars. Its author was probably a Sicilian, with a knowledge of the French and Provençal lyric.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia italiana dei primi ecoli (1912).
A. D'Ancona, Studi della lett. ital. dei primi secoli (1884); F. D'Ovidio, Versificazione ital. e arte poetica medievale (1910); articles by G. Bertoni, F. A. Ugolini and W. T. Elwert in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 75, 105 and 125; and by A. Monteverdi in Studi medievali, 16 (1943–50); F. Torraca, Studi sulla lirica ital. del Duecento (1902). K.F.

Dale, JAN VAN DEN (*Diest c. 1460; †Brussels 1522), Dutch painter and poet in the Rederijker tradition, from 1517 town-poet of Brussels, factor of the Chamber 'De Mariacrans'. His plays, now lost, were much appreciated in his time. A number of refrains and two long poems are extant: De Stove, a free adaptation from Erasmus's Uxor mempsigamos and Die Wre vander Doot, which was reprinted 20 times and translated into French.

G. Degroote, J. v. d. D., gekende werken

(1944); Revue Belge de phil. et d'hist., XXV (1947), XXVI (1948); J. Borms, in Den Gulden Passer, XXVI (1948). J.J.M.

Daley, Victor James William Patrick (*Navan, Ireland, 5 IX 1858; †Sydney 29 XII 1905), Australian poet. He emigrated in 1878. His easy, musical poetry tends to revert to his Celtic origins and reveals little of his lifelong precarious circumstances or of local things.

At Dawn and Dusk (1898, and other eds); Wine and Roses (1911). F.T.M.

Dalfin d'Alvernha, French Dauphin d'Auvergne (c. 1167–1235), Provençal troubadour of the noble house of Albon. Doubts have recently been raised whether his Christian name was Robert: Dalfin would then be his name, not his title. Contemporaries praise him as the ideal nobleman: brilliant, bounteous, a wit and poet, a wise judge in matters of love and honour. We know of connexions with Guiraut de Bornelh, Raimbaut de Vaueiras, Peirol—but particularly with his overlord, Richard Lionheart, in his opposition to the king of France. His main claim to recognition are his tensos and coblas.

S. Stronski, 'Recherches historiques sur quelques protecteurs de troubadours', in Annales du Midi, 18 (1906). R.R.B.

'Dalimil'. The ascription of the earliest Czech vernacular rhymed chronicle to a certain Dalimil of Meziříčí was a 17th-century error. This work chronicles the history of the Czechs from mythological origins to 1314 and is marked by an intensity of national pride and an anti-German tone unusual in the early 14th century.

Ed. J. Jireček, in Fontes rerum bohemicarum, III (1877, together with the Middle High German adaptation); V. E. Mourek (2nd ed., 1910, diplomatic repr. of the Cambridge MS.).
J. V. Šimák, 'Kdo skládal kroniku t. ř. Dalimila?', in Český časopis historický (1932); J. B. Čapek, 'Dalimilův "hlahol jasný"', in Záření ducha a slova (1948). R.A.

Dalin, Olof von (*Halland 29 VIII 1708; †Drottningholm 12 VIII 1763), Swedish historian and writer. Dalin is reckoned Sweden's first modern author by virtue of his Then Svänska Argus, a satirical and moralizing weekly (Dec. 1732 to Dec. 1734), modelled on Addison and Steele's Tatler and Spectator and van Effen's Le Misanthrope. Dalin did much to introduce the then popular French classical style into Sweden with witty satires, plays and allegorical epic, together with much occasional poetry in elegant rococo style, and a patriotic threnody over queen Ulrika Eleonora, modelled on Voltaire's La Henriade. As an historian he is unreliable but entertaining. He was commissioned in 1743 to write a history of Sweden, but only completed three sections. With all its shortcomings it embodied the first attempt there had been since Olaus Petri to write a national history in Swedish.

Prose: Witterhetsarbeten i bunden och obunden skrifart (6 vols, 1767); Then svänska Argus (new ed., 3 vols, pub. Sv. vitterhetssamfundet, 1910–19).—Verse: Poetiska arbeten (2 vols, 1782–83).
K. Warberg, O. v. D. (1884); M. Lamm, O. v. D. (1908). C.H.K.

Dalling and Bulwer, William Henry Lytton, Lord (*London 13 II 1801; †Naples 23 V 1872), English diplomat and author of some biographical studies and historical works.

An Autumn in Greece (1826); Life of Lord Byron (1835); Historical Characters (1867–70); Life of Palmerston (3 vols, 1870–74).
E. B. F. D'Auvergne, Envoys Extraordinary (1937). R.M.H.

Dall'Ongaro, Francesco (*Oderzo 19 VI 1808; †Naples 10 I 1873), Italian patriot, dramatist and poet. In 1848 he took part in the revolutionary movement in Venice and fought with Garibaldi in Rome. His patriotic poems (Stornelli italiani) had a great appeal for Italian patriots, especially 'Il Brigidino' (1847), which Garibaldi is said to have known by heart; 'La donna lombarda' (1848) which ends:—

'Macchia d'onore per lavar non langue
Se non si lava nel tedesco sangue!'

is a characteristic example.

His first volume of poetry, Poesie (1840), is an attempt to provide Italians with patriotic and national songs. Fantasie drammatiche e liriche (1866) contains several dialogues. His best known drama is Il Fornaretto, based on a tragic episode in Venetian history (first prod. 1855; pub. 1861).

Opere scelte (3 vols, 1846–47); Stornelli, poemetti ed altre poesie, ed. N. Schileo (1913).
P. Valussi, F. D. (1875); M. Trabaudi Foscarini, F. D. (1925). B.R.

Dalton, John (*Eaglesfield 6 IX 1766; †Manchester 27 VII 1844), English chemist, natural philosopher and sometime Quaker schoolmaster.

Meteorological Observations and Essays (1793); Constitution of Mixed Gases (1801); A New System of Chemical Philosophy (1808); Memoirs (1856).
W. C. Henry, Life and Scientific Researches of D. (1854); H. E. Roscoe, D. and the Rise of Modern Chemistry (1895); L. J. N. Polley, D. (1920). R.M.H.

D'Ambra, FRANCESCO (*Florence 29 VII 1499; †Rome 1558), Italian playwright. His three classical comedies, Il Furto in prose (acted 1544), I Bernardi and La Cofanaria in verse (acted 1547 and 1565), are notable for the skilful organization of complicated plots.

Teatro Comico Fiorentino, V (1750, for comedies).
I. Sanesi, La Commedia, I (1911, with biblio.). C.Dr.

Dana, RICHARD HENRY (*Cambridge, Mass. 15 XI 1787; ∞1813 Ruth Smith; †Boston 2 II 1879), American poet and essayist. Austere Harvard-educated editor of North American Review, he championed English romanticism and wrote poetry influenced by Crabbe, Wordsworth and Coleridge.

The Buccaneer and Other Poems (1827); Poems and Prose Writings (1833). H.L.C.

Dana, RICHARD HENRY (*Cambridge, Mass. 1 VIII 1815; ∞1841 Sarah Watson; †Rome 6 I 1882), American author and lawyer. His Two Years Before the Mast (1840), which tells of his voyage around Cape Horn to California, precedes Melville's Moby Dick. He also wrote a manual for seamen.

The Seaman's Friend (1841); To Cuba and Back (1859).
J. S. Johnson, On D. and Two Years Before the Mast (1936); C. F. Adams, D., A Biography (2 vols, 1890). H.L.C.

Dancer, JOHN (fl. 1675), translator and dramatist, who lived for some time in Dublin. He is often confused with John Dauncy or Dauncey (fl. 1663), also a translator. Dancer's two dramatic translations, in rhyming couplets—Nicomede (1671, from Corneille) and Agrippa (1675, from Quinault)—were produced at the Theatre Royal, Dublin.

Aminta (1660, from Tasso); Judgment on Alexander and Cæsar (1672, from Saint-Evremond); The Comparison af Plato and Aristotle (1673, from R. Rapin).

Dancourt, FLORENT CARTON (*Fontainebleau 1 XI 1661; ∞1680 Thérèse Le Noir; †Courcelles-le-Roi, Loiret 7 XII 1725), French dramatist. He married the daughter of the actor La Thorillière, became an actor himself and joined the Comédie Française with his wife in 1685. His light-hearted and mildly satirical social comedies, many of them in one act, made him, with Regnard, Molière's chief successor, though on an altogether lower level.

Le Chevalier à la mode (1687); La Maison de campagne (1688); Les Bourgeoises à la mode (1693); Les Bourgeoises de qualité (1700); Le Diable boiteux (1707); Madame Artus (1708).—Œuvres (12 vols, 1760); Théâtre choisi, ed. F. Sarcey (5 vols, 1884).
C. Barthélemy, La Comédie de D. (1882); J. Lemaître, La Comédie après Molière et le théâtre de D. (2nd ed. 1903); H. C. Lancaster, A History of French Dramatic Literature in the 17th Century, IV (1940). G.B.

Dandin (c. 7th century A.D.), Sanskrit author of the picaresque novel Dasukumāracharita (tr. A. W. Ryder under the title of The Adventures of the Ten Princes, 1927). The drama Mricchakatika ('The Clay Cart') is sometimes attributed to him. H.G.R.

Daniel, Russian 12th-century abbot, author of an account of his pilgrimage to Jerusalem made 1106–07, interspersed with legendary and apocryphal matter. His language is simple and naïve, imbued with the spirit of sincere piety.

Zhitie i khozhenie Daniila (1885; The Pilgrimage of the Russian Abbot Daniel in the Holy Land, annot. by Sir C. Wilson, 1897).
D. V. Venevitinov, Litsevoy spisok khozhdeniya Daniila Palomnika (1881). J.L.

Daniel, GEORGE (*Beswick 29 III 1616; ∞Elizabeth Ireland; †ibid. IX 1657), English cavalier poet who let his beard grow untrimmed after the death of Charles I. In A Vindication of Poesie Daniel praises Jonson rather than Shakespeare.

Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (1878). B.L.J.

Daniel, SAMUEL (*nr Taunton ? 1562 ?; †Beckington, Somerset 1619 ?), English poet, dramatist and critic, brother-in-law of John Florio, under whom he was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford (1581). His translation of Paulus Jovius (1585) was dedicated to Sir Edward Dymoke, his patron till 1592. In Paris in 1586, Daniel visited Italy with him (1591–92) meeting Guarini. Later tutor to the Herbert and Clifford families, Daniel was a member of the literary circles centred on the countesses of Pembroke and Bedford. He entered the service of queen Anne and (1604–05) licensed plays for the Children of the Queen's Revels. The publication and performance of his tragedy Philotas brought on him the suspicion of the Privy Council of sympathy for Essex, and Daniel was constrained to disclaim any such feeling. He wrote 4 masques and 2 pastorals for court performance (1608–14) until dismissed for loyalty to the disgraced Sir Robert Flond. Always tending to seclude himself from company, Daniel finally retired to Beckington. His contemporary reputation was high in almost everything he touched, and he can now be seen as one whose writing contributed to the development of the best qualities of Augustan verse. Daniel suffers from habits of reading which have developed with romantic poetry. Carefully read, his decasyllables are sweet and smooth, with strength and variety. He did much to establish English as a poetic language, never without a feeling for its majesty. His sonnets tend to be under-estimated owing to the fact that they do not address a real mistress, but in them as elsewhere he shows a by no means negligible combination of poetic sensibility and superb technique, if without the highest imaginative strength.

H. Sellers, 'A Bibliography of the Works of S. D.', Proc. Oxford Biblio. Soc., 2 (1928–30). —Paulus Jovius, Containing a Discourse of Imprese (1585); Delia. With the Complaint of Rosamund (1592 etc.), ed. A. Esdaile (1908); A Defence of Rhyme (1602), ed. G. Gregory Smith, in Elizabethan Critical Essays, II (1904); Civile Wares, corrected and continued (1609).—DRAMA: Cleopatra (1594); The Vision of the 12 Goddesses (1604), ed. E. Law (1880); The Queenes Arcadia (1606); The Tragedie of Philotas (1607), ed. L. Michel (1949).—Whole Works in Poetrie (1623); The Complete Works in Verse and Prose, ed. A. B. Grosart (1885–96); Poems and A Defence of Ryme, ed. A. C. Sprague (1930).
W. Oldys, Life of D., in E. Cooper, Muses' Library (1737). B.L.J.

Daniel Adam z Veleslavína: see VELESLAVÍN.

Daniel the Exile, Russian author of a boastful and flowery supplication addressed to his feudal master (prob. early 13th century), which sheds considerable light on the manners of the period.

I. Shlyapkin, Slovo Daniila Zatochnika (1889); P. Mindalev, Molenie Daniila Zatochnika (1914). J.L.

Daniel von Soest (fl. 1534–39), pseudonym of the unknown writer of the brilliant Low German satire Ein gemeyne Bicht, a dramatic dialogue in which the Roman Catholic author boldly and virulently attacks the members of the Reformed church at Soest in Westphalia.

Ein gemeyne Bicht (1534, pub. 1539), ed. with valuable intro. A. Berger, in Deut. Lit. Entwicklungsr. Ref. III (1933); Dialogon (1537, pub. 1539); Apologeticon (1539).
F. Jostes, D. von S. (1888); H. Schwartz, Geschichte der Reformation in Soest (1932). D.G.D.

Danilevsky, GRIGORY PETROVICH (*Kharkov prov. 14 IV 1829; †St Petersburg 6 XII 1890), Russian author. He won his reputation in Russia and abroad as a historical novelist.

Knyazhna Tarakanova (The Princess Tarakanova, tr. I. Mouchanoff, 1891); Sozhzhënnaya Moskva (Moscow in Flames, tr. A. Rappaport, 1917); Sochineniya (9 vols, 1892–93; 24 vols, 1901). J.L.

Danilevsky, NIKOLAY YAKOVLEVICH (*1822; †1885), Russian naturalist and Slavophil whose book, Rossiya i Evropa (1869, 5th ed. 1895), anticipated certain tenets of Oswald Spengler's Der Untergang des Abendlandes. He tried to establish the 'biological' foundations of Slavophil doctrine about the ultimate triumph of the Slavs over the West.

Russland und Europa, Germ. tr. K. Nötzel (1920). J.L.

Danilov, KIRSHA, the first collector of Russian epic folk-poetry. The MS. of his Drevniye rossiyskie stikhotvoreniya, containing over 70 byliny, is dated 1781. It was partly published in 1804 and then in 1818. Its best edition is that of the Petersburg public library, 1901. J.L.

Dante Alighieri (*Florence V–VI 1265; †Ravenna 13/14 IX 1321). Dante came of old Florentine stock, boasting an ancestor, Cacciaguida, knighted on the second crusade, from whose wife came the surname Alighieri (cf. Par., 15). He lost his mother in childhood and his father by 1283. Though the family was impoverished, Dante grew up in good society: he knew Brunetto Latini well and became a close friend of Guido Cavalcanti who encouraged and influenced his first efforts in verse. By 1287 he had been to Bologna, where he may have attended lectures; but study was not yet his chief concern. He fought in the Florentine cavalry against the Aretines and against Pisa. By 1285, probably, he was married. Already writing love-poetry in the troubadour tradition, he began to show originality in verses written for 'Beatrice', usually identified with the Portinari girl who married Simone de' Bardi and died, aged 24, in 1290. A selection of these poems, with a prose commentary, formed his first book, the Vita nuova (1292–94). Beatrice's death may have been followed by another attachment which he allegorized later (in the Convivio) into a conversion to 'Philosophy'; certainly, between 1290 and 1295, he undertook a course of hard study, beginning with Boethius and Cicero and going on to Aristotle and his scholastic commentators and the Latin poets. This re-education quickly affected his writing, adding themes from philosophy and ethics to the conventional love-content of vernacular verse. About 1295 may have occurred the immoral phase of which he was later so ashamed (cf. Purg., 23 and 30); and about this time he inscribed himself in the Guild of Apothecaries and Physicians, becoming thus entitled, by the rules of the Florentine republic, to take an active part in civic affairs.

These were rapidly moving to a crisis as the 'White' and 'Black' factions of the ruling Guelf party struggled for control. On being elected one of the Priors for the period from June to August 1300, Dante, though he inclined to the Whites, tried, with his colleagues, to preserve peace by banishing the extremists of both parties, including his friend Cavalcanti, a White, and the turbulent Black, Corso Donati; who forthwith went to Rome to solicit the intervention of the pope. Boniface VIII, deciding to call in French aid, appointed Charles of Valois, a brother of Philip the Fair, 'peacemaker' in Tuscany. Meanwhile Dante had come forward as a resolute opponent of the papal policy. On the approach of Charles (October 1301) he was sent, with two others, to Rome to parley with Boniface. He probably never saw Florence again. With the French in the city the Blacks seized power and began a campaign of reprisals and prosecutions. On 27 January 1302 Dante, with other leading Whites, was denounced as a barrator and an enemy of the church, fined 5,000 florins, perpetually excluded from public office and exiled for two years. A further sentence (10 March) made him an exile for life with the prospect of being burned alive should he fall into the hands of the Florentine government.

The exile divides Dante's life and deeply colours all his subsequent writings; he writes henceforth as a man homeless and hungry for justice. His wanderings cannot be traced in much detail. Until 1304 he was with the other White exiles at Arezzo, Forlì and elsewhere. Breaking with them, he went to Verona (cf. Par., 17) and thence probably to Bologna, where he cultivated the studies which he loved and from which he hoped to win a reputation that would offset his misfortunes. In this period falls the writing of De vulgari eloquentia and the Convivio and the growth of a friendship with Cino da Pistoia. In 1306 Dante was in Tuscany with the Malaspina (cf. Purg., 8). Then, until the coming of Henry of Luxemburg into Italy in 1310 raised his hopes of a restoration of the empire, his movements are obscure. He may—but it is not likely—have gone to study in Paris. In January 1311 he may have paid homage to Henry at Milan, and in the spring he was certainly in the Casentino valley writing a wrathful epistle to the Florentines and appealing to Henry to make an end of them as his chief enemies. Within the next three years, probably, the Monarchia was written; but in August 1313 Henry died and Dante's political hopes with him. After a stay in Verona with Cangrande della Scala he accepted an invitation from Guido da Polenta, lord of Ravenna. Here, with his sons Jacopo and Pietro and perhaps also a daughter, Dante spent his last years tranquilly, finishing the Commedia, exchanging Latin verses with his Bolognese admirer Giovanni del Virgilio. In 1320 he maintained in public, at Verona, his Quaestio de aqua et terra. Next year he went as Guido's ambassador to Venice and, falling ill on the way back, died at Ravenna.

Dante expressed himself completely in the Commedia; his other works are all partial or provisional. The Convivio and De vulg. eloq. were left unfinished. The series of detached poems, the Rime, reveal a bent for continual experiment. The poet was restlessly self-critical. Explanatory prose dogs his verse: the Vita nuova (1292–94) explains the youthful lyrics for Beatrice; the Convivio (1304–07) was planned as an explanation, in Italian prose, of 14 canzoni written in middle life; the De vulg. eloq. (1303–05), taking stock of the poet's experience, conveys his ideas on language and the craft of verse; the Monarchia (with Epistles 5, 6, 7, 9; 1310–14), represents his effort to argue out in Latin prose his political position, before returning to the more congenial but never, for Dante, exclusive concern with poetry; and if the letter to Cangrande (Ep. 13) is authentic, the Commedia itself was followed by a fragment of prose commentary. In general the minor works adumbrate themes of the poem or exemplify and discuss points that were to serve in its technique: the former especially in Vita nuova Convivio and Monarchia, the latter in the De vulg. eloq. Important, in the Convivio and implicitly in De vulg. eloq., is the defence of Italian as a medium for the highest prose and verse.

The Commedia, probably begun in 1307/10—though some scholars say 1313/14—was finished shortly before Dante died. Its literal sense is a journey made by the poet through Hell, Purgatory and Heaven; its spiritual sense is mankind as answerable to divine justice. Divided into three parts of 33 cantos each, with one introductory canto, its intricate logical and imaginative construction reflects a mind of wonderful richness, simplicity and depth. Dante modestly called it a 'comedy' on account of its homely style and diction (which in fact are extremely various); and its readers have named it 'divine'. He invented for it the weave of hendecasyllabics known as the terza rima. Linguistically Florentine, with borrowings from other dialects, it has been a major factor in the making of literary Italian, although, owing to the trend of Italian taste in the renaissance, its effect in this regard has been curiously limited. Widely read and commented, especially for its doctrinal content, in the 14th century; somewhat neglected by subsequent generations; its reputation rose to the zenith in the 19th century and shows no sign of declining now.

It is not easy briefly to characterize so tremendous a work of art. If Dante is 'the great master of the simple style' (T. S. Eliot), this simplicity of diction and syntax is the effect of an extremely sure control of theme and medium, of a scrupulous attention to the value of every word. One might say that ordinary language meant so much to Dante that, even apart from the preference for a swift directness in expression which he shared with his Italian contemporaries (e.g. Cavalcanti), his essential genius tended ever away from metaphorical and rhetorical complications. This is not to deny that he drew from Virgil a sonorous terseness, or from Christian liturgy and theology an infinite subtlety in the use of technical terms and symbols. But the overriding quality of his mature style is a keen and sensitive temperateness. With this, Dante is a great dramatic poet: precision and energy of thought, human sympathy and moral passion are suffused by an imagination of extraordinary power. His poem is alive from end to end (if less conspicuously in the Paradiso) with human figures caught and displayed in moments of contact and contrast. And through it all we hear a lyric note rising persistently, joyful or sad, from the poet's dauntless, contemplative heart.

A standard text of all the works was published in 1 vol., without notes, by the Società dantesca italiana (Florence, 1921). The 'National Ed.' (annotated) of particular works (Florence, Le Monnier) contains so far the Convivio, ed. Busnelli and Vandelli (2 vols, 1934–37), and the De Vulgari Eloquentia, ed. Marigo (1 vol., 2nd ed. 1948). Other eds: Rime, ed. Contini (Turin, 1946); Monarchia (with Political Epistles), ed. Vinay (Florence, 1950); Vita Nuova, ed. Barbi (Florence, 1932), and (with selection of other 'minor' works) ed. Sapegno (Florence, 1943); Epistolae, ed. Toynbee (Oxford, 1920). Of the many modern annotated eds of the Commedia may be mentioned those of Scartazzini-Vandelli and Casini-Barbi, of C. Grabher, M. Porena and, for his masterly comments on the poetry, A. Momigliano. The most useful English translations are the prose versions, annotated, of Dent's Temple Classics and of J. D. Sinclair (3 vols, 1939–46).

The best introductions are M. Barbi, D. (Florence, 1933) and F. Maggini, Introduzione allo studio di D. (Bari, 1948). Useful for English readers: U. Cosmo, Handbook to D. Studies (1950); D. L. Sayers, 'Introduction' to tr. of the Inferno (1949); also, in their very different ways, C. Williams, The Figure of Beatrice (1943) and T. S. Eliot, 'D.', in Selected Essays (1932). For the enormous historical, exegetical and critical literature on Dante let it suffice to mention the names of M. Barbi and B. Nardi in Italy, of Masseron and Gilson in France, of Grandgent, J. E. Shaw, H. D. Austin and C. S. Singleton in America, of K. Vossler and E. R. Curtius in Germany, of Th. Spoerri in Switzerland, of E. Moore, P. Toynbee and Gardner in England. The best periodicals devoted to D. are Studi danteschi and Deutsches Dante-Jahrbuch. K.F.

Dante da Maiano (fl. 2nd half of 13th century), Tuscan poet in the Provençal tradition as transmitted by Guittone d'Arezzo. Little is known of him, and he is remembered only for having exchanged some mediocre sonnets with his great namesake during the latter's first, 'guittonian' phase.

G. Contini's ed. of the Rime of Dante Alighieri (1946).

F. Torraca, Studi su la lirica ital. del duecento (1902); G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930); S. Debenedetti, Nuovi studi sulla giuntina di rime antiche (1912). K.F.

Dantiscus, JOANNES DE CURIIS, real name Flachsbinder (*Danzig 1 XI 1485; †Heilsberg 28 X 1548), Polish-Latin poet, diplomat and clergyman. His occasional verses show great formal skill; some are written in a satirical vein.

Congressus trium regum (1515); De clade Moschorum (1515); Ad Grineam (1519); De nostrorum temporum calamitatibus (1530; crit. ed. Z. Celichowski, 1902); Jonas propheta de interitu civitatis Gedanensis (1764).—Carmina (1950; crit. ed. with intro. by S. Skimina).

L. Czaplicki, De vita et carminibus Joannis de Curiis Dantisci (1855); S. Skimina, Twórczość poetycka J. D. (1948). S.S.

Dantyszek, JAN: see DANTISCUS.

Da Ponte, Lorenzo, pen-name of Emanuele Conegliano (*Ceneda (Vittorio Veneto) 10 III 1749; †New York 17 VIII 1838), Italian poet, prose writer and librettist. Adventurer; poet of the imperial theatre, Vienna (1782–92); he lived for 11 years in London and fled to America (1805). Da Ponte wrote lively, if misleading, Memorie and some 36 cantatas and operatic libretti, including those for Mozart's Nozze di Figaro, Don Giovanni and Così fan tutte (1786–90).

Memoirs, ed. Gambarin and Nicolini (2 vols, 1918; tr. E. Abbott, 1929).
A. Marchesan, Della vita e delle opere di L. da P. (1900); L. Collison Morley, 'Mozart's Librettist L. da P.', in London Mercury, 14 (1926). M.W.

Da Porto, Luigi (*Vicenza 10 VIII 1485; †ibid. 10 V 1529), Italian poet and prose writer. A typical renaissance gentleman, he was wounded fighting for Venice in 1511 and vividly relates his experiences in Lettere storiche. In addition to Petrarchan sonnets he wrote the famous story Romeo e Giuletta (1524) on which Shakespeare supposedly based his play.

Rime e Prose (1539); Lettere storiche aggiuntavi la celebre novella, ed. B. Bressan (1857); Romeo and Juliet, ed. and tr. M. Jonas (1921).
C. Foligno, L. Da P. e la sua novella (1912); F. Flamini, Il Cinquecento (1905; with biblio.). C.Dr.

Daqiqi of Tus, Abu Mansur Muhammad (†952), Persian poet. He is best known for his 1,000 epic verses, dealing with the advent of the prophet Zoroaster. He intended to put into verse the national and legendary history of Persia, but the work was uncompleted at his sudden and early death. Firdowsi has incorporated Daqiqi's unfinished epic in his Shah-Nameh (q.v.).

T. Nöldeke, 'Das iranische Nationalepos', in Grundr. der iran. Phil., II (1896–1904); A. V. W. Jackson, Early Persian Poetry (1920). E.Y.

D'Arblay, Frances: see Burney, Fanny.

Dares Phrygius, priest at Troy, wrote a history of its siege from the Trojan viewpoint. A translation by Cornelius Nepos(!), with a dedication to Sallust, apparently comes from the 5th century. In the middle ages Dares was a favourite source for the history of Troy.

Ed. A. Dederich (1835; and with Dictys Cretensis, 1837); F. Meister (1873).
H. Dunger, Die Sage vom Trojanischen Krieg in den Bearbeitungen des Mittelalters (Prog. Dresden, 1869); G. Körting, Dictys und Dares (1874); E. Collilieux, Étude sur Dictys de Crête et Darès de Phrygie (1886). J.A.W.

Darley, George (*Dublin 1795; †London 23 XI 1846), Irish poet, critic, mathematician. His best lyrical poetry has a felicitous grace, a distinctive musical charm and a use of symbols which anticipates the symbolistes. He worked in London as a dramatic and art critic and as editor of mathematical text-books. Recognition was withheld until this century, and the disappointed Darley, sensitive and stammering, became a recluse.

Errors of Ecstasie (1822); Sylvia (1827); Thomas à Becket (1840); Ethelstan (1841); Nepenthe, ed. R. A. Streatfeild (1897); Poetical Works, ed. R. Colles (1907).
C. Colleer Abbott, Life and Letters of G. D. (1928); D. Stanford, in Envoy (Dublin, 1951). R.McH.

Darwin, Charles Robert (*Shrewsbury 12 II 1809; ∞1839 Emma Wedgwood; †Down, Kent 19 IV 1882), English biologist; grandson of Erasmus Darwin. His belief in evolution was based on the extensive observations of the geology, zoology and botany of South America which he made during his voyage in the Beagle (1831–36) and also on his later intensive studies at home. Malthus's Essay on Population gave him the clue he needed—the evolutionary effect of natural selection. The illustrative evidence of The Origin of Species was so weighty that his theories made immediate headway, in spite of violent religious opposition, and they have never been refuted.

On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, or the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life (1859); The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication (1868); The Descent of Man and Selection in Relation to Sex (2 vols, 1871); The Expression of Emotion in Man and the Animals (1872); Life and Letters of C. D. including an Autobiographical Chapter, ed. Sir F. Darwin (3 vols, 1887); The Complete Extant Correspondence between Wallace and D., 1857–81 (1916).
L. Huxley, C. D. (1921). B.H.

Darwin, Erasmus (*Elston Hall, Staffs 12 XII 1731; ∞1757 Mary Howard; ∞1781 Mrs Chandos-Pole; †Breadsall Priory 18 IV 1802), English physician, writer and inventor. Darwin used poetry as a vehicle for natural history. He believed that the process of evolution depended on the inheritance of acquired characteristics.

The Botanic Garden; a Poem in Two Parts. Part I containing The Economy of Vegetation (first pub. separately in 1791), Part II containing The Loves of the Plants with Philosophical Notes (first pub. separately in 1789); (2 vols, 1794–95); Poetical Works with Philosophical Notes (3 vols, 1807).

S. Butler, Evolution Old and New (1879); C. Darwin, Life of E. D. (1887). B.H.

Dasent, Sir George Webbe (*St Vincent 22 V 1817; ∞1846 Fanny Delane; †Ascot 11 VI 1896), English scholar of Scandinavian literature and folk-lore, author of numerous valuable translations from Icelandic and Norse and of some semi-autobiographical works.

Popular Tales from Norse (1859); Story of Burnt Njal (1861); Story of Gisli the Outlaw (1866); Annals of an Eventful Life (1870). R.M.H.

Dashkov, Ekaterina Romanovna, née Princess Vorontsov (*St Petersburg 17 III 1743; †Moscow 4 I 1810), was one of the most enlightened Russian women of the Catherine II period and even became president of the academy. She edited a monthly, wrote two plays and was responsible for the plan of the Russian academic dictionary.

Mémoires (wr. 1805 in French, first pub. 1840 as Memoirs of the Princess Daschkaw; Russ. tr., A. Herzen, London, 1859).

A. S. Suvorin, Knyaginya Dashkova (1888); H. M. Hyde, The Empress Catherine and Princess Dashkov (1935); G. Schlegelberger, Die Fürstin Daschkova (1935). J.L.

Dass, Petter (*Nord-Nerø 1647; ∞1673 Margrethe Andersdatter; †Alstahaug 1707), Norwegian poet and hymnist. He was an almost legendary figure, the rich and powerful parish priest of Alstahaug in the province of Nordland from 1689 until his death. As a poet he possessed considerable powers of versification and a fresh individuality which avoided the disfiguring ornamentation of much of the current baroque poetry. His chief work, Nordlands Trompet, a vigorous description of life in north Norway, may be considered the major work of Norwegian literature in the 17th century. Apart from a collection of verse all his work was first published after his death.

Nordske Dale-Viise (1683); Aandelig Tidsfordriv eller Bibelske Viisebog (1711); Dr. Mart. Luthers lille Catechismus (1715; see Katechismussange, ed. H. Beyer, 1947); Trende Bibelske Bøger (1723); Nordlands Trompet (1739; critical ed. D. A. Seip, 1927); Viser og rim (ed. D. A. Seip, 1934, 1950).—Samlede Skrifter, ed. A. Eriksen (3 vols, 1874–77).

A. Eriksen, Om D. og hans Skrifter (1874); R. Sveen, D. og diktingi hans (1912); H. Midboe, P. D. (1947). R.G.P.

Dathenus, Petrus, latinized name of Pieter Daeten or Daets (*Mont Cassel 1531 or 32; †Elbing 17 III 1588), Dutch poet and writer. His De Psalmen Davids ende ander Lofsanghen (1566) is a rather clumsy although very popular translation from the French of Marot. Dathenus translated also the Heidelbergse Catechismus and collaborated in the compilation of the Dutch liturgy.

Th. Ruys, P. D. (1919); W. A. P. Smit, in Album-Baur (1948). J.J.M.

Dati, Giuliano (~1445; †29 XII 1524), Italian poet, theologian and lawyer. He put Columbus' letter announcing the discovery of America into Italian verse. Also wrote biographies of saints and mystery plays.

La lettera dell'isole che ha trovato nuovamente il Re di Spagna, ed. G. Uzielli, with life by F. Fontani (1873). C.Dr.

Dati, Gregorio (*Florence 15 IV 1362; †ibid. 12 IX 1435), Italian historian and merchant. His Istoria di Firenze (1363–1435) abounds in information, his Libro Segreto consists of private and business notes. The geographical treatise La Sfera (1513) is sometimes attributed to his brother Leonardo.

Il libro segreto, ed. C. Gargiolli (1869); Istoria di Firenze (1735), ed. L. Pratesi (1904).

V. Rossi, Il Quattrocento (1949). C.Dr.

Dati, Leonardo di Piero (*Florence 1408; †Rome 1472), Italian humanist and poet, bishop of Massa. Apart from Latin poems and a tragedy, Hiempsal, Dati is known for his Italian poem De Amicitia, composed for the Florentine literary competition of 1441.

De Amicitia, ed. Carducci in La poesia barbara nei secoli 15 e 16 (1881).

F. Flamini, 'L. di P. D.', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 16 (1890). C.Dr.

Daudet, Louis Marie Alphonse (*Nîmes 13 V 1840; ∞1867 Julia Allard; †Paris 17 XII 1897), French novelist. The son of an impoverished silk manufacturer, Daudet was educated in Lyons. After a year as a school usher at Alais, in 1857, he joined his brother Ernest in Paris, where they made contacts with the worlds of journalism and literature. From 1860 to 1865 Alphonse held a nominal post under the Duc de Morny, but for health reasons he spent the winters in Algeria (1861–62), Corsica (1862–63) and (1863–64) at Fontvielle, near Arles, where he met Frédéric Mistral and his fellow Provençal poets. After Morny's death (1865) Daudet decided to live by his writings and in 1866 was already publishing, in collaboration with Paul Arène, the stories that became famous as Lettres de mon Moulin (1869). His youth and his experiences at Alais he recounted in Le Petit Chose (1868), while Algeria and Provence furnished background and characters for a humorous novel, Tartarin de Tarascon (1872), and a serious play L'Arlésienne (1872), both studies of the méridional temperament. Acquaintance with Zola, Flaubert and the Goncourts led Daudet to develop in the direction of naturalism, but he never fully accepted their more violent ideals, though he followed their methods of detailed documentation. Froment jeune et Risler aîné (1874) and Jack (1876) are both marked by Daudet's characteristic sentimentality, which also tempers the virulence of his later unflattering accounts of different aspects of society under the second empire —Le Nabab (1877); Numa Roumestan (1881), Sapho (1884) and L'Immortel (1888). His last works, including La Petite Paroisse (1895) and Soutien de Famille (1897) were written between bouts of the painful illness, the progress of which he noted in La Doulou (published 1931).

VERSE: Les Amoureuses (1858).—NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES: Contes du Lundi (1873–76); Femmes d'Artistes (1874); Robert Helmont (1874); Les Rois en Exil (1875); L'Evangéliste (1883); Tartarin sur les Alpes (1885); La Belle Nivernaise (1886); Port-Tarascon (1890); Rose et Ninette (1892).—MEMOIRS: Souvenirs d'un Homme de Lettres (1888); Trente Ans de Paris (1888); Notes sur la Vie (1899); Premier Voyage, premier Mensonge (1900).—Œuvres complètes (20 vols, 1929–31).

R. H. Sherard, A. D. (1894); L. Daudet, A. D. (1898); H. James, French Poets and Novelists (1878); P. Martino, Le Naturalisme français (1923); G. V. Dobie, A. D. (1949).
T.W.

Dautzenberg, JOHAN MICHEL (*Heerlen 6 XII 1808; †Ixelles 4 II 1869), Flemish poet. A formalist, he opposed the romantic exuberance of his time, refinement of feeling and intellect. Influenced by Platen, he struck an individualistic note.

Gedichten (1850); Verspreide en nagelaten gedichten (1869).

A. E. van Beughem, J. M. D. (1935).
R.F.L.

Davanzati, BERNARDO (*Florence 31 VIII 1529; †ibid. 29 III 1606), Italian prose writer. He translated Tacitus into current Italian, using less words than the original. Also wrote economic and agricultural treatises and a summary of a work by the English Jesuit, Nicholas Sanders, Scisma d'Inghilterra (1602).

Opere, ed. E. Bindi (2 vols, 1923; with short life and biblio.).
C.Dr.

Davanzati, CHIARO (*c. 1230/40; †c. 1280 ?), Florentine poet. The city's archives mention two men of this name: one dead by 1280, the other still living in 1305. It seems more probable that the former is our poet; if so, little else is known of him save that he fought at Montaperti and exchanged verses, both on love-themes and politics, with other poets of the time. Three phases are distinguished in his art: a first, of flat imitation of the Provençals; a second, under the influence of Guittone d'Arezzo; and a third in which, perhaps influenced by Guinizelli of Bologna, Chiaro approaches the suave lucidity that was to characterize the stilnovisti (q.v.). To the second phase would belong the patriotic canzone, Ai dolze e gaia terra fiorentina (1267 ?); and to the third the rather beautiful sonnet, La splendiente luce quando apare.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); C. Salinari, La poesia lirica del duecento (annot. anthology, 1950).

G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930); C. De Lollis, 'Sul canzoniere di C. D.', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., suppl. 1 (1898); S. Debenedetti, ibid., 50 (1907); R. Palmieri, La poesia politica di C. D. (1925).
K.F.

Davenant or D'Avenant, SIR WILLIAM (*Oxford II or III 1605/6; ∞(i) Anne ? before 1625, (ii) Lady Cademan; †London 7 IV 1668), English courtier-poet and dramatist, who, according to tradition, was Shakespeare's godson, and has been supposed, probably erroneously, to have been his natural son. Davenant entered the Middle Temple. Having killed a tavern servant (Feb. 1633), Davenant fled to Holland, but returning, despite a warrant against him, was chosen to write the libretto for The Temple of Love, the masque in which Henrietta Maria appeared (Shrovetide 1634/5). Pardoned (1638), Davenant became virtually poet laureate. The troubles which ended Charles I's reign show Davenant as more than a typical headstrong courtier; a harder, more responsible side of his nature appears during his service (on land and sea) in the Bishops' Wars and the Army Plot of 1641. Appointed governor of Maryland (1649), he was captured on his way there (1650). Given the liberty of the Tower (1651), he was pardoned by Cromwell (1654) and persuaded the authorities to let him hold semi-theatrical performances, (The Siege of Rhodes, 1656; Declamations at Rutland House, 1657). Imprisoned in 1659, the Restoration made him the manager of one of the two licensed theatrical companies, with the right to perform Shakespeare. Contemporaries made much fun of Davenant's disfigurement from syphilis, but he was more than a dissolute adventurer; a competent writer, active in the wars, he was an organizer who left his mark on the English theatre, introducing continental machinery and scenes, establishing a school for actors at Hatton Garden, and furthering the development of opera in England.

The Works of Sir William Davenant Kt. (1673).—VERSE: Madagascar (1638; 1648); Gondibert (1651, ed. R. Southey, 1831).—DRAMA: The Dramatic Works of Sir William D'Avenant, ed. J. Mardinent and W. H. Logan (1872–74).—PROSE: A Discourse Upon Gondibert (1650), repr. J. E. Spingarn, Seventeenth-Century Critical Essays, II (1908).

A. Harbage, Sir W. D. (1935): A. H. Nethercot, Sir W. D'A. (1938). B.L.J.

David Kimchi: see KIMCHI, DAVID.

David of Augsburg (†1272), German Franciscan mystic, was the Master of Novices at Regensburg between 1241 and 1250, and a leading antagonist of the Waldenses. He wrote devotional works in Latin and German, a tract on the office of choir-master and an exposition of the rule of St Francis.

F. Pfeiffer, Deutsche Mystiker (1845); Der Tractat des D. v. A. über die Waldenser, ed. W. Preger (Abhandl. bayer. Akad. d. Wiss., 14, 1878); Spiritual Life and Progress, tr. D. Devas (1937); D. Stöckerl, Bruder D. v. A. (1914). R.R.R.

Davidson, JOHN (*Barrhead 11 IV 1857; ∞1885 Margaret McArthur; †23 III 1909), Scottish poet, playwright and novelist. Educated Greenock and Edinburgh University. Mainly a schoolteacher till 1890, he then went to London to follow writing. Later he removed to Penzance and there probably drowned himself. His undoubted poetic fire lacked finish. He shared the 'decadent' mood of his time.

VERSE: Fleet Street Eclogues (1893); Ballads and Songs (1894); New Ballads (1897); The Last Ballad (1899).—DRAMATIC WORKS: Bruce (1886); Smith (1888); Scaramouch in Naxos (1889).

W. Archer, Poets of the Younger Generation (1902); H. Fineman, J. D.: a Study of the Relation of his Ideas to his Poetry (1916); W. M. Parker, Modern Scottish Writers (1917); W. B. Yeats, Autobiographies (1926). G.W.C.

Davies, JOHN (*Hereford 1565?; ∞Mary Croft; ∞1613 Juliana Preston; ∞Margaret; ▯ London 6 VII 1618), English writing-master and poet. Regarded as 'the best penman of his age', Davies numbered among his pupils prince Henry, upon whom he wrote a mediocre elegy. He also wrote lyrics and some long poems on philosophical and pseudo-scientific subjects. His many commendatory verses and epigrams are valuable for the information they contain about his more famous contemporaries.

Microcosmos (1603); Humours Heav'n on Earth (1609); Wittes Pilgrimage (1610?); The Muses Sacrifice (1612); The Writing Schoolmaster (1633); The Muses Teares for the loss of Henry Prince of Wales (1613).—Complete Works, ed. A. B. Grosart (1878).

H. Heidrich, D. of Hereford und sein Bild von Shakespeares Umgebung (1924). J.B.B.

Davies, SIR JOHN (*16 IV 1569; †8 XII 1626), English poet. Educated at Oxford and the Middle Temple, Davies became solicitor-general of Ireland in 1603. In England he assisted the Society of Antiquaries and was thrice elected member of parliament. Davies was a pungent epigrammatist and parodied Petrarchan extravagances in his 'gulling' sonnets. His philosophic enthusiasms find poetic expression in Orchestra (1596), which justifies dancing by cosmological analogies, and in Nosce Teipsum (1599), a lucid exposition of the nature of the mind and the immortality of the soul.

Epigrammes and elegies by J. D[avies] and C. M[arlowe] (1590?); Hymnes of Astraea (1599).—Works, ed. H. Morley (1889); Poems, ed. C. Howard (1941).

M. Seemann, Sir J. D., sein Leben und sein Werk (1913); M. D. Holmes, The Poet as Philosopher (1921). W.A.A.

Davila, ENRICO CATERINO (*Pieve del Sacco, Padua 30 X 1576; ∞Orsetta degli Arscuffi; †San Michele in Campagna, Verona 26 V 1631), Italian historian. Sixteen years of residence and soldiering in France (1583–99) inspired his terse, ably organized and well informed, although not always objective, Historia delle Guerre Civili di Francia (15 books); this work ran to over 200 editions. Davila spent his last twenty-five years in the service of the Venetian Republic.

Historia delle Guerre Civili di Francia (1630; The History of the Civil Wars of France, tr. E. Farneworth, 1758).—Opere Complete (39 vols, 1825–26).

G. L. Podrecca, Centenario di E. C. D. (1876); E. Allodoli, 'E.C.D.', in Pegaso (Sept. 1929). U.L.

Davis, Thomas Osborne (*Mallow, Co. Cork 14 X 1814; †Dublin 16 IX 1845), Irish poet and historical writer; a barrister and co-founder of the Nation newspaper, organ of the Young Ireland movement, which he led. His patriotic articles and ballads did much to educate and to arouse his countrymen and, though sometimes rhetorical and declamatory, have considerable literary merit.

Poems (1846); Literary and Historical Essays (1846); T. D., Essays and Poems, with a Memoir (1945). R.McH.

Davy, Sir Humphrey (*Penzance 17 XII 1778; †Geneva 29 V 1829), English chemist. Davy began his chemical studies while apprenticed to a surgeon at Penzance, became assistant at the Pneumatic Institution at Clifton and a lecturer at the Royal Institution. In 1820 he became president of the Royal Society.

Researches Chemical and Philosophical, chiefly concerning Nitrous Oxide (1800); Elements of Chemical Philosophy (1812); Elements of Agricultural Chemistry (1813); On the Safety Lamp for Coal Miners (1818); The Collected Works of Sir H. D., ed. J. Davy (9 vols, 1839–41).—Various: Salmonia, or Days of Fly-Fishing (1818); Consolations in Travel (1830).

J. Davy, Memoirs of the Life of Sir H. D. (1836); J. A. Paris, The Life of Sir H. D. (1831); T. E. Thorpe, H. D., Poet and Philosopher (1896); J. C. Gregory, The Scientific Achievements of Sir H. D. (1930). B.H.

Davydov, Denis Vasilyevich (*16 VII 1784; †1839), Russian poet of the Pushkin 'pléiade'. A soldier by profession who had taken part in the 1812 campaign, he wrote 'hussar' verses full of temperamental and rhythmical élan. Some of his love lyrics are particularly good. He is supposed to be the prototype of Denisov in Tolstoy's War and Peace.

Sochineniya Davydova (3 vols, 1893).

S. A. Vengerov, Istochniki slovarya russ. pisateley, II (1910); V. V. Zherve, Partizan-poet D. (1913); I. N. Rozanov, Russkaya lirika (1914). J.L.

Dawlatshāh of Samarkand, Amir, 15th-century Persian man of letters. He is the author of Tadhkirat al-Shu'ara (1487), an important biographical work on Persian poets, with anthologies.

Tadhkirat al-Shu'ara, with intro. by E. G. Browne (1901).

E. G. Browne, 'The Sources of Dawlatshah', in Jour. Roy. As. Soc. (1899). E.Y.

Day, John (*1574; †1640), English dramatist. Day seems to have begun writing for the London stage about 1598 and collaborated in many plays which are now nearly all lost. Three of his own comedies survive; they evince a certain grace and wit. He is best known for The Parliament of Bees (pr. 1641, written c. 1607), an allegorical masque or series of dialogues in which human virtues and vices are represented in the persons of bees.

The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green (? with Henry Chettle; pr. 1659, written c. 1600); The Ile of Guls (1606); Humour out of Breath (1608); Law-Trickes (1608).—Complete Works, ed. A. H. Bullen (1881). J.B.B.

Day, Thomas (*London 22 VI 1748; ∞1778 Esther Milne; †Wargrave 28 IX 1789), English writer whose attempts to live in accordance with modified Rousseauism rival in interest his Sandford and Merton written under the same inspiration.

Dying Negro (1773); Sandford and Merton (3 vols, 1783–89).

J. Keir, An Account of the Life and Writings of D. (1791); J. Blackman, A Memoir of D. (1862). R.M.H.

Dazai Shundai, pseud. of Dazai Jun (*Iida, Shinano 1680; †Edo (=Tokyo) 7 VII 1747), Japanese scholar. In early manhood he entered feudal service, but after a long illness he went to Kyoto, where he studied Confucianism. After ten years he went to Edo and became a pupil of Ogyū Sorai, whose heterodox views on Confucianism he adopted. Besides being a famous teacher, he wrote many books on the Chinese classics and on Japanese philosophical, scholarly, political, financial and economic matters.

Keizairoku (1729), partial Eng. tr. R. J. Kirby, 'Dazai on Japanese Music', in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, 28 (1900); other Eng. tr. of various works by R. J. Kirby, pub. in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, as follows:—'Dazai Jun on Bubi or Preparation for War', 32 (1905); 'Dazai Jun's Essay on Gakusei (Educational Control)', 34 (1907); 'Food and Wealth, an essay by Dazai Jun', 35 (1908); 'An Essay by Dazai Jun relating to Adoption and Marriage', 36 (1908); 'Dazai on Buddhism', 38 (1910); 'Dazai Jun's Economic Essays, "Doing Nothing" and "Divination"', 41 (1913). E.B.C.

D'Azeglio, Massimo (*Turin 24 X 1798; ∞Giulia Manzoni (†1834), ∞Luisa Blondel; †Cannero 15 I 1866), Italian statesman, painter and novelist. A member of an aristocratic Piedmontese family, D'Azeglio became an important influence in the Risorgimento. As a young man he achieved some success as an artist. Of his two historical novels, Ettore Fieramosca (1833) is based on the famous challenge of Barletta of 1503, as told in Guicciardini's Storia d'Italia (V, 5), an event already used by D'Azeglio as the subject of one of his paintings; while Niccolò de' Lapi (1841) is based on the heroic siege of Florence of 1530. The purpose of both, typical of 19th-century Italian literature, is to inspire Italians with pride in their past and resolution as to their future. D'Azeglio, however, is less crude than many of his contemporaries and his writing has many attractive qualities, especially in his descriptive passages.

D'Azeglio's first active contribution to the Italian cause was his widely circulated pamphlet, Degli ultimi casi di Romagna (1846), in which he attacks the secular power of the papacy, but advises patient discussion in preference to secret societies and plots. I lutti di Lombardia (1848) was more outspoken: 'Ora io dico all'Italia: Rallegrati! . . . La tua causa è vinta!'. In 1849 he was appointed prime minister of Piedmont, which office he held until 1852, when he was succeeded by Cavour. His memoirs, I Miei Ricordi, are probably his best work.

Scritti e discorsi politici, ed. M. De Rubris (3 vols, 1931–38); I Miei Ricordi (posth. 1867), ed. C. Balsamo-Crivelli (1944).

N. Vaccalluzzo, M. D'Az. (2nd ed. 1930); P. E. Santangelo, M. D'Az. politico e moralista (1938). B.R.

De Amicis, EDMONDO (*Oneglia 31 X 1846; †Bordighera 11 III 1908), Italian novelist. His best known work is Cuore (1886), an excessively sentimental story for children, written in the form of a diary; it has been translated into more than twenty-five languages. De Amicis was a devoted disciple of Alessandro Manzoni and, a non-Tuscan, he spent many years trying to master Italian in accordance with Manzoni's views; L'idioma gentile (1905) sets forth his observations on the subject. La vita militare (1868), short stories based on his own experiences as a soldier, met with immediate success. His best short stories are Novelle (1872), but even these are not free from his persistent defect of moralizing. His interest in education is reflected in Il romanzo di un maestro (1890). He also wrote a number of travel books, among which Sull'Oceano (1889) is perhaps the most characteristic.

B. Croce, La letteratura della nuova Italia, I (3rd ed. 1929); M. Mosso, I tempi del 'Cuore' (1925); G. Mazzoni, 'L'opera di E. De A.', in Nuova Antologia (1932). B.R.

Decembrio, PIER CANDIDO (*Pavia 24 X 1392; †Milan 12 XI 1477), Italian humanist. He translated the classics for the princes whom he served in Milan, Naples and Ferrara. More interesting are his Latin biographies of Francesco Sforza and Filippo Maria Visconti. His correspondence includes letters to Humphrey, duke of Gloucester.

Opuscula historica, ed. A. Butti, F. Fossati, G. Petraglione, in Rerum Ital. Scriptores, 20 (new ed., 1925–40).

V. Rossi, Il Quattrocento (1949, with biblio.). C.Dr.

Decker, JEREMIAS DE (*Dordrecht VIII 1609; †Amsterdam 20 XII 1666), Dutch poet, grocer and broker. Self-taught, extremely modest, he published after the age of 40, simple occasional verse, epigrams and elegies. His finest effort is Goede Vrijdagh, ten scenes of Jesus' agony. He is pithy and critical. His Lof der Geldsucht is a satire inspired by Erasmus' Moriae Encomium.

M. Brouérius v. Nidek, Alle de Rijmoeffeningen van J. de D. (1726); K. H. de Raaf, 'J. de D.', in Nieuwe Gids, I (1912) and 'Rembrandt's portret van J. de D.', in Oud-Holland, XXX (1912); J. Karsemeyer, De dichter J. de D. (1934). A.M.B.W.

De Coster, CHARLES THEODORE HENRI (*Munich 20 VIII 1827; †Brussels 17 V 1879), Belgian novelist, once a bank clerk, then schoolmaster at the École Militaire, Brussels. An unhappy love affair with Eliza van Spruyt prompted the delicate romanticism of the Lettres à Eliza, but his main inspiration stemmed from an ardent attachment to the glories of Flanders. These he incorporated into his masterpiece, Thyl Ulenspiegel, a superbly colourful modern version of the picaresque novel, written in a deliberately archaic style and glowing with rich imagery.

Les Légendes Flamandes (1858); Les Contes Brabançons (1861); La Légende et les Aventures héroiques, joyeuses et glorieuses d'Ulenspiegel et de Lamee Goedzak au pays de Flandres et ailleurs (1867; tr. A. R. Macdougall, 1943).

J. Hanse, C. De C. et son œuvre (1928). B.M.W.

Dedekind, FRIEDRICH (*Neustadt a.d. Leine c. 1525; †Lüneburg 27 II 1598), German satirist. Whilst studying at Wittenberg he wrote the Latin satirical poem Grobianus, which immediately became popular throughout Europe. Deriving from an episode in Brant's Narrenschiff it satirizes the coarseness of the age most effectively. Dedekind also wrote two plays in German and some Latin verse, all mediocre.

Grobianus (1549–52), ed. A. Bömer (1903); Scheit's Ger. version (1551), ed. M. Matthiessen (1921), The Schoole of Slovenrie, tr. R. F. (1605); Der christliche Ritter (1576); Papista conversus (1596).

F. Bergmeier, Dedekinds Grobianus in England (Diss. Greifswald, 1903); A. Schuster, 'Leben und Wirken Dedekinds', in Hannover. Geschichtsbll., II (1899). D.G.D.

De Ferrariis, ANTONIO (*Galatona 1444; †Gallipoli 12 XI 1517), Italian doctor and humanist known as 'Il Galateo'. Spent his life in the service of the house of Aragon yet his treatise De educatione is interesting for its anti-Spanish attitude.

Opuscoli editi et inediti, ed. S. Grande, in Collana d. scritt. di Terra d'Otranto, 2–4, 18, 22.

B. Croce, Poeti e scrittori del pieno e tardo Rinascimento, I (1945, with biblio.). C.Dr.

Defoe, DANIEL, born Foe, assumed Defoe c. 1703 (*Cripplegate c. 1660; ∞1684 Mary Tuffley; †Moorgate 26 IV 1731), English novelist, journalist and pamphleteer. The son of dissenting parents and failing at trade in an age when universities and learned professions were barred to him, Defoe early sought a living with his pen and continued in the arena of political pamphleteering and journalism until he was almost sixty. Through his bewildering output and allegiances of these years runs an inner consistency of service to moderation and good sense, whether he be interpreting King William's policy (Standing Army . . . 1698, Two Great Questions . . . 1700), attacking the racial prejudices of his countrymen (True Born Englishman, 1701), striking a blow for dissenters (Shortest Way with Dissenters, 1702, a piece of mockery for which he found himself in pillory: though, true journalist, he improved the occasion by having his Hymn to the Pillory (1703) sold during his exposure there), acting as secret agent to Harley and popularizing ministerial policy in weekly Review (1704–13), or engaging in dubious crypto-editing of Mist's Journal (c. 1717). With the publication of Robinson Crusoe (1719) began Defoe's great period of fictitious narratives written with a richness of circumstantial detail and sobriety of language that make an overwhelming impression of reality. Into the last years of his life he crowded Captain Singleton (1720), Moll Flanders (1722), Journal of the Plague Year (1722), History of Colonel Jack (1722), Roxana (1724), and many others—works which won him the love of a vast new unlettered reading public who suspected as little as did his critics that these books were 'literature'.

Essay upon Projects (1697); Argument shewing that a Standing Army, with consent of Parliament, is not Inconsistent with a Free Government (1698); Giving Alms no Charity (1704); Apparition of Mrs Veal (1706); Jure Divino (1706); History of the Union (1709); Memoirs of Daniel Williams (1718); Life and Strange Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe of York, Mariner (1719); Further Adventures of Robinson Crusoe (1719); Life and Adventures of Duncan Campbell (1720); Memoirs of a Cavalier (1720); Serious Reflections during Life and Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe (1720); The Supernatural Philosopher, or the Mysteries of Magick (1720); The Fortunate Mistress: Roxana (1724); Robberies, Escapes, etc. of Jack Sheppard (1724); A Tour Thro' the whole Island of Great Britain (3 vols, 1724–26); Account of Jonathan Wild (1725); The Compleat English Tradesman (1725); Political History of the Devil (1726).—Romances and Narratives, ed. G. A. Aitken (16 vols, 1895–96); Novels and Selected Writings (14 vols, 1927–28).

G. Chalmers, Life (1790); W. Wilson, Life and Times (1830); W. Lee, Life and Newly-Discovered Writings of Daniel Defoe (1st vol. contains biblio., 1869); P. Dottin, D. et ses Romans (3 vols, 1924). R.M.H.

De Forest, JOHN WILLIAM (*Seymour, Conn. 31 V 1826; ∞1856 Harriet Shepard; †New Haven, Conn. 17 VII 1906), American short-story writer, novelist. His novels show vigorous objectivity and skilful character portrayal, but were never popular. Most notable is Miss Ravenel's Conversion from Secession to Loyalty (1867), his realistic novel of the civil war.

History of the Indians of Connecticut (1851); Honest John Vane (1875); A Volunteer's Adventures (1946).

H. E. Starr, 'J. W. De F.', in Dict. Amer. Biog. (1930). H.L.C.

Dei, BENEDETTO (*Florence 4 III 1418; †ibid. 2 VIII 1492), Italian historian. A colourful personality who had travelled in Africa and Asia as well as serving the Medici in Florence, Dei wrote a Cronaca and Memorie Storiche which are full of lively information.

M. Pisani, Un avventuriero del Quattrocento. La vita e le opere di B. D. (1923, extracts from the Cronaca MS. in Florence). C.Dr.

Deken, AGATHA (*Amstelveen 10 XII 1741; †The Hague 13 IX 1804), Dutch novelist, collaborated with Elisabeth Wolff-Bekker. Independently she wrote religious poetry and children's rhymes.

Stichte lyke Gedichten (1775; with M. Bosch); Liederen voor de Boerenstand (1804).

J. Dyserinck, Brieven van B. W. en A. D. (1904); H. C. M. Ghijsen, in De Gids, 86 and 87 (1922 and 1923). J.W.W.

Dekker, Eduard Douwes: see Multatuli.

Dekker, Thomas (*London 1572; †1632), English playwright and pamphleteer. Satirized in Jonson's The Poetaster as Fannius, 'a botcher of plays', Dekker had a hand in the writing of about 44 plays, most of which are lost. Henslowe's records prove that he had begun his career by 1598, and he subsequently collaborated with Rowley, Middleton, Webster, Massinger and Ford. His voluminous work as a pamphleteer began about 1603, though he was imprisoned as a debtor by the King's Bench from 1613 until 1619. He was probably the Thomas Dekker buried at Clerkenwell in 1632.

The plays which Dekker wrote or helped to write range in theme from the fabliau, the folk tale and topical satire to the chronicle, religious allegory and domestic tragedy. Citizen comedy, however, was his most distinctive contribution to drama. His representation of the everyday life, the patriotism, and the romantic aspirations of the shoemaking fraternity in The Shoemaker's Holiday exhibit his homely realism, genial humour and unforced pathos at their best.

Dekker's prose pamphlets contain realistic descriptions of the plague, circumstantial satire of criminals and gallants, and a pervasive sympathy for the destitute which render them an inimitable and invaluable account of Jacobean London.

Plays: The Shoemaker's Holiday (1600), ed. J. R. Sutherland (1928); Old Fortunatus (1600), ed. O. Smeaton (1906); Satiro-mastix (1602), ed. J. H. Penniman (1903); The Honest Whore (pt I, 1604, pt II, with Middleton, 1630); West-ward Hoe (with Webster, 1607); The Whore of Babylon (1607); If It Be Not Good (1612); The Virgin Martir (with Massinger, 1622); Match Mee in London (1631); The Witch of Edmonton (with Ford and Rowley, 1658); The Dramatic Works of T. D., ed. R. H. Shepherd (4 vols, 1873).—Prose: The Wonderfull Yeare (1603); The Seven Deadly Sinnes of London (1606), ed. H. F. B. Brett-Smith (1922); The Dead Tearme (1608); The Belman of London (1608), ed. O. Smeaton (1905); Lanthorne and Candle-Light (1608), ed. O. Smeaton (1905); Foure Birds of Noahs Ark (1609), ed. F. P. Wilson (1904); The Guls Horne-Booke (1609), ed. R. B. McKerrow (1904); A Rod for Run-awayes (1625); The Plague Pamphlets of T. D., ed. F. P. Wilson (1925); Non-Dramatic Works of T. D., ed. A. B. Grosart (5 vols, 1884–86).

R. A. Small, The Stage-Quarrel between Jonson and the so-called Poetasters (Breslau, 1899); E. Rühl, Grobianus in England (Berlin, 1904); E. E. Stoll, 'The Influence of Jonson on D.', in Mod. Lang. Notes, 21 (1906); A. C. Swinburne, The Age of Shakespeare (1908); F. E. Pierce, The Collaboration of Webster and D. (1909); M. L. Hunt, T. D. (1911); F. Aydelotte, Elizabethan Rogues and Vagabonds (1913); A. H. Bullen, Elizabethans (1924); W. K. Chandler, 'The Sources of the Characters in The Shoemaker's Holiday', in Mod. Philol., 27 (1928); U. M. Ellis-Fermor, The Jacobean Drama (1936); W. J. Taylor, 'T. D. and the "Overburian" Characters', in Mod. Lang. Rev., 31 (1936). W.A.A.

De La Ramée, M. L.: see Ouida.

Delavigne, Jean François Casimir (*Le Havre 4 IV 1793; †Lyons 11 XII 1843), French poet and dramatist. Delavigne won recognition first as a patriotic poet under Napoleon, then as 'national poet' with Béranger, on the publication of Les Messéniennes (1816–22). He was elected to the French Academy in 1825. His fame rests on the historical dramas he produced under the July monarchy: Louis XI (1832), Les Enfants d'Édouard (1833), Charles VII (1843, an opera libretto), La Fille du Cid (1839).

Verse: Dithyrambe sur la naissance du Roi de Rome (1811).—Plays: L'École des Vieillards (1823); Marino Faliero (1829).—Œuvres complètes (1855).

A. Favrot, Étude sur D. (1894); F. Vuacheux, C. D. (1893). T.W.

Del Bene, Bartolomeo (*Florence 1514; †France after 1587), Italian poet. Spent most of his life at the French court. He wrote occasional verse and some odes which are interesting for their innovations in metre rather than for their poetic qualities.

Rime, ed. Poggiali (1799); Odi 28 di B. del B., ed. G. Carducci and S. Ferrari (1908, with short life and biblio.). C.Dr.

Delf, Dirc van (*Delft c. 1365), Dutch Dominican writer, the only doctor theologiae of his time in the Netherlands, court chaplain to duke Albrecht of Bavaria. He wrote a vast work on faith and customs, Tafel van den kersten ghelove, a cultural monument, excellent in both contents and form.

Tafel van den kersten ghelove, ed. L. M. Fr. Daniels (4 vols, 1937–39).

L. M. Fr. Daniels, Meester D. v. D. (1932). J.J.M.

Delicado (or Delgado), Francisco (early 16th century), Spanish novelist and publisher. He was an ecclesiastic who lived in Rome and Venice. Besides publishing an Amadís (1533) and a Primaleón (1534) in Venice, he wrote and published an Italianate imitation of La Celestina called La Lozana andaluza (1528).

the style of which is vivacious and popular, the subject-matter sometimes obscene.

Retrato de la Lozana andaluza, ed. Luis de Lara (1899). E.M.W.

Delille, JACQUES (*Aigueperse, Auvergne 22 VI 1738; †Paris 1 V 1813), French poet. A writer of eclectic tastes, he translated into similar alexandrines Virgil's Georgics (1769) and Aeneid (1804), Pope's Essay on Man and Milton's Paradise Lost (1805). His own works are long didactic and descriptive poems, showing much ingenuity in the detail, but flat in their total effect. On the threshold of the romantic period he contrived to describe nature unemotionally.

Les Jardins (1782); L'Homme des champs (1800); La Pitié (1803); L'Imagination (1806); Les Trois Règnes de la Nature (1809); La Conversation (1812).—Œuvres, ed. P. F. Tissot (1831–33).

L. Audiat, J. D. (1902). G.B.

Della Porta, GIAMBATTISTA (*Naples 1535; †ibid. 4 II 1615), Italian scientist and playwright. Precocious, versatile, uncritical and somewhat chaotic, his scientific curiosity was unlimited and his treatises range from witchcraft to the camera obscura. He also wrote comedies based on classical models, though the plots are sometimes modern and realistic, and always well constructed.

Le commedie, ed. V. Spampanato (1910–11).

B. Croce, I teatri di Napoli (3rd ed. 1927); I. Sanesi, La Commedia, I (1911); G. Gabrieli, 'Bibliografia di G. B. D. P.', in Rendiconti dell'Acc. dei Lincei (1932). C.Dr.

De Lolme, JOHN LOUIS (*Geneva c. 1740; †III 1807), Swiss writer of an enthusiastic work on the English constitution for which Isaac D'Israeli called him 'the English Montesquieu'.

Constitution de L'Angleterre (1771; Constitution of England, 1775; with life by C. Coote, 1807; with life by J. Macgregor, 1853); History of the Flagellants (in Eng., adapted from Abbé Boileau, 1777); British Empire in Europe (in Eng., 1787). R.M.H.

Deloney, THOMAS (*1543?; †1600), English balladist and novelist. Deloney was a silk weaver who became the chief ballad-writer of his day. His broadsides, sung to popular tunes, were topical, patriotic and anti-Catholic. In 1596, however, Deloney was in trouble for writing a ballad on the scarcity of corn and subsequently took up prose fiction. Developing the methods of the fabliau and the jestbook, he was the first English novelist to make effective fiction of everyday life, particularly that of weavers, shoemakers, and clothiers, though some of his episodes describe courtly and criminal characters. The Gentle Craft provided Dekker with the main plot of The Shoemaker's Holiday.

VERSE: Strange Histories (1602); Careano Calamitie (1618); The Garland of Good Will (1618).—PROSE: Jack of Newberie (1597); The Gentle Craft (2 pts, 1597–98); Thomas of Reading (1600).—The Works of T. D., ed. F. O. Mann (1912).

R. Sievers, 'T. D.', in Palaestra, 36 (1904); J. J. Jusserand, The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare (1899); H. E. Rollins, 'The Black-letter Broadside Ballad', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 34 (1919); E. A. Baker, History of the English Novel, II (1929). W.A.A.

'Delta': see MOIR, DAVID MACBETH.

Delvig, ANTON ANTONOVICH, BARON (*Moscow 6 VIII 1798; †St Petersburg 14 I 1831), Russian poet of the Pushkin 'pléiade' and editor (from 1825) of the important poetic miscellany Severnye tsvety and (from 1830) of Literaturnaya gazeta. His poetry was divided between stylized Russian songs modelled on folk-poetry and poems in the classical style: excellent idylls, epigrams, etc. He also wrote some fine sonnets. His output was small, but always on a high level.

Sochineniya (1893); Neizdannye stikhotvoreniya (1922).

I. N. Rozanov, Poety dvadtsatykh godov 19 veka (1925). See also the collections Russkaya poeziya 19 veka (1929) and Russkie poety 18–19 veka (1941). J.L.

Demades (fl. 350–319 B.C.), Athenian orator. Remembered for his powerful gift of extempore phrase, he left no writings (the fragment attributed to him being a forgery).

A. and M. Croiset, Histoire de la Littérature Grecque, IV (1947); J. F. Dobson, The Greek Orators (1919). J.H.K.

De Marchi, EMILIO (*Milan 31 VII 1851; †ibid. 6 II 1901), Italian novelist. De Marchi's best known, but by no means most characteristic, work is an entertaining mystery story entitled Il Cappello del prete (1888). His masterpiece, Demetrio Pianelli (1890), is considered one of the best modern Italian novels. De Marchi himself acknowledged Manzoni as his master, but there are important differences between them. De Marchi's view of life is fundamentally tragic and his works do not offer consolation. His humour, which has been termed Manzonian, is, on the contrary, of quite another kind, having its origin in unhappiness and serving to conceal emotion.

NOVELS: Arabella (1892); Giacomo l'Idealista (1897); Col fuoco non si scherza (1901).—

SHORT STORIES: Storie d'ogni colore (1885); Racconti (1891); Nuove Storie d'ogni Colore (1895).—VERSE: Vecchie cadenze e nuove (1889); Milanin Milanon (1902; dialect).

B. Croce, La letteratura della nuova Italia, III (3rd ed. 1929); N. Sammartano, E. De M. (1926); Vittore Branca, E. De M. (1946). B.R.

Demeter, DIMITRIJE (*Zagreb 21 VII 1811; †ibid. 24 VI 1872), Croat poet and playwright. Of Greek origin, he received a cosmopolitan education and practised as a doctor in Zagreb before deciding to devote himself wholly to letters. He played an important part in the creation of the Croatian theatre, his tragedy Teuta (1844), depicting the struggle of the ancient Illyrians against the Romans, being the first modern drama of patriotic inspiration. His susceptibility to German influence however limited his creative work and precipitated prolonged polemics with A. Šenoa.

Porin (libretto of opera, 1851). S.C.

Demetrius. The treatise 'On Style' is wrongly attributed to Demetrius of Phalerum (*c. 350 B.C.). It was written in the 1st century A.D. Much indebted to Aristotle and Theophrastus, it discusses first sentence-construction and then four types of style in Greek prose—elevated, elegant, plain and forcible.

Ed. W. Rhys Roberts (1902; with tr. and comm.). T.B.L.W.

Demetrius Cydones (†1400), Byzantine statesman and humanist. He wrote speeches, warnings exhorting the unity of Greeks and Latins against the Ottoman Turks, and also left a collection of letters. He knew some Latin and had translations made from Latin into Greek (e.g. from Aquinas' works).

Letters, ed. G. Cammelli (1930, with Fr. tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 154 (with Latin tr.). J.M.H.

Demetrius of Phalerum, Athens (c.* 350 B.C.), Greek philosopher, rhetorician and statesman. He was made governor of Athens by Cassander c. 317 and remained in office about ten years. In 297 he became librarian at Alexandria but fell into disgrace under Ptolemy Philadelphus and died in exile. He was a pupil of Theophrastus in the Peripatetic school. Cicero admired his scholarship, but he was more important as the last of the true Attic orators than as a philosopher.

F. Wehrli, Die Schule des Aristoteles, IV (1949).

J. F. Dobson, Greek Orators (1919); E. Bayer, Demetrius Phalereus (1942). D.J.F.

Demetrius of Rostov: see DMITRY ROSTOVSKY.

Democritus (*Abdera c. 460; †c. 370 B.C.), Greek philosopher, pupil of Leucippus. Ancient commentators failed to distinguish their individual contributions, and they can be treated together. They attempted to reconcile the monism of Parmenides and Zeno of Elea with the pluralism of Empedocles and Anaxagoras by postulating innumerable 'atoms' as the ultimate stuff of the universe: against Parmenides, they insisted on the existence of 'void' in which atoms might move; against Empedocles, they stripped the ultimate elements of all qualities except motion and shape. From an original 'whirl' of atoms all things come into being and differ in quality according to the shape, arrangement and position of the component atoms. Democritus added an elaborate theory of knowledge and some ethical reflections of less philosophical importance.

Plato does not mention the atomists, but Aristotle discusses their views at length. Epicurus adopted their theory, with modifications, for his own philosophy. It should be emphasized that Greek atomism was a metaphysical hypothesis, not a scientific discovery.

H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, 2 (6th ed. 1952; Ancilla to the Pre-Socratic Philosophers, tr. K. Freeman, 1948).

C. Bailey, Greek Atomists and Epicurus (1928); H. Weiss, 'D.'s Theory of Cognition', in Class. Quart., XXXII (1938); G. Vlastos, 'Ethics and Physics in D.', in Philos. Rev., 54 and 55 (1945, 1946). D.J.F.

Demosthenes (*Athens 384; †Calauria 322 B.C.), Athenian orator, perhaps the greatest of all orators, born to easy circumstances, but orphaned at the age of seven and peculated by his guardians, as soon as he came of age (366) proceeded against them, showing precocious talent in his court-speeches. He then became a speechwriter for the courts, but his political abilities led to his being employed (or lending his aid) in public cases as well as in private. His gift for political oratory was to find its main expression in his career of protagonist in the struggle between Athens and Philip of Macedon, the highlights being the series of Olynthiac and Philippic orations (351–341), delivered in the public assembly and expounding with masterly penetration the inner meaning of the struggle, painting indelibly the subtlety of Philip as seen against the apathy and desultoriness of contemporary Athens, and passionately exhorting the latter to live up to her great ideals. In 340 Demosthenes was entrusted with the whole conduct of Athenian policies. But it was too late to organize effective opposition to Macedon, and the Greeks were irrevocably defeated at Chaeronea (338). However, when Demosthenes' past policy was challenged by the pro-Macedonian Aeschines, he defended it so eloquently by his speech On the Crown (330) that he entirely discredited his opponent. Later he was himself discredited and went into exile (324), having been convicted of receiving a bribe from Harpalus, Alexander's renegade lieutenant, but returned in 323 to organize a last resistance to Antipater, committing suicide when this was unsuccessful.

Sixty-one speeches (of which at least twenty, though none of the great ones, are spurious) survive besides a collection of exordia and six (almost certainly spurious) letters. The private speeches are of great interest for Athenian law and manners and reveal his genius not much less than the public speeches.

Appreciation of Demosthenes depends, more perhaps than that of any other prose-writer, upon reading him in the original, since his effect is inextricably bound up with sound and word-order. Yet he is far from the measured, self-conscious artistry of Isocrates. He had all the latter's devices at command and, like him, writes on the whole in the broad periodic style, but is often also terse. Style with Demosthenes is strictly a medium for imparting matter, logical argument and emotion. Although he knew himself to be a great artist, he has left no works written purely for artistic pleasure. Conscious of the supreme urgency of what he had to say in a critical period of his country's history, he allowed this very urgency to find, by the sure instinct of a great verbal master, the forms in which to express it. He wins transcendent effects of persuasion, of indignation, of narrative intensity—as in the famous description of the arrival at Athens of the news of Philip's capture of Elatea (Crown § 169 ff.)—by the inspired selection and arrangement of simple words. Because his style is so much the reflection of what he was himself, it is (unlike Cicero's) not a universal medium of literary expression (he has no gaiety, little pity, and substitutes sarcasm for wit); it changes from moment to moment following the twists and turns of his argument or his passion, but always sweeps the reader along with it, both by its noble sincerity and by its power of verbal suggestion. Though some contemporaries 'smelt the lamp' in Demosthenes' magic, he became for the later Greeks the supreme example, together with Homer and Plato, of the inspired genius, towering above the cultivated talent of others.

Ed. S. H. Butcher and W. Rennie (3 vols, 1903–31; repr. 1938); ed. F. Blass (ed. maior, 4th ed., 3 vols, 1887–1927; in parts rev. by C. Fuhr and J. Sykutris, 1914–37); Harangues, ed. M. Croiset (2 vols, 1924; with Fr. tr.); Plaidoyers Politiques, ed. G. Mathieu (1945 ff., with Fr. tr.); ed. C. A. and J. H. Vince, N. W. and N. J. De Witt (Loeb Libr., 1926 ff.).

Tr.: Lord Brougham (Crown, rev. ed. 1893); A. W. Pickard-Cambridge (Public Orations, 2 vols, 1912); C. R. Kennedy (Crown, Philippics and Ten other Orations, in Everyman Library, 1915; Complete Works, in Bohn, 5 vols, 1893–97).

Longinus, On the Sublime (especially ch. 12 and 16–20: unsurpassed literary criticism); A. Schaefer, D. und seine Zeit (3 vols, 2nd ed., 1885–87); J. F. Dobson, The Greek Orators (1919); A. W. Pickard-Cambridge, D. and the Last Days of Greek Freedom (1914); P. Cloché, D. et la fin de la démocratie athénienne (1937); W. Jaeger, D. The Origin and Growth of his Policy (1938). J.H.K.

Dene, EDEWAERD DE (*Bruges 1505; †ibid. c. 1578), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition (mottoes: 'Edelick bewaerd de redene' and 'Rasch up ende hene'), was a clerk at the law courts. Reformed from a loose life, he became factor of the Chamber of Rhetoric 'De Drie Santinnen' at Bruges and the outstanding local poet. His chief work is the Testament Rhetoricael (25,000 verses, mainly unpublished). In addition we have his De Warachtighe Fabulen der Dieren (captions to copper plates, described by Vondel in the Vorstelycke Warande der Dieren, 1617). In 1562 he edited De Roovere's Rhetoricale Wercken, the first aesthetic anthology. His plays and pageants are lost.

L. Scharpé, in Het Belfort (1895) and Leuv. Bijdr. (1900); G. Degroote, in Leuv. Bijdr. (1942) and Den Gulden Passer (1943 and 1947). J.J.M.

Denham, SIR JOHN (*Dublin 1615; ∞London 25 VI 1634 Anne Cotton, ∞ibid. 25 V 1665 Margaret Brooke; †London 10 III 1668/9), English courtier poet and dramatist who won fame with his tragedy The Sophy, acted at Blackfriars and Court (1641, publ. 1642). At Trinity College, Oxford (1631) and Lincoln's Inn (1634) he led a wild life which inspired his Anatomy of Play. High sheriff for Surrey (1642), Denham fought in the west (1645–46). He attended prince Charles and Henrietta Maria in France (1648), returning to England in 1652. As surveyor-general he arranged for the paving of London. Famous as a couplet-writer, he combined description and contemplation in the felicitous Cooper's Hill (1642). B.L.J.

The Destruction of Troy (1656); Poetical Works, ed. T. H. Banks (1928).
S. Johnson, Lives of the poets, I, ed. G. B. Hill (1905). J.R.B.

Denis, King of Portugal: see Diniz.

Denis, Johann Nepomuk Cosmas Michael, pseud. 'Sined der Barde' (*Schärding 27 IX 1729; †Vienna 29 IX 1800), Austrian poet. Denis was a Jesuit who taught for some years in schools. From 1786 he was at the court library, becoming its director in 1791. In his poetry Denis followed Klopstock's bardic manner. His translation of Ossian into German hexameters was widely read.

Die Gedichte Ossians (1768–69); Die Lieder Sineds des Barden (1772).
P. Hofmann von Wellenhof, M. D. (1881). H.B.G.

Denis Piramus, 12th-century Anglo-Norman poet. A monk of Bury St Edmunds, he wrote a life of the abbey's royal patron saint (1180 ?), after writing courtly lyrics in youth.

La Vie seint Edmund le rei, ed. H. Kjellman (1935). M.F.L.

Denisot, Nicolas (*Le Mans 1515; †Paris 1559), French painter and poet, of English extraction. He spent three years in London as tutor to the daughters of the protector Somerset. In France he was an early and influential member of Ronsard's group.

Noëls (1545); Livre de prières (n.d.); Treize cantiques (1553).
C. Jugé, N. D. du Mans (1907). G.B.

Dennie, Joseph (*Boston 30 VIII 1768; †Philadelphia 7 I 1812), American essayist and editor. Called the 'Addison of the United States', this Harvard man edited Port Folio and drew around him a circle of friends devoted to high literary purpose.

The Lay Preacher; or, Short Sermons for Idle Readers (1796); Desultory Reflections on the New Political Aspects of Public Affairs (1800).
H. M. Ellis, J. D. and His Circle (1915). H.L.C.

Dennis, John (*London 1657; †ibid. 6 I 1733/4), English critic and poet, deservedly better remembered for his criticism than his verse. From Caius College, Cambridge he went to Trinity Hall (1680), visited France and Italy (1688), entered, on his return, the circle of fashionable writers of Mulgrave, Dryden and Congreve and became a frequenter of Will's Coffee House. His fortune spent, he turned to the pen, then, patronized by Marlborough, became a royal waiter in the Port of London. His tragedies and comedies were performed without great success. Despite his feud with Pope and differences with Addison and Steele, Dennis seems to have been a man of vigorous and religious mind whose acute critical faculty was not blunted even by friendship. An early admirer of Milton, Dennis defended Dryden's posthumous fame. His critical writings and prefaces show a coherent attitude to literature with a sound appreciation of what constitutes poetic imagination, even if his insistence upon poetic justice is too rigid.

Plays: A Plot and No Plot (1697); Rinaldo and Armida (1699); Iphigenia (1700); Liberty Asserted (1704). Gibraltar (1705); Orpheus and Eurydice. A Masque (1707); Appius and Virginia (1709); The Invader of His Country (Coriolanus adapted, 1720).—Miscellany Poems (1697).—Letters upon Several Occasions (1696).
Criticism: Letters on Milton and Congreve (1696); Advancement and Reformation of Poetry (1701); Grounds of Criticism in Poetry (1704); Genius and Writings of Shakespeare (2 vols, 1721).—E. N. Hooker, The Critical Works of J. D. (1939–43).
H. G. Paul, J. D. (1911; incl. full biblio.); F. S. Tupper, 'Notes on the Life of J. D.', in Eng. Lit. Hist., 5 (1938). B.L.J.

De Quincey, Thomas (*Greenheys, Manchester 15 VIII 1785; ∞1816 Margaret Simpson; †Edinburgh 8 XII 1859), English essayist and critic. The son of a prosperous merchant, De Quincey had an early self-inflicted encounter with poverty and squalor when he ran away from school and roamed Wales and London. Later he lived in Grasmere in happy domesticity—in spite of his wildness—and in close contact with the Lake poets (of whom his recollections are entertaining but not reliable). Most of his essays appeared first in periodicals—most original are his detailed reports of the experiences of opium-eating. His less familiar literary criticism is sound and penetrating.

Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (The London Magazine, Sept.–Oct. 1821); The Confessions of an Opium-Eater, ed. R. Garnett (1855); Klosterheim; or, The Masque (1832); The Logic of Political Economy (1844); Recollections of the Lake Poets, ed. E. Sackville-West (1946).—Collected Writings, ed. D. Masson (14 vols, 1889–90); Selected Writings of T. de Q., ed. P. van Doren Stern (1937).
D. Masson, De Q. (1881); A. H. Japp, T. de Q. (2nd ed. 1890); M. Elwin, T. de Q. (1935); E. Sackville-West, A Flame in Sunlight (1936); H. A. Eaton, T. de Q. (1936). B.H.

Dermody, Thomas (*Ennis, Co. Clare I 1775; †Sydenham, Kent 15 VII 1802), Irish poet. Of precocious talent, Dermody ran away from his father's school to Dublin; enlisted in the British army and served with distinction. Dissipation hastened his early death.

Selected Poems (1792); The Harp of Erin (1807; complete poems).
James G. Raymond, Life of D. (1806). R.McH.

De' Rossi (Min ha-Adummim), Azariah (*Mantua 1513; †Ferrara 1578), Italian Hebrew historian and poet. Of noble family, he was the first medieval Jew to bring outside literature to bear on the elucidation of Jewish history in his Me'or 'Enayim (1574), which deals with Bible translations, chronology and archaeology. It shocked the orthodox, but was well received by Christian scholars.

Shirim (Venice, n.d.).
S. Baron, 'A. de R.'s Attitude to Life', in Israel Abrahams Memorial Volume (1927), 'La méthode historique d'Azaria de Rossi', in Revue des Études Juives, 86, 87 (1928, 1929). C.R.

Déroulède, Paul (*Paris 2 IX 1846; †Nice 30 I 1914), French poet and dramatist. Déroulède served in the war of 1870. Later, he supported General Boulanger, and was twice elected to Parliament (1889 and 1898). He founded the Ligue des Patriotes and in 1900 was exiled on a charge of having plotted against the state. He drew no distinction between literature and political activity. In his enthusiasms, his intellectual excesses and a curious childishness, he typifies that reactionary militarism which from 1870 to 1914 dreamed of revenge.

Verse: Chants de Soldat (1872; new ed. 1888); Pro Patria (1879); Marches et Sonneries (1881); Refrains militaires (1889); Chants du paysan (1894); Poésies militaires (1896).—Plays: Juan Strener (1869); La Moabite (1881); Messire Du Guesclin (1896); La mort de Hoche (1897).—Various: Pages françaises (1909); Qui vive? France quand même (1883; new ed. 1910).
J. and J. Tharaud, La vie et la mort de P. D. (1914). M.G.; J.P.R.

Derzhavin, Gavriil Romanovich (*Kazan 3 VII 1743; †St Petersburg 8 VII 1816), Russian poet, was of petty gentry origin, but reached the highest posts in the civil service and won uncontested recognition for his poetry. Following in the steps of Lomonosov, he yet burst the poetic conventions of his time by blending his colour sense with a most sweeping baroque imagery. His hauntingly sonorous ode on the death of Prince Meshchersky in particular is regarded as one of the great poems in the Russian language. Yet he tempered the somewhat barbaric magnificence of his muse by roguish humour as in his Felitsa, addressed to Catherine II. He moreover wrote a number of anacreontic poems, combining common sense with the simple joys of life. Apart from Kantemir, Derzhavin was the only 18th-century Russian poet to become known abroad, even in China and Japan. His plays are bad, but he left valuable memoirs.

Sochineniya (9 vols, 1864–83); Russkaya poeziya, I, ed. S. A. Vengerov (1894).
Y. Grot, Zhizn' Derzhavina (2 vols, 1880–83); N. Valzenberg, D. (1916); L. Khodasevich, Statyi o Russkoy poezii (1922); B. Eichenbaum, Skvoz' literaturu (1924); G. Gukovsky, Russkaya poeziya XVIII veka (1927). J.L.

De Sanctis, Francesco (*Avellino 28 III 1817; †Naples 19 XII 1883), the most influential Italian critic of the 19th century. He was the founder of the aesthetic school of criticism, as opposed to the scientific and historical school, and his famous Storia della letteratura italiana, as well as his numerous Saggi critici, have dominated Italian literary scholarship for nearly a century. His Storia is a series of opinions and suggestive generalizations, referring to significant periods and works. His synthetical, as opposed to analytical, methods of criticism can be easily abused.

Opere complete, ed. N. Cortese (1930 ff.).
B. Croce, Gli scritti di F. De S. e la loro varia fortuna (1917), 'La Critica', XXI (1923); L. Russo, F. De S. e la cultura napoletana (1928). B.R.

Des Autels, Guillaume (*Manoir de Vernoble, Saône-et-Loire 1529; †1581 ?), French poet, a cousin of P. de Tyard and one of Ronsard's group. His best work is in his early odes and sonnets (1550–53). He opposed the contemporary spelling reformers, imitated Rabelais' prose and abandoned literature at thirty.

Verse: Le Repos de plus grand travail (1550, 1551); L'Amoureux repos (1553); Remonstrance au peuple françois (1559).—Prose: L'Ancien orthographe françois (1548); Préhistoire barragouine de Fanfreluche et Gaudichon (1559), ed. A. Veinant (1850).
'G. Colletet, G. des A.', crit. ed. A. Van Bever, in Rev. de la Renaissance, 7 (1906). G.B.

Desbordes-Valmore, Marceline, née Desbordes (*Douai 30 VI 1786; ∞1817 François-Prosper Lanchantin, known as Valmore; †Paris 23 VII 1859), French poet, singer and actress. She was unhappy in her childhood and her marriage, and suffered much from her hopeless passion for Henri de Latouche. Her verses have a moving, simple quality, in the strongly personal tradition of Lamartine. Her work had some influence on Verlaine.

Elégies et romances (1819); Poésies (1820); Les Pleurs (1833); Pauvres fleurs (1839); Bouquets et prières (1843).—Œuvres complètes (3 vols, 1886–87).

C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Madame D.-V. (1870); J. Bouloyer, M. D.-V. (1909; new ed. 1926); S. Zweig, M. D.-V. (1928). M.G.; J.P.R.

Descartes, RENÉ (*La Haye, Touraine 31 III 1596; †Stockholm 11 II 1650), French philosopher. Educated at the Jesuit college at La Flèche, Descartes took up a military career, travelled widely outside France, then settled in Holland (1628–49). There he pursued his long-meditated plan of elaborating a philosophical system which would lead to proof of the existence of God. His Discours de la méthode (1637) sets out his predominantly mathematical method of distinguishing truth from falsehood and contains the famous postulate 'I think, therefore I exist'. Treatises, originally in Latin, followed on metaphysics (Méditations métaphysiques, 1641) and on the physical universe (Principes de la philosophie, 1644) which most orthodox Catholics accepted. But becoming suspect to the Dutch universities, Descartes accepted queen Christina of Sweden's invitation to go to Stockholm, where he died of pleurisy in his first winter.

The clarity and logic of the Cartesian method of reasoning harmonized with French thought and literary theory in the 17th century. Later, it acquired a destructive power in the hands of anti-authoritarian rationalists.

Discours de la méthode, ed. E. Gilson (1925), ed. Alain (1927), ed. J. Benda (1948); Correspondence with Constantijn Huygens, 1635–47, ed. L. Roth (1926); Correspondance, ed. C. Adam and G. Milhaud (1936 ff.).—Œuvres, ed. C. Adam and P. Tannery (13 vols, 1897–1913, basic ed.); Œuvres et Lettres, ed. A. Bridoux (1937, sel.); Philosophical Writings, tr. N. Kemp Smith (1953).

G. Lanson, 'L'Influence de la philosophie cartésienne sur la litt. franç.', in Rev. de Mét. et de Morale (1896); E. S. Haldane, D., his life and times (1905); J. Maritain, Le Songe de D. (1932); L. Brunschvicg, D. (1937); C. Adam, D. (1937); J. Boorsch, Etat présent des études sur D. (1937); J. Laporte, Le Rationalisme de D. (1945); N. Kemp Smith, New Studies in the Philosophy of D. (1953). G.B.

Deschamps, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS MARIE, known as ANTONY (*Paris 12 III 1800; †Passy 29 X 1869), French poet, the 'Verlaine of romanticism'. The brilliant younger brother of Émile Deschamps, he fell a prey to madness at the age of 40. He produced a remarkable translation of Dante's Divine Comedy (1829) and gave expression to his tormented spirit in two collections of lyrics, Dernières Paroles (1835) and Résignation (1839).

Les Italiennes (1831); Satires (1834); Etudes sur l'Italie (1835). M.G.; J.P.R.

Deschamps, ÉMILE (*Bourges 20 II 1791; †Versailles V 1871), French writer. Émile Deschamps was a civil servant who in collaboration with Victor Hugo founded La Muse Française, the organ of the young romantic movement, of which he was an ardent supporter. He made a reputation in the theatre with Le Tour de Faveur (1818) and published in the periodical press a great deal of criticism, a number of translations, and some brilliant but superficial original verse. He also wrote opera libretti.

Ode Patriotique (1812); Selmours de Florian (1818); Ivanhoé (1826); Études françaises et étrangères (1828); Don Juan (1834); Stradella (1837).—Œuvres complètes (4 vols, 1872–73).

H. Girard, Un Bourgeois dilettante à l'époque romantique, E. D. (2 vols, 1921). M.G.; J.P.R.

Deschamps, EUSTACHE (*Vertus, nr Châlons-sur-Marne 1346?; †1406?), French poet. He was brought up by Guillaume de Machaut and joined the royal household in 1368.

Machaut's most important pupil, he developed his master's innovations. Most of his verse is written in the courtly tradition, and much of it is didactic in tone, but he is constantly introducing events from his own experience, which he often treats with stark realism. He is a master of the short poetic forms, particularly the ballade, but his excessive technical preoccupations tend to cramp his poetic inspiration.

Œuvres complètes, ed. Queux de Saint-Hilaire and G. Raynaud (11 vols, 1878–1904; vol. II contains an excellent study).

E. Hoepffner, E. D., Leben und Werke (1904). A.H.D.

Desclot, BERNAT, 13th-century author of one of the four great Catalan chronicles. Desclot's work covers the reigns of James I and Peter I of Catalonia; the latter, with his conquest of Sicily (1281) and the successful defence of his country against the French, stands out as the hero of the book. Although the chronicle shows that Desclot was at the royal court and had access to official documents, nothing is known of him. It has been suggested that he is to be identified with one of the royal secretaries, later treasurer, one Bernat Escrivà whose ancestral home was at Es Clot in Roussillon. If this is so, he was born c. 1225–30 and died c. 1288. Internal criticism has shown that the text contains prose versions of older epic poems now lost. The narrative, however, is objective, with a precise chronology and great wealth of detail. J.M.B. i R.

Deshoulières, ANTOINETTE, née Du Ligier de La Garde (*Paris I? 1638; ∞Guillaume Deshoulières; †Paris 17 II 1694), French poet. Her pastoral and religious poems, though conventional, show a personal melancholy unusual for the period. They were published by her daughter, Antoinette-Thérèse Deshoulières (1662–1718), also a poet. She supported Pradon in the cabal against Racine's Phèdre (1677). Her tragedy Genséric (1680) was once attributed to the duke of Nevers.

Œuvres de Mme et de Mlle D. (1695, 1747); Œuvres choisies, ed. M. de Lescure (1882).
C. A. de Sainte-Beuve, Portraits de femmes (1892); Favre, La Jeunesse de Fléchier (1882). G.B.

Desmarets de Saint-Sorlin, JEAN (*Paris 1595; †ibid. 28 X 1676), French writer. He was the first chancellor of the French Academy and filled several important state administrative posts. In middle age he became fanatically religious, urged a holy war on heretics and campaigned against the Jansenists. Desmarets insisted that French literature should be based on Christian themes, not on the Greeks and Latins.

NOVEL: Ariane (10 vols, 1632).—VERSE: Clovis ou la France chrétienne (1657, 1673); Marie Magdeleine (1669); Esther (1670).—PLAYS: Ariane (1639); Les Visionnaires (1637, comedy); Mirame (1640); Scipion l'Africain (n.d.); Roxane (n.d.).—CRITICISM: prefaces to Clovis (1657, 1673); Défense du poème héroïque (1674); Défense de la poésie et de la langue française (1675).
R. Kerviler, D. de S.-S. (1879). G.B.

Des Masures, LOUIS (*Tournai c. 1515; †c. 1574), French poet. Converted to Protestantism c. 1550, he wrote a trilogy of religious plays on David, influenced by T. de Bèze's Abraham sacrifiant and partly assimilable to the Mystery plays, but of an embryonic interest in the history of French tragedy.

David combattant, David triomphant, David fugitif (all 1563), ed. C. Comte as Tragédies Saintes (1907).
R. Lebègue, La Tragédie religieuse en France (1929). G.B.

Desmoulins, LAURENT (fl. 1511), French poet. A priest of Chartres, he wrote a visionary poem in which the dead recount their miseries and vices—Le Cymetière des malheureux or Le Catholicon des mal advisez (1511); banal in substance, the satire has some force and clarity.

Short extract in Les Poètes Français, I, ed. E. Crépet (1887). M.Y.

Des Périers, BONAVENTURE (*Arnay-le-Duc c. 1510; †1544), French humanist and story writer. His short prose stories, the Nouvelles récréations et joyeux devis (1558), recall the licentious realism of the medieval fabliaux, while reflecting 16th-century manners. He made a veiled but violent attack on the Christian religion in the four satirical dialogues of the Cymbalum mundi (1537). This, like his Prognostication des prognostications (1537), was burnt by the public hangman. Des Périers himself escaped, thanks to the protection of Marguerite d'Angoulême whose secretary he was.

Les Nouvelles récréations et joyeux devis, ed. P. L. Jacob (1843, repub. 1932).—Œuvres, ed. L. Lacour (2 vols, 1856).
P. A. Becker, B. des P. (Vienna, 1924); L. Febvre, Origène et Des P. ou l'énigme du Cymbalum Mundi (1942). G.B.

Desportes, PHILIPPE (*Chartres 1547; †ibid. 5 X 1606), French poet. He succeeded Ronsard as the favourite court poet of Henri III and Henri IV. His verse in general debased and prettified the Pléiade tradition, drawing heavily on the Italian imitators of Petrarch in its conventionalized expression of love. After 1580 he composed firmer and graver religious poetry, particularly a famous verse rendering of the Psalms.

Premières œuvres (1573–83, secular poems), ed. A. Michiels (1858); Psaumes (1591–1603).—Part. crit. eds, H. Vaganay, Les Amours d'Hippolyte (1925) and Les XLI Chansons (1925), J. Lavaud, Imitations de l'Arioste (1936).
J. Lavaud, P. D. (1936). G.B.

Despréaux: see BOILEAU, N.

Des Roches, MADELEINE (*Poitiers c. 1530; †ibid. 1587) and CATHERINE (*Poitiers c. 1555; †ibid. 1587), French poets, mother and daughter. They held a salon at Poitiers, published jointly three volumes of miscellaneous verse and prose, and died of plague on the same day. The sight of a flea on Catherine's throat inspired La Puce de Madame des Roches (1582), a collection of laudatory verses in French, Italian, Latin and Greek by various hands which Estienne Pasquier assembled and published.

Œuvres (1578–79), Secondes Œuvres (1583); Lettres Missives (1586), collective ed. (1604).—La Puce de Madame des Roches, repub. Jouaust (1868).

L. Feugère, Les Femmes poètes au 16e siècle (1860); A. H. Schutz, 'The Group of the Dames Des R.', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. of America (1933). G.B.

Destouches, PHILIPPE NÉRICAULT (*Tours IV 1680; †Fortoiseau 4 VII 1754), French dramatist. He wrote some 25 comedies of character, all somewhat conventional and showing a propensity to moralize. He spent 6 years in London on a diplomatic mission (1717–23) and was probably the first Frenchman to translate scenes from Shakespeare, not, however, acted (see DUCIS).

Le Curieux Impertinent (1710); L'Ingrat (1712); L'Irrésolu (1713); Le Médisant (1715); Le Philosophe marié (1727); L'Envieux (1727); Le Glorieux (1732); Le Dissipateur (1736).—Œuvres complètes (6 vols, 1822).

P. Bonnefon, 'N. D. intime', in Rev. d'Hist. Litt. (1907, with biblio.). G.B.

Deus, JOÃO DE: see RAMOS, JOÃO DE DEUS.

De Vere, AUBREY (*Curragh Chase, Co. Limerick 1814; †ibid. 1902), Irish poet; friend of Wordsworth, Landor, Tennyson, Newman. He was a prolific poet who is remembered mainly for his poems on Irish historical themes and on religious subjects. His work is careful and graceful but lacks fire.

Poems (1855); Innisfail (1862); Mediaeval Records and Sonnets (1893).

Wilfrid Ward, A. de V., a Memoir (1904). R.McH.

De Vere, SIR AUBREY T. (*Curragh Chase, Co. Limerick 28 VIII 1788; ∞c. 1808 Mary, sister of Lord Monteagle; †ibid. 28 VII 1846), Irish poet, father of Aubrey de Vere. He wrote sonnets and verse dramas.

VERSE: A Song of Faith (1842); Julian the Apostate (1822).—VERSE DRAMAS: The Duke of Mercia (1823); Mary Tudor (1847; repub. 1884, with memoir by Aubrey de Vere). R.McH.

Devereux, ROBERT, 2nd EARL OF ESSEX (*Netherwood, Herefordshire? 10 XI 1566; ∞IV 1590 Frances Sidney; †London 25 II 1600/1), English nobleman, considered equal to the best poets in about 1588; executed for rebellion.

Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (1872).

G. B. Hamion, The Life and Death of Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex (1937). B.L.J.

Devereux, WALTER, 1st EARL OF ESSEX (c.* 1541; ∞c. 1561–62 Lettice Knollys; †Dublin 22 IX 1576), English courtier who wrote verse. He commanded the English forces in Ulster without permanent success and was earl marshal of Ireland.

The Poems of . . . Walter, Earl of Essex, etc., ed. A. B. Grosart (1872).

W. B. Devereux, The Devereux Earls of Essex, I (1853). B.L.J.

Dez-Coll, BERNAT, 14th-century Catalan chronicler. See PETER III.

Deželić, DJURO (*Ivanić-grad 25 III 1838; †Zagreb 28 X 1907), Croat novelist and short-story writer, worked in Zagreb as a civil servant and journalist. His works embrace varied themes from many parts of Yugoslavia; Zuleika (1890), a romantic story of Moslem Bosnia; Marjan Marković (1900), a study of life in Slavonia; Medvedgradski Duh (1868), a historical novel of medieval Zagreb; Burzanci (1885). He was also one of the first Croat writers to cultivate the art of biography. S.C.

Dežman, IVAN (*Fiume 6 V 1841; †Zagreb 24 X 1873), Croat poet, worked as a doctor in Zagreb. He wrote epic poems, ambitious in scope but not of great literary excellence, on themes from Croat history; Smrt Grofa Josipa Rabate (1861), dealing with the rising of the Uskoks of Senj; Smiljan i Koviljka (1865), a romantic epic in 12 cantos; Zrinski (1869), a cycle of 24 poems celebrating the life and exploits of the Croat hero. S.C.

Diamante, JUAN BAUTISTA (*Madrid 1625?; †ibid. 1687?), Spanish dramatist. His most important play El honrador de su padre is a direct adaptation of Corneille's Cid. He introduces a clown who, however, does not intervene in the most serious scenes. This seems to indicate the approach of French neo-classicism in the Spanish 17th century.

Bibl. Autores Esp., XLIX.

E. Cotarelo y Mori, Don J. B. D. y sus comedias (1916). E.M.W.

Díaz del Castillo, BERNAL (*Medina del Campo 1498?; †Mexico after 1568), Spanish historian. In 1514 he joined Cortés's expedition which conquered Mexico. Cortés recommended him to Charles V, and he was given an encomienda in Guatemala. After 1552 he read López de Gomara's history of the conquest of Mexico, which seemed to him inaccurate and unjust. Díaz therefore wrote his own long account of these events, in which there is a magnificent realism, descriptive power and energy. His style is artless, but he had all the resources of the spoken language behind his sentences. The result is a more living narration than any that can be found in more official histories. Díaz furnished the source for Archibald MacLeish's epic Conquistador and for Luis Cernuda's fine poem Quetzalcoatl.

Verdadera historia de la conquista de Nueva España (1632), Bibl. Autores Esp., XXXVI; crit. ed. by G. García (Mexico, 1904); The True History of the Conquest of New Spain, tr. A. P. Maudslay (Hakluyt Soc., 5 vols, 1908–16).

R. B. Cunninghame Graham, B. D. del C. (1917). E.M.W.

Dibdin, CHARLES (*Southampton 4 III 1745; ∞Ann Maria Wylde; †London 25 VII 1814), English musician and playwright remembered mainly for his sea-songs, which include Tom Bowling. Composed music for many successful plays.

Musical Tour (1788); Complete History of English Stage (5 vols, 1800); The Professional Life of Mr D. (with 600 songs, 1803).

W. Kitchiner, A Brief Memoir of C. D. (1823). R.M.H.

Dick, ISAAC MEYER, 'AMAD' (*Vilno 1807; †ibid. 1893), Yiddish writer. A great scholar, he was mainly concerned with spreading knowledge in a popular manner in the form of simple stories. His works are also valuable sources for ethnographical and folk-lore material. J.S.

Dickens, CHARLES (*Landport, Portsea 7 II 1812; ∞1836 Catherine Hogarth; †Gadshill 9 VI 1870), English novelist. He was the son of an impecunious dockyard clerk and his precocity took the form of premature knowledge of debtors' prisons and child labour. Although he worked as a child in a blacking warehouse he had some desultory schooling and eventually became—like David Copperfield—a freelance shorthand-writer and parliamentary reporter. Taking the short step from reporting to writing fictitious sketches he began his career as a novelist with Sketches by Boz (1836). He was a successful but over-worked writer, taking a close interest in the reception and financial success of his serials and books, and his death was probably brought on by the strain of over-assiduous writing, lecturing and public reading. His marriage was a failure. Dickens, like Ben Jonson, his great ancestor in satire, creates a meticulously realistic social setting for his highly stylized and simplified characters. His vitality lies in caricature, and his attempts at rounded characters (David Copperfield or Martin Chuzzlewit) are successful only because they are placed in a context of caricature. The exposure of social ills was his function but his explanations and solutions are less successful. He is weak as a moralizer and his moral is often presented crudely but brilliantly by the emblematic use of physical ugliness and deformity. He creates farce as well as criticism, and by the same means—distortions of speech, manner, mind and appearance (Uriah Heep, Sam Weller, the Micawbers, Mrs Gamp). He can show the comic, the evil, the cruel and the sinister, but not the tragic, and his weak patches are his unrestrained displays of pathos. He is a master of dramatic, even symbolic, description and of taut or episodic construction.

NOVELS: Sketches by 'Boz' (2 vols, 1836); The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club (1837); Oliver Twist (3 vols, 1838); Nicholas Nickleby (1839); Master Humphrey's Clock (1841); The Old Curiosity Shop (1841); Barnaby Rudge (1841); A Christmas Carol (1843); Martin Chuzzlewit (1844); The Chimes (1845); The Cricket on the Hearth (1846); Dombey and Son (1848); David Copperfield (1850); Bleak House (1853); Hard Times (1854); Little Dorrit (1857); A Tale of Two Cities (1859); Great Expectations (3 vols, 1861).—Collected Works (17 vols, 1847–68; 22 vols, 1858–59; Gadshill edn ed. B. W. Marz and A. Lang, 30 vols, 1897; National edn, 40 vols, 1906–08; Nonesuch edn, 23 vols, 1938; Everyman edn, 22 vols, 1906–21).—LETTERS: The Letters of C. D., ed. G. Hogarth and M. Dickens (3 vols, 1880–82); Letters of C. D. (1898).

J. Cook, Bibliography of the Writings of C. D. (1879); R. H. Shepherd, Bibliography of D. (1800); A. W. Ward, D. (1882); J. Forster, Life of C. D. (3 vols, 1873–74); G. K. Chesterton, C. D. (1906); S. J. A. Fitzgerald, D. and the Drama (1910); W. G. Wilkins, C. D. in America (1911); R. C. Lehmann, C. D. as Editor (1912); E. P. Whipple, C. D. (1912); A. C. Swinburne, C. D. (1913); W. Dexter, The London of D. (1923), The Kent of D. (1924), The England of D. (1925), D. (1927); J. B. van Amerongen, The Actor in D. (1926); G. R. Gissing, D., a critical study (1926); F. Delattre, D. et la France (1927); R. Strauss, D., a Portrait in Pencil (1928); E. Wagenknecht, The Man C. D. (1929); H. House, The D. World (1941); U. Pope-Hennessy, C. D. (1943); M. Pearson, D. (1949). B.H.

Dickenson, JOHN (fl. 1594), English poet and romance-writer in the school of Lyly and Greene. His Shepheardes Complaint

(1594) in hexameters is represented by three poems in England's Helicon (1600).

Prose and Verse by J. D., ed. A. B. Grosart (1878). B.L.J.

Dickinson, EMILY ELIZABETH (*Amherst, Mass. 10 XII 1830; †ibid. 15 V 1886), American poet. She died in the house she was born in, and except for a brief period her life was bare of outward event. After attending South Hadley Female Seminary (now Mount Holyoke College), she had several years of normal social life, ending with a brief tragic love affair. Biographers speculate wildly on this hidden chapter of her life. At 26 she retired to her home, dressed in symbolic white, corresponded with her few friends and wrote hundreds of short intense poems. When she died she had published only five (not submitted by herself) and asked that all her manuscripts be destroyed. The poems, however, were gradually published. At first readers responded, then her work went unnoticed; only forty years after her death did she become recognized as a great lyric poet. Her poems deftly mix the trivial and the sublime, the playful and the profound; they are built with aphorisms, arch questions, gnomic imagery and dissonant rhymes. She has been called 'the New England mystic' and 'a feminine Blake'.

The Poems of D., ed. M. D. Bianchi and A. L. Hampson (1937); Bolts of Melody, ed. M. L. Todd and M. T. Bingham (1945); Selected Poems of D., ed. C. Aiken (1924).—Letters of D., ed. M. L. Todd (2 vols, 1894).

G. F. Whicher, This Was a Poet: A Critical Biography of E. D. (1938); M. D. Bianchi, The Life and Letters of E. D. (1924); G. Taggard, The Life and Mind of E. D. (1930). H.L.C.

Dickinson, JOHN (*Talbot City, Md. 8 XI 1732; ∞1770 Mary Norris; †Wilmington, Del. 14 II 1808), American pamphleteer and statesman. He hoped for conciliation with Britain but his Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies (1768) famed him 'the penman of the Revolution'.

The Letters of Fabius . . . (1788, 1797).—The Political Writings of J. D., Esq. (2 vols, 1801).

C. J. Stillé, The Life and Times of J. D. (1891). H.L.C.

Dictys Cretensis, the companion of Idomeneus, was said to have written a journal of the Trojan war which was reputedly discovered in Nero's reign and translated by imperial command into Greek. A 4th-century Latin translation is extant. The authenticity of the work is scarcely less doubtful than that of Dares Phrygius (q.v.). J.A.W.

Dicuil (†c. 825), Irish astronomer, geographer, grammarian and poet at the court of Charles the Great.

Liber de mensura orbis terrae, ed. G. Parthey (1870); De arte grammatica (a poem), in Keil, Grammatici Latini, III; M. Esposito, 'D.', in Dublin Review (1905), 'An Irish Teacher', in Studies, III (1914), 'An unpublished Astronomical Treatise', in Proc. Roy. Irish Acad., XXVI, Sect. C (1907). F.J.E.R.

Diderot, DENIS (*Langres 5 X 1713; ∞1743 Antoinette Champion; †Paris 30 VII 1784), French philosophical writer, publicist and critic. The son of a prosperous cutler, Diderot was educated in Jesuit schools at Langres and Paris. His refusal to adopt a regular profession led to 10 years' impecunious existence as a hack-writer and occasional teacher, made more difficult by his marriage with a woman of the people. The friendship of such men of letters as Condillac, J.-J. Rousseau and d'Alembert gradually improved his literary prospects. In 1749 he published his Lettre sur les aveugles, which illustrated Condillac's theory of the dependence of morality on sensory perceptions, was imprisoned briefly at Vincennes (July–Nov.) and came out to begin the great labour of editing the Encyclopédie. This, originally conceived by the publisher Le Breton as a translation of Ephraim Chambers's Cyclopaedia (1728), grew under Diderot's direction into a vast compendium of the knowledge and progressive thought of the age. In 1759 it was banned and Diderot was left to continue almost alone the work of compilation clandestinely, with some connivance by the authorities. With the completion of the main edition (1765) his part in it was finished. Meanwhile he had met towards 1755 Mlle Sophie Volland, who was his inspiration and confidante for the rest of his life. His numerous writings had brought him a European reputation and his patroness Catherine II of Russia invited him to St Petersburg, where he stayed for seven months (1773–74). His last years were spent in hard-working seclusion in Paris.

Diderot's writings reflect nearly all the advanced ideas of his age, but he himself was a bold rather than an original thinker. He excelled in giving lively expression to the theories of others. As a dramatic theorist he defined the drame bourgeois, but could not create it in his plays. His art criticism is interesting only historically. His novels must be accounted readable failures. His interests were inexhaustible and his opinions always stimulating and sincere.

Philosophy: Essai sur le mérite et la vertu (1745, tr. of Shaftesbury); Pensées philosophiques (1746), crit. ed. R. Niklaus (Geneva, 1950); De la suffisance de la religion naturelle (wr. 1747, pub. 1770); Lettre sur les aveugles (1749); Lettre sur les sourds-muets (1751); Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature (1754), tr. in J. Kemp, D., Interpreter of Nature (1937); Le Rêve de d'Alembert (wr. 1769, pub. 1830), tr. ibid.; Supplément au voyage de Bougainville (wr. 1769, pub. 1830), tr. ibid.; Entretien d'un philosophe avec la maréchale de. . . . (1776), tr. ibid.—Dramatic and Literary Theory: Entretiens sur Le Fils naturel (1757), ed. F. C. Green, in D.'s Writings on the Theatre (1936); Discours sur la poésie dramatique (1758), ed. ibid.; Eloge de Richardson (1761); Réflexions sur Térence (1762); Paradoxe sur le comédien (wr. 1773–78, pub. 1830), crit. ed. J. Copeau (1929), ed. F. C. Green, in D.'s Writings on the Theatre (1936).—Art Criticism: Salons (pub. variously 1759–1857).—Novels and Stories: Les Bijoux indiscrets (1747), tr. in J. Kemp, D., Interpreter of Nature (1937); La Religieuse (wr. 1760, pub. 1790); Le Neveu de Rameau (wr. 1762–73), crit. ed. J. Fabre (Geneva, 1950), tr. in J. Kemp, D., Interpreter of Nature (1937); Jacques le fataliste (wr. 1773, pub. 1796); Les deux amis de Bourbonne (1773).—Plays: Le Fils naturel (wr. 1757, prod. 1771); Le Père de famille (wr. 1758, prod. 1761); Est-il bon, est-il méchant? (wr. 1781, pub. 1834).—Œuvres complètes, ed. J. Assézat and M. Tourneux (20 vols, 1875–79); Lettres à Sophie Volland, ed. A. Babelon (2 vols, 1938); Œuvres, ed. A. Billy (1935, selection); H. Dieckmann, Inventaire du fonds Vandeul et inédits de D. (1951).

L. Cru, D. as a Disciple of English Thought (1913); J. Le Gras, D. et l'Encyclopédie (1928); A. Billy, D. (1932); J. Luc, D. (1938); D. H. Gordon and N. C. Torrey, The Censoring of D.'s Encyclopaedia (1947). G.B.

Didymus (fl. 1st century B.C.), Greek grammarian of Alexandria, nicknamed 'Chalcenterus' (Brass-guts). He compiled some 3,500 commentaries on poets and orators, lexica and antiquarian works surviving only in fragments. Didymus made available in epitomized form—and hence for schoolmasters—the philological learning of Alexandria. What survives of this scholarship goes back largely to Didymus.

M. Schmidt, Didymi Chalcenteri fragmenta (1854); H. Diels and W. Schubart, Berliner Klassikertexte, I (1904).

J. E. Sandys, Hist. of Class. Scholarship, I (3rd ed. 1921); M. H. A. L. H. van der Valk, Textual Criticism of the Odyssey (1949). R.B.

Die, Countess of: see Beatrice.

Dierx, Marais Victor Léon (*Saint-Denis, Réunion 31 III 1838; †Paris 13 VI 1912), French poet, a writer of the parnassian school with a small but genuine talent whose personality was not strong enough to enable him to make a distinctive contribution to French poetry. He was given the title of Prince of Poets in succession to Mallarmé.

Aspirations (1858); Poèmes et poésies (1864); Les Lèvres closes (1867); Les Paroles du vaincu (1871); La Rencontre (1875); Les Amants (1879).—Poésies complètes (2 vols, 1889–90; 1894–96; 1912; 1920).

E. Noulet, L. D. (1925). M.T.

Dietmar von Eist (fl. 1140–70), Austrian minnesinger; of noble family near Mauthausen. A contemporary of der Kürenberger, he used a variant of his stanza but dealing with a wider range of themes, including amour courtois. Songs with alternate stanzas for knight and lady still tell a story, but introduce argument (more direct than was later fashionable) on service and reward. Nature plays an important part, particularly in a Tagelied (q.v.), the first in German literature.

Minnesangs Frühling, ed. K. Lachmann–C. v. Kraus (1944).

H. K. Rathke, D. v. Aist (1932); M. F. Richey, Essays on Med. German Love Lyric (1943; incl. tr.). F.P.P.

Díez de Gámez, Gutierre (*1378?; †after 1446), Spanish chronicler. His El Victorial, an account of the life of his patron Don Pero Niño, contains many curious passages about the life of the 15th-century nobility—descriptions of battles, tournaments etc.—and it is very agreeably written.

El Victorial, ed. J. de Mata Carriazo (1940), sel. ed. R. Iglesia (1936), The Unconquered Knight, tr. Joan Evans (1928). E.M.W.

Digby, George, Earl of Bristol (*Madrid X 1612; ∞Lady Anne Russell; †London 20 III 1676/7), English dramatist of great ability, a fine orator, but inconsistent in his life. A royalist, he was involved in politics under Charles I and his son. Elvira (1675) has many merits, including good blank verse.

Drama: Elvira, repr. Hazlitt's Dodsley, XV (1876).—Translation: Cassandra (by de La Calprenède; Bks I–III, 1652). B.L.J.

Digges, Leonard (*London 1588; †Oxford 7 IV 1635), English poet and translator, one of whose poems to Shakespeare is prefixed to the First (1623), the other to the Second, Folio (1640). A good classical scholar, Digges knew French and Spanish.

TRANSLATION (VERSE): The Rape of Proserpine (1617; 1628); (PROSE): Gerardo, the Unfortunate Spaniard (1622). B.L.J.

Dijkstra, WALING (*Lieve Vrouwen Parochie 14 VIII 1821; ∞Hinke Huizinga, ∞1855 Afke Jans de Boer; †Holwerd 15 I 1914), Frisian writer and scholar. He began with short stories under the influence of Harmen Sytstra. After his second marriage he brought out several Lieteboekjes, but it was after 1861 that he powerfully furthered the Frisian movement, lecturing, singing, organizing glee-clubs and editing journals (De Bijekoer, 'The Beehive', 1850–91; De Fryske Hûsfrjeon, 1850–69; Sljucht en Rjucht, 1897–1914). His knowledge of folk-customs is embodied in the Dutch Uit Frieslands Volksleven (1895). His greatest service to the Frisian cause was his comprehensive Friesch Woordenboek (3 vols, 1900–04).

G. A. Wumkes, in Nieuw Nederlandsch Biografisch Woordenboek, IX (1933).
W.E.C.

Dilke, CHARLES WENTWORTH (*8 XII 1789; †Alice Holt, Hants 10 VIII 1864), English man of letters and friend of Keats, who published a continuation of Dodsley's Old Plays, wrote critical essays and edited The Athenaeum.

Papers of a Critic (prefixed by life, 2 vols, 1875); Keats' Works (4 vols, 1883). R.M.H.

Dillon, WENTWORTH, EARL OF ROSCOMMON (*Ireland X 1637; ∞IV 1662 Lady Frances Boyle, ∞X 1674 Isabella Matthew; †London I 1684/5), English courtier-poet, who studied at the Protestant university of Caen, travelled in France, Germany and Italy, was skilled in linguistics and numismatics. Returning to England on the Restoration, Roscommon lived the life of a 'wit', gambling, duelling, yet lived to form an academy like that at Caen. A fine orator, he wrote on translated verse, was the first critic to praise Paradise Lost publicly, recommending blank verse as a medium.

The Miscellaneous Works of the late Earls of Rochester and Roscommon (1707); A Collection of Divine Poems and Hymns (1709); Poems by the Earl of Roscommon (1717; repr. Johnson X; Anderson VI; Chalmers VIII).—Horace's Art of Poetry, made English (1680); An Essay on Translated Verse (1684; enlarged 1685; repr. J. E. Spingarn, Critical Essays of the 17th Century, III, 1909).—S. Johnson, Lives, I (1781; repr. G. B. Hill, I, 1905); C. Niemeyer, Life and Works of the Earl of Roscommon (1934). B.L.J.

Dilthey, WILHELM (*Biebrich 19 XI 1833; †Seis 3 X 1911), German philosopher, who taught from 1882 at Berlin. As a philosopher Dilthey devoted himself mainly to epistemological questions. This led him to investigate the relationship between history and philosophy and to researches which have been most influential with subsequent sociologists and historians of ideas.

Gesammelte Schriften (12 vols, 1914–26).
H. A. Hodges, W. D.: an introduction (1944, with useful biblio.), The Philosophy of W. D. (1952). D.H.

Dinarchus (*c. 360; †after 292 B.C.), Athenian orator. A metic, disqualified from speaking himself, he wrote five of the prosecuting speeches (of which three, including that against Demosthenes, survive) in the Harpalus case (324), and from 322 to 307 was the leading Athenian speechwriter. He occupies the last place in the Alexandrian canon of Ten Attic Orators, but his surviving work, disingenuous and uninspired, at best merely echoes his predecessors' technique and ideas.

Ed. F. Blass (1888); A. and M. Croiset, Histoire de la Littérature Grecque, IV (1947); J. F. Dobson, The Greek Orators (1919).
J.H.K.

Dingelstedt, FRANZ FREIHERR VON (*Halsdorf 30 VI 1814; ∞1844 Jenny Lutzer, opera singer; †Vienna 15 V 1881), German writer. Originally a schoolmaster and liberal newspaper correspondent, his pointed, ironical, political verses, though published anonymously, made his name. Swinging to the right, he rose in fame—and rank—principally through his outstanding theatrical productions, while writing novels, poems and a tragedy.

VERSE: Gedichte (1838); Lieder eines cosmopolitischen Nachtwächters (anon. 1841; 2nd vol. 1843); Nacht und Morgen (1851).—NOVELS: Die neuen Argonauten (1839; ed. P. Heidelbach, 1931); Unter der Erde (2 vols, 1840); Die Amazone (2 vols, 1868; tr. J. M. Hart, 1868); Künstlergeschichten (1877).—TRAGEDY: Das Haus der Barneveldt (1850).—Sämtliche Werke (12 vols, 1877–78); Aus der Briefmappe eines Burgtheaterdirektors, ed. K. Glossy (1925).
H. Knudsen, 'F. D.', in Lebensbilder aus Kurhessen, 2 (1939). H.A.P.

Dinis, JÚLIO, pseud. of JOAQUIM GUILHERME GOMES COELHO (*Oporto 14 XI 1839; †ibid. 12 IX 1871), Portuguese novelist. He studied medicine at Oporto where he later obtained a teaching post at the medical school. Obliged by ill health to live in the country he took to writing novels and short stories—the latter published under the title Serões de Província (1868). His novels, chiefly domestic in character, reveal a certain talent for psychological observation, but their development is slow and the moralizing at times insipid. The author's taste for long detailed descriptions derives in part from Dickens, whom he greatly admired.

As pupilas do senhor reitor (1867); Uma família inglesa (1868); A morgadinha dos Canaviais (1868); Os fidalgos da Casa Mourisca (1871); Poesias (1873).
E. Moniz, J. D. e a sua obra (1924); A. J. Saraiva, 'A obra de J. D. e a sua época', in Vértice (1951). T.P.W.

Diniz, king of Portugal, 1279–1325 (*9 X 1261; ∞1282 Isabel of Aragon; †7 I 1325), Portuguese poet, son of Afonso III. During his long reign he fostered agriculture and promoted many reforms for the welfare and security of the kingdom. In the cultural and literary spheres he played a role comparable with that of his grandfather, Alfonso X, in Castile. In 1290 he founded the first Portuguese university; he ordered the translation into Portuguese of many Latin, Spanish and Arabic works, and above all continued at his court the great Galaico-Portuguese lyrical tradition. He himself was one of the last and greatest of the Peninsula troubadours.

Educated by Aiméric d'Ébrard, Diniz was well acquainted with the Provençal lyric, influence of which can be seen in his cantigas de amor (see CANCIONEIROS). He also cultivated the indigenous cantiga de amigo in which genre he is unsurpassed. Altogether he left 138 compositions, including 10 cantigas de escárnio.

Das Liederbuch des Königs Denis von Portugal, ed. H. R. Lang (1894).
C. Michaëlis de Vasconcelos, 'Zum Liederbuch des Königs Denis von Portugal', in Zeitschr. rom. Philol., XIX (1895); Armin Gassner, 'Die Sprache des Königs Denis von Portugal', in Roman. Forsch., XX, XXII (1907); S. Pellegrini, Don Denis (Belluno, 1927) and Studi su trove e trovatori della prima lirica ispano-portoghese (Turin, 1937).
T.P.W.

Dio Cassius: see CASSIUS DIO.

Dio Chrysostom (*Prusa, Bithynia c. A.D. 50; †c. 115), orator, wandered to Rome, was expelled by Domitian but returned to enjoy the friendship of Nerva and Trajan. His 80 moral discourses in the popular stoico-cynic tradition, written in Greek both for circulation and for declamation to occasional audiences, are admired for their post-classical elegance.

Ed. J. W. Cohoon and H. L. Crosby (5 vols, Loeb Libr., 1932–51); J. von Arnim, Leben und Werke des Dio von Prusa (1898). J.H.K.

Diodorus Siculus (fl. 2nd half of 1st century B.C.), Greek historian, native of Agyrium in Sicily. Author of Bibliotheca, a universal history in 40 books, of which books 1–5 (mythological period) and 11–20 (480–301 B.C.) survive. Diodorus belongs to the 'scissors and paste' school, and his work is an incompetent and uncritical compilation, yet valuable as our only continuous account for some periods.

Ed. F. Vogel and T. Fischer (5 vols, 1888–1906); C. H. Oldfather and R. M. Geer (Loeb Libr., 12 vols, 1933 ff.).
N. G. L. Hammond, 'Diodorus' Narrative of the Sacred War', Jour. Hellenic Studies, 57 (1937), 'The Sources of D. S. XVI and XVIII, Class. Qu., 31–32 (1937–38). R.B.

Diogenes Laertius, author of The Lives and Opinions of the Eminent Philosophers (probably early 3rd century A.D.). Much of his knowledge clearly comes from digests rather than from the originals, and he shows disappointingly little critical judgment. But in the absence of better evidence his work has to be consulted. Perhaps its greatest value is in Book 10, which gives the original text of some of Epicurus' letters.

R. D. Hicks (2 vols, Loeb Libr., 1935); R. Hope, The Book of D. L. (1930). D.J.F.

Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Greek historian and literary critic, taught at Rome in 1st century B.C. Antiquitates Romanae is a rhetorical history of Rome in 20 books. His literary treatises, On the arrangement of words, On the ancient orators, and three Letters contain detailed appreciations of the style of classical Greek prose writers; it is significant for contemporary taste that he wrote On imitation.

C. Jacoby, Antiquitates Romanae (1885); Roman Antiquities, tr. E. Cary (7 vols, 1937–51); H. Usener and L. Radermacher, Opuscula (1899); W. Rhys Roberts, On Literary Composition (1910) and Three Literary Letters (1901), both with tr. and comm.
S. F. Bonner, The Literary Treatises (1939).
T.B.L.W.

Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite (fl. 2nd half of 5th century), Byzantine theologian who adopted the name of St Paul's convert at Athens and published under this title letters and four treatises, Divine Names, Mystical Theology, The Caelestial Hierarchy, The Ecclesiastical Hierarchy.

These works were much influenced by current neo-platonism as well as by Christian doctrine. Stress is laid on the hierarchical arrangement of the universe and the ascent by the via negativa whereby the Christian soul may approach God. In their own day they were used by both orthodox and monophysites and later were assimilated into the Christian spirituality of both east and west, passing into Greek tradition largely through Maximus the Confessor and being translated into Latin by John Scotus Erigena. The authenticity of the Dionysian corpus was challenged by Lorenzo Valla (†1457), but serious investigation dates from the late 19th century and still continues.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 3–4; Divine Names and Mystical Theology, tr. C. E. Rolt (1920); Œuvres Complètes du Pseudo-Denys l'Aréopagite, Fr. tr. M. de Gandillac (1943); E. Honigmann, Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 5 (1950, p. 268), considers that the Pseudo-Dionysius may be Peter the Iberian.
J.M.H.

Dionysius the Carthusian (*Rijkel 1402; †Roermond 12 III 1471), Flemish theologian, called the ecstatic doctor. He wrote some 40 volumes of devotional and exegetical treatises, philosophy and theology as well as sermons. Though never canonized, his tomb became a centre of pilgrimage. R.R.R.

Opera Omnia (42 vols, 1896–1913).

A. Welters, Denys le Chartreux (1892); A. Mougel, Denys le Chartreux (1896); H. Keiser, D. d. Kart. Leben und pädagog. Schriften (1904); E. Ewig, Die Anschauungen d. Kart. D. v. Rickel über den Christl. Ordo (1936); P. Teeuwen, D. de Kartuizer en de phil. theol. stromingen a. d. Keulsche universiteit (1938) and in Alg. Nederl. Tijdschr. v. Wijsb. en Psychol., XXXVI (1942); H. Pohlen, Die Erkenntnislehre D. d. Kart. (1941); G. Vos De Wael, De mystica theologia van Dionysius Mysticus in de werken van D. Carthus. (1942); K. Swenden, 'De "mystica theologia" bij D. v. Rijkel', in Ons Geest. Erf, XXII (1948).
J.J.M.

Dionysius Thrax (*Alexandria c. 150; †c. 90 B.C.), Greek grammarian, pupil of Aristarchus, taught mainly at Rhodes. Author of Ars Grammatica, a brief treatise on Greek phonology and accidence. This brilliant work of synthesis remained a schoolbook in Byzantium till the 13th century, served as a model for Latin grammarians and dominated grammatical studies in Europe and the Moslem world till the 19th century.

Ed. G. Uhlig, in Grammatici Graeci, I (1883).

J. E. Sandys, Hist. of Class. Scholarship, I (3rd ed. 1921); F. W. Thomas, 'Parts of Speech', in Trans. Philol. Soc. (1949); R. H. Robins, Ancient and Mediaeval Grammatical Theory in Europe (1951). R.B.

Dioscorides, Greek elegiac poet (late 3rd century B.C.). A very neat and pretty writer of epigrams.

H. Stadtmüller, Anthologia Graeca (1894); W. R. Paton, Anthologia Graeca (1916, with tr.); J. W. Mackail, Select epigrams from the Greek anthology (1911, with tr. and comm.).
T.B.L.W.

Diphilus (*Sinope mid-4th century; †Smyrna early 3rd century B.C.), poet of Athenian New Comedy, author of about 100 plays, of which some 60 are recorded. Plautus adapted at least two; Terence incorporated one scene in Adelphi. His style seems clear-cut and vivid—qualities recognizable in his treatment of minor characters, and his skilful use of a picturesque setting in the original of Rudens.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, II (1884); two further citations in J. Demiańczuk, Supplementum Comicum (1912).

A. Marigo, 'Difilo comico nei frammenti e nelle imitazioni latine', in Studi Ital. Fil. Class., XV (1907); T. B. L. Webster, Studies in Later Greek Comedy (1953). E.W.H.

Diricksens, J.-J.: see Zetternam.

Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield (*London 21 XII 1804; ∞1839 Mary Anne Evans, widow of Wyndham Lewis; †ibid. 19 IV 1881), British statesman and novelist. Disraeli's importance as a novelist cannot be separated from his political career. His association with the Young England group and his brilliance in debate further extended a reputation already established by his first novels; and his progressive policy as prime minister (1867–68 and 1874–80) and advocate of tory democracy was displayed early in his awareness of social inequalities in Sybil. The exotic setting and florid style of his books belonged to his generation and to his own romantic temperament, but their freshness remains through their wit and the shrewdness of their comment on the social scene.

Vivian Grey (4 vols, 1826–27); The Young Duke (3 vols, 1831); Contarini Fleming (4 vols, 1832); Alroy (3 vols, 1833); Henrietta Temple (3 vols, 1837); Venetia (3 vols, 1837); Coningsby (3 vols, 1844; ed. W. Allen, 1948); Sybil (3 vols, 1845; ed. H. D. Traill, 1895); Tancred (3 vols, 1847); Lord George Bentinck, a Political Biography (1852); Lothair (3 vols, 1870); Endymion (3 vols, 1880).—Novels and Tales (10 vols, 1870–71; Hughenden ed., 11 vols, 1881; Bradenham ed., intro. P. Guedalla, 12 vols, 1926–27); Young England (i.e. Vivian Grey, Coningsby, Sybil, Tancred), ed. B. N. Langdon-Davies (4 vols, 1904).

W. F. Monypenny and G. E. Buckle, Life of D. (6 vols, 1910–20; rev. ed. 2 vols, 1929); E. Gosse, The Novels of B. D. (1918); M. E. Speare, The Political Novel (1924); E. Forbes-Boyd, 'D. the Novelist', in Essays and Studies (1950). R.F.

D'Israeli, ISAAC (*Enfield V 1766; ∞1802 Maria Basevi; †Bradenham 19 I 1848), English man of letters.

Curiosities of Literature, consisting of Anecdotes, Characters, Sketches and Observations, Literary, Historical and Critical (1791; 1849 with sketch of I. D. by his son, Benjamin D.); Quarrels of Authors (1814); Calamities of Authors (1812–13). R.M.H.

Dixon, RICHARD WATSON (*Islington 5 V 1833; ∞1861 Maria Thomson, ∞1882 Matilda Routledge; †Warkworth I 1900), English historian, poet and divine, an early associate of the Pre-Raphaelites.

History of Church of England from the Abolition of Roman Jurisdiction (6 vols, 1877–1902); Life of James Dixon, D.D. (1874).

M. E. Coleridge, Non Sequitur. The Last Hermit of Warkworth (1900); R. S. Bridges, Three Friends, ed. M. M. Bridges (1932). R.M.H.

Dixon, WILLIAM HEPWORTH (*Manchester 30 VI 1821; †London 27 XII 1879), English traveller and historian, author of a newspaper series, The Literature of the Lower Orders and London Prisons, and of picturesque but inaccurate histories.

John Howard and the Prison World of Europe (1849); Life of William Penn (1851); Personal History of Lord Bacon from Unpublished Papers (1861); Story of Lord Bacon's Life (1862). R.M.H.

Djordjević (or DJORDJIĆ), IGNJAT (*Ragusa 13 II 1675; †ibid. 21 I 1737), Dalmatian poet, is the greatest literary figure in the last phase of Ragusa's golden age. A gifted, restless spirit, leaping from one extreme to another, he abandoned a gay life to enter the Jesuit order in Rome, but left it as suddenly and returned to Ragusa to join the Benedictines. His poetry mirrors these varied phases. His lyrics depict love as a source now of pleasure, now of sin; sometimes, under the influence of Boccaccio, in a merely sardonic light (e.g. Suze Marunkove, the mock-tragic laments of a love-sick youth). He also wrote numerous translations, historic works, religious, patriotic verse and pastoral. His chief work is Uzdasi Mandalijene pokornice, a series of 8 cantos or 'lamentations', comprising lyrical descriptions and psychological analysis mingled with romantic mysticism.

Saltijer slovinski (1729). S.C.

Długosz (Longinus), JAN (*Brzeźnica 1415 ?; †Cracow 19 V 1480), Polish-Latin chronicler. His chronicle of Poland, medieval in outlook but imitating Livy, was very popular, though printed only in 1614. He is among the best chroniclers of his time.

Historia Polonica . . . (1614); Vita Sancti Stanislai (1511).—Opera omnia, ed. A. Przezdziecki (14 vols, 1863–87).

J. Caro, Johannes Longinus (1863); M. Bobrzyński i St Smolka, J. D. (1893). S.S.

Dmitriev, IVAN IVANOVICH (*Simbirsk district 10 IX 1760; †3 X 1837), Russian author, wrote sentimental light poetry, following Karamzin, together with a number of 'songs' in the would-be folk-style, a few odes and 68 didactic fables. His poems have a colloquial ease, but there is more elegance in them than vitality.

Sochineniya (2 vols, 1893).—S. A. Vengerov, Russkaya poeziya, I (1894). J.L.

Dmitry Rostovsky, or DEMETRIUS OF ROSTOV (*1651; †1709), Russian bishop, author of the excellent 'small' Chetyi-Minei ('Saints' Calendar'), based on the voluminous 16th-century work, under the same title, by the metropolitan Makary. He also wrote a nativity play and several Mystery plays with comic interludes, all in Church-Slavonic. He was canonized by the Russian church in 1757. J.L.

Dmochowski, FRANCISZEK KSAWERY (*Oprawczyki 2 XII 1762; †nr Błonie 20 VI 1808), Polish poet, clergyman, schoolteacher and politician. He left, besides fluent translations from classic and modern poets (e.g. E. Young), a didactic poem, Sztuka rymotwórcza, modelled on Boileau's L'Art poétique: it had several editions.

VERSE: Sztuka rymotwórcza . . . (1788).—TRANSLATIONS: Iliada (1800; ed. with intro. T. Sinko, 1922); Eneida (1809).—Pisma rozmaite (2 vols, 1826).

K. L. Żalewski, Sztuka rymotwórcza F. K. Dmochowskiego (1910). S.S.

Dobell, SYDNEY THOMPSON (*Cranbrook, Kent 5 IV 1824; ∞1844 Emily Fordham; †Nailsworth, Glos. 22 VIII 1874), English poet. One of the 'Spasmodic' school of poets, ridiculed by W. E. Aytoun for their rant and incoherence.

VERSE: The Roman (1850); Balder (1854); England in Time of War (1856); Poetical Works ed. J. Nichol (2 vols, 1875).—PROSE: Thought, on Art, Philosophy and Religion, ed. J. Nichol (1876).

E. Jolly, Life and Letters of D. (2 vols, 1878). R.F.

Dobrolyubov, Nikolay Alexandrovich (*Nizhny Novgorod 24 I 1836; †St Petersburg 17 XI 1861), Russian critic and essayist. He joined in 1857 the staff of Sovremennik as its principal critic. The violence of his views made Turgenev and some other literary highbrows leave the periodical. Influenced by Feuerbach and the materialistic-utilitarian philosophy, he demanded that a critic should reveal the deeper meaning of the works of art which, in their turn, must be an interpretation as well as a judgment of reality. His essays on Goncharov and Ostrovsky in particular enjoyed a great vogue. His satires in verse and prose are of less importance.

Sochineniya (4 vols, 1885; 8 vols, 1911; 6 vols, 1934); Izbrannye filosofskie sochineniya (2 vols, 1946; Eng. tr., N. A. D. Selected Philosoph. Essays, 1948).

A. M. Skabichevsky, N. A. D. (1894); A. L. Volynsky, Russkie Kritiki (1896); I. I. Ivanov, Istoriya russkoy kritiki, II (1900); V. Polyansky, N. A. D. (1926, 1935). J.L.

Dobrovský, Josef (*Gyarmat, Hungary 17 VIII 1753; †Brno 6 I 1829), Czech philologist and literary historian. Dobrovský was the greatest figure in the first generation of the Czech national revival and the founder of comparative Slavonic philology. The son of a poor family, he studied philosophy, theology and oriental languages under the Jesuits until the abolition of their Order (of which he had become a member). He was ordained priest but devoted his life to scholarship. This he was largely enabled to do by the generous help of aristocratic patrons. He travelled widely in search of Slavonic books and manuscripts: particularly noteworthy was his journey to Sweden and Russia in 1792. In his latter years he suffered from a recurrent mental illness.

The most significant of Dobrovský's many writings (almost all in German or Latin) were those on the Czech language, the older Czech literature and the Church-Slavonic language. In his Geschichte der böhmischen Sprache und Litteratur (1792, revised 1818) he drew attention to the forgotten treasures of medieval Czech literature and to the 'golden age' represented by such writers as Veleslavín. In his Ausführliches Lehrgebäude der böhmischen Sprache (1809, 1819) he established norms that have had an authoritative influence on the development of modern Czech. The foundations of the comparative study of Slavonic languages were laid in his grammar of Church-Slavonic (Institutiones linguae slavicae dialecti veteris, 1822).

Spisy a projevy Josefa Dobrovského (collected works, 1936 ff.).

A. Novák, J. D. (1929); M. Weingart, Dobrovského Institutiones (1922–25); Josef Dobrovský, 1753–1829 (1929). R.A.

Dodd, William (*Bourne 29 V 1729, ∞1751 Mary Perkins; †London 27 VI 1777), English divine and scholar, who, sentenced to death for forgery, wrote Thoughts in Prison and preached a sermon written by Johnson to fellow-prisoners in Newgate.

Beauties of Shakspear (1752); Sermons (4 vols, 1755–56); Convict's Address to his Unhappy Brethren (sermon preached in Newgate; added to Thoughts in Prison, 3rd ed. 1789).—Collected Poems (1767, with life, 1779).

Historical Memoirs of Life and Writings of Dr Dodd (1777). R.M.H.

Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge, pen-name Lewis Carroll (*Daresbury, Ches. 27 I 1832; †Guildford 14 I 1898), English mathematician and writer of children's books. Dodgson was educated at Rugby and Christ Church, Oxford, where he spent the rest of his life as lecturer in mathematics. His Alice in Wonderland was related in instalments to the daughters of Dr Liddell, the college dean, and published under a rigorously preserved pseudonym. Besides his stories, he wrote nonsensical poems and parodies; and he was also a remarkable photographer of children and of his contemporaries.

The peculiar charm of Lewis Carroll's nonsense is that it appeals to children and adults simultaneously. The logical faculty of the mathematician gave complete coherence to a sequence of unlikely episodes in which imaginary characters embody many recognizable vagaries of human nature: clinging inexorably to fantastic notions, their conversation yet appears eminently sensible and their arguments incontrovertible. Lewis Carroll's cogency of thought, wit and humour have enriched the language with numerous phrases and images.

Verse: Phantasmagoria and Other Poems (1869); The Hunting of the Snark (1876); Rhyme? or Reason? (1883).—Prose: Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865); Through the Looking-Glass (1871); Sylvie and Bruno (1889); Sylvie and Bruno Concluded (1893).—Complete Works (1923).

S. D. Collingwood, The Life and Letters of Lewis Carroll (1898); W. de la Mare, Lewis

Carroll (1932); E. M. Hatch, A Selection from the Letters of Lewis Carroll (ed. with intro. and notes, 1933); F. B. Lennon, Lewis Carroll (1947); H. Gernsheim, Lewis Carroll, Photographer (1949). R.F.

Dodsley, ROBERT (*Mansfield 1703?; Durham 25 XII 1764), English bookseller, verse-writer and playwright. Beginning as a footman, he made his name with poems and plays; and with the help of Pope became a publisher.

VERSE: Servitude (1729); A Muse in Livery (1732).—PLAYS: The Toy Shop: a dramatic satire (1735); The King and the Miller of Mansfield (1737).—1758: Started Annual Register.—PUBLISHED: Select Collection of Old Plays (12 vols, 1744); Collection of Poems by Several Hands (6 vols, 1748–58).

R. S. Straus, D., Publisher and Playwright (with full biblio., 1910); W. P. Courtney, D.'s Collection of Poetry, its contents and contributors (privately pr. 1910). R.M.H.

Doesborch, JAN VAN, Dutch author of the satire of the ten asses (Van den thien esels, written 1530). He claims that it is a translation from the English but a similar work is unknown in English literature. There is, however, a German poem Von den neun Eseln, having certain traits in common with the chapbook.

Ed. A. v. Elslander (1946); J. J. Mak, in Jaarboek van De Fonteine (1946–47). J.J.M.

Dolce, LUDOVICO (*Venice 1508; †ibid. 1568), Italian prose-writer. A prolific but mediocre and hasty writer, he worked for Giolito, the Venetian publisher. He paraphrased and translated the classics, wrote five comedies, a Dialogo dell'istitutione della donna (1545), L'Aretino, a dialogue on painting (1557), and a useful grammar, Osservazioni sulla volgar lingua (1550).

'Il ragazzo', in Commedie del Cinquecento, II, ed. I. Sanesi (1912); L'Aretino o dialogo della pittura, ed. D. Ciampoli (1912).

E. Cicogna, 'Memorie intorno la vita e gli scritti di L. D.', in Mem. Ist. Ven., 11 (1862). C.Dr.

Dolet, ÉTIENNE (*Orléans 3 VIII 1509; ∞1538 Louise Giraud; †Paris 3 VIII 1546), French humanist, printer and poet. After studying at Paris, Padua and Venice, Dolet opened a printing-press at Lyons in 1538. He printed Latin authors, contemporary French writers (including Marot, Rabelais, Héroët) and his own works, of which his philological Commentarii Linguae Latinae is the most substantial. Twice imprisoned by the Inquisition, Dolet went to the stake on his 37th birthday after a two-year trial. At most an agnostic, he was condemned on his associations and uncompromising character as much as on his opinions.

R. C. Christie, E. D., Martyr of the Renaissance (2nd ed. 1889); O. Galtier, E. D. (1908). G.B.

Dolgorukov, NATALIA BORISOVNA, Princess (*1714; †1771), Russian author of memoirs written when a nun, after a singularly tragic life. Her fine, unpretentious style was exceptional for that period.

Pamyatnye zapiski N. B. Dolgorukovoy (1867); J. A. Heard, The Life and Times of Nathalia Borissovna, Princess Dolgorookov (1857). J.L.

Domenichi, LUDOVICO (*Piacenza 1515; †Pisa 1564), Italian writer. He worked for the publishers Giolito in Venice and Torrentino in Florence. His production was enormous but seldom original: sonnets, dialogues, comedies, translations (Giovio's history 1554) and a collection of Facezie. His works are scattered through 16th-century anthologies.

Facezie, ed. C. Fabris (1923).

A. Salza, 'Intorno a L. D.', in Rassegna Bibliografica, 7 (1899). C.Dr.

Domett, ALFRED (*Camberwell Grove, Surrey 20 V 1811; †London 2 XI 1887), New Zealand politician and poet. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1842, lamented by Browning in 'Waring'. After being prime minister in 1862–63 he returned to England in 1871. As a poet he is remembered for Ranolf and Amohia (1872), an ambitious but dead epic, readable now only for scenic description. D.M.D.

Dominici, GIOVANNI (*Florence c. 1356; †Buda 1419), Italian Dominican writer. A fervent preacher and disciple of S. Caterina da Siena; cardinal (1408). Dominici wrote sermons, Laudi, the Governo di cura familiare, the Libro d'amore di carità and Lucula noctis, a Latin treatise on pagan authors. All express his conviction that the classical studies of the humanists had a subversive influence on the Christian way of life.

Regola del Governo di cura familiare, ed. Salvi (1860); Il libro d'amore di carità, ed. Ceruti (1899); Beati Johannis Dominici Lucula noctis, ed. Coulon (Paris, 1908).

A. Roesler, G. D., ein Reformatorenbild aus der Zeit des grossen Schisma (1893). M.W.

Domselaer, TOBIAS VAN (*Amsterdam 27 X 1611; †ibid. IX 1685), Dutch historian. His best-known work is Beschrijvinge van Amsterdam (1665), a compilation in which he borrowed much from P. C. Hooft, Aitzema and others. He collaborated on Hollandse Parnas (1660), an anthology.

Het ontroerde Nederland door de wapenen des Konings van Vrankrijk (1671–76); Beschrijving der sieraden van het tooneel bij de vertoningen van Bontius' Belegh van Leiden (2nd ed. 1670).

J. Wagenaar, Amsterdam in zijn opkomst (1760). A.M.B.W.

Donatus, AELIUS (fl. 4th century A.D.), Latin grammarian and commentator, teacher of St Jerome. His grammatical treatises became popular text-books in the medieval period. Of his commentary on Virgil, which was much used by Servius, only the preface, a life of Virgil and an introduction to the Eclogues certainly remain, though some scholars have claimed to recognize sections of Donatus' own work in parts of 'Servius Danielis' or 'Servius Auctus'. His commentary on Terence has survived, but probably not in its original form. He is to be distinguished from Tiberius Claudius Donatus, author of a dull commentary on Virgil's Aeneid.

H. Keil, Grammatici Latini, 4 (1857); J. Ender, Aelii Donati commenti Verg. reliquiae (1910); J. Brummer, Vitae Vergilianae (1912–33); E. Wölfflin, in Philologus, 24 (1866). J.F.L.

Doni, ANTON FRANCESCO (*Florence 1513; †Monselice IX 1574), Italian prose-writer. A typical example of the 16th-century eccentric, Doni travelled round Italy, earning his living by his pen. His writings, superficial, extravagant and encyclopaedic, foreshadow modern journalism. Best known are I Marmi (1552), imaginary conversations held in Florence, La Zucca (1551–52), a collection of sayings, and I Mondi (1552), a picture of a socialist utopia.

I Marmi (1552), crit. ed. E. Chiorboli (2 vols, 1928, with biblio.); Scritti vari, ed. F. Palazzi (1913).

G. Toffanin, Il Cinquecento (4th ed. 1950); B. Croce, Scrittori del pieno e del tardo Rinascimento, I (1945). C.Dr.

Donici, ALEXANDRU (*Bessarabia 1806; †Jassy 1866), Rumania's only Bessarabian fabulist. Donici, while studying in Russia, met and was greatly impressed by Pushkin. On his return Donici settled in Jassy where he practised law. Though strongly influenced by Russian fabulists and by La Fontaine, Donici's Fabule (1840, 2nd ed. 1842) have a specific Rumanian atmosphere.

T. Speranţia, Fabula in genere şi fabulisti români in specie (1893); I. Negrescu, Influenţe slave asupra fabulei române (1925), Figuri culturale din trecutul Basarabei (1926). A.V.W.

Donne, JOHN (*London 22 I ?–12 II ? 1572; ∞ ibid. XII 1601 Ann More; †ibid. 31 III 1631), English poet and divine, who went to Hart Hall, Oxford (1584) and was entered at Thaivies Inn (1591) and Lincoln's Inn (1592). Donne was probably abroad between November 1594 and June 1596, was with Essex at Cadiz (1596) and accompanied the Azores expedition (1597), becoming secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton (1598). He seems to have been M.P. for Brackley (1601), but wrecked his worldly career by his marriage, a breach of canon and civil law enabling Sir George More, his father-in-law, to procure his dismissal and imprisonment. Released, Donne lived penuriously at Mitcham until a reconciliation took place (1609). Patronized by Rochester from 1612, he has erroneously been held an accomplice in the countess of Essex's divorce (1613). Ordained in 1615, Donne became reader of divinity to the benchers of Lincoln's Inn (1616). After accompanying Doncaster to Germany (1619–20) he lived an increasingly retired life, becoming dean of St Paul's (1621), vicar of St Dunstan's-in-the-West (1624), and only ill health prevented his elevation to a bishopric (1630). Donne's was a nature that abhorred half-measures. From the restrained uneasy atmosphere of a Roman Catholic upbringing, rejecting religion, he plunged into London life with a compensatory intensity. His zest included learning, loving and a thirst for martial glory. Essentially honest, loyal and kind, he was charitable in prosperity. The ability of his mind to perceive fundamental relationships, explaining them in unexpected analogies, accounts for the tone of his sermons and the imagery of his verse. Strictly controlling the structure of his poems he varies pitch and quantity to give a colloquial intensity and rhythm. His faculty for communicating his special insight is shown in his sermons, whose force was increased by his superb delivery. B.L.J.

Poems, ed. H. J. C. Grierson (2 vols, 1912); Complete Poetry and Selected Prose, ed. J. Hayward (1930); Selected Passages, ed. L. P. Smith (1919); Ten Sermons, ed. G. Keynes (1923); Devotions upon Emergent Occasions, ed. J. Sparrow (1923); Juvenilia, ed. G. Keynes (1923); The Divine Poems of J. D. ed. H. Gardner (1952); Sir E. Gosse, Life and letters (2 vols, 1899); The Works, ed. H. Alford (6 vols, 1839).

I. Walton, Life of D. (1658), ed. T. E. Tomlins (1852); H. L'A. Fausset, J. D. (1924); E. M. Simpson, A Study of the Prose Works (1924); M. Praz, Secentismo e Marinismo in Inghilterra (1925); T. Spencer et al., A Garland for J. D. (1932); J. Bennett, J. D. (1934); J. B. Leishman, The Monarch of Wit (1951); G. Keynes, A Bibliography (new ed. 1932).

J.R.B.

Donneau de Visé, Jean (*Paris 3 XII 1638; †ibid. 8 VII 1710), French writer. Primarily a journalist, he founded the short-lived Nouvelles Nouvelles (1663), then the Le Mercure Galant (1672), which became the original Mercure de France (1714–1825). He mingled in most of the literary controversies of his time and was appointed historiographer royal in 1691. He wrote numerous plays, predominantly comedies, collaborating after 1674 with T. Corneille.

La Véritable critique de l'Ecole des femmes (1663); Réponse à l'Impromptu de Versailles (1663); La Mère coquette (1665); La Devineresse (1679, with T. Corneille).
O. Langheim, De V., sein Leben (1903).
G.B.

Donoso Cortés, Juan (*nr Badajoz 1809; †Paris 1853), Spanish writer, professor of the humanities at Seville, minister plenipotentiary in Prussia and Paris, a friend of Veuillot and Montalembert and the most powerful personality among the anti-liberal, ultramontane section of political catholics. His vigorous, fiery, though oratorical prose is seen at its best in Ensayo sobre el catolicismo, el liberalismo y el socialismo (1851). Donoso offers Catholicism, in its most virulent form, as the only desirable alternative to modern civilization, which he opposes on account of his pessimistic view of man and reason. Though attacked by liberal catholic thinkers of his day, there is now in Spain, France and Germany a renewed interest in his work.

Obras (4 vols, 1946).
E. Schramm, D. C., su vida y su pensamiento (tr. from the German, 1936). R.M.N.

Dorlant, Pieter, latinized Petrus Dorlandus (*Walcourt 1454; †Zeelhem 15 VIII 1507), Dutch writer, a Carthusian at Zeelhem near Diest. He wrote sixty-odd Latin and a number of Dutch works of ascetic, mystical and historical character. His authorship of Elckerlyc (Everyman), suggested by Logeman, defended by Van Mierlo, seems highly improbable.

L. Willems, Elckerlyc-studien (1934); H. Scholtens, 'De kartuizer P. D.', in Ons Geestelijk Erf (1935 and 1951) and 'De kartuizer P. D. en de Elckerlyc problemen', in Ons Geest. Erf (1952); J. v. Mierlo, De prioriteit v. Elckerlyc (1948); J. J. Mak, in Tijdschr. Nederl. T. en Lett. (1949), Vlaamse Gids (1950) and N. Taalgids (1951). J.J.M.

Dorsch, Eduard (*Würzburg 10 I 1822; ∞1885 Augusta Uhl, née Korte, after death of his 1st wife; †Monroe, Michigan 10 I 1887), German-American poet, one of the Forty-Eighters.

Kurze Hirtenbriefe an das deutsche Volk diesseits und jenseits des Ozeans (1851); Parabasen (1875); Aus der alten und neuen Welt (1884).
A. B. Faust, in Dict. Am. Biog., V (1930); H. G. Carlson, 'A Distinguished Forty-eighter, E. D.', in Michigan Hist. Mag., XIX (1935). E.R.

Dorset, Charles Sackville, sixth earl of (*Copt Hall ? 24 I 1642/3; ∞Mary, widow of Charles Berkeley, ∞27 VIII 1704 Anne Roche; †Bath 26 I 1705/6), English courtier, poet and munificent patron of letters. Although lord chamberlain to William III he paid Dryden when the laureate's pension was withdrawn. Eugenius, in Dryden's Essay of Dramatic Poesy, Sackville wrote satire and witty occasional verse.

The Works of the Earls of Rochester, Roscommon, Dorset, etc. (1714); Poems, ed. S. Johnson, XI; Chalmers, VIII; Anderson, VI.
B. Harris, C. S., patron and poet (1940).
B.L.J.

Dorset, Thomas Sackville, first earl of, and lord Buckhurst (*1536; ∞1554 Cecily Baker; †London 19 IV 1608), English poet and dramatist. He wrote most of his poetry before he was 30 and afterwards devoted himself to affairs of state (peerage 1567). His contributions to A Mirror for Magistrates (1563), an Induction and Buckingham's Complaint, provide the most majestic and haunting poetry between that of Chaucer and Spenser. He also wrote the last two acts of Gorboduc, the first tragedy in blank verse.

A Mirror for Magistrates (1563, contains his Induction and Complaint), ed. L. B. Campbell (1938); The Complaint of Henry, Duke of Buckingham (and the Induction), ed. M. Hearsey (1936); The Tragedie of Gorboduc (1565), ed. J. W. Cunliffe, Early English Classical Tragedies (1912).
W. F. Trench, A Mirror for Magistrates: Its Origin and Influence (1898); J. Davies, A Mirror for Magistrates, considered with Special Reference to the Sources of S.'s Contribution (Leipzig, 1906); W. Farnham, The Medieval Heritage of Elizabethan Tragedy (1936); J. Swart, T. S. (Groningen, 1948). W.A.A.

Dōshun: see Hayashi Razan.

Dosoftei, metropolitan of Moldavia and Suceava (*1624; †Jolcov 1693), author of the first Rumanian metrical psalter, and a distinguished scholar and linguist. During the Turkish-Polish war (1671) he fled to Poland. Returning to Moldavia in 1675 he was imprisoned, pardoned and reinstated but in 1682 the Polish king deported him and the Suceava church treasure and imprisoned him in the castle of Stric until shortly before his death.

Psaltirea a lui David (1673); Vieţa şi petrecere sfinţilor (4 vols, 1682).
N. I. Apostolescu, L'ancienne versification roumaine (1909); S. Ciobanu, D., Metropolit Moldovei (1918). A.V.W.

Dostoyevsky, Fëdor Mikhailovich (*Moscow 11 XI 1821; †St Petersburg 9 II 1881), Russian novelist. Because of his despotic father, a surgeon who was murdered by his own serfs in 1839, he had a sad childhood and adolescence. In addition he later became subject to epileptic fits which tormented him to the end of his life. In 1843 he graduated in the school of engineering at St Petersburg and obtained a government post. But he soon decided to live by literature. He started his career in 1846 with two shorter novels: Bednye lyudi ('Poor Folk') with its intense note of pity, and the Hoffmannesque Dvoynik ('The Double') with its dissection of a self-divided human personality. Both he wrote under the influence of Gogol. In 1849 he was arrested as a member of the revolutionary Petrashevsky circle and sentenced to death; at the last moment the death sentence was commuted to Siberia. Here he spent eight years: four among the worst criminals in the penal settlement at Omsk, and another four in a line-battalion at Semipalatinsk where, in 1857, he married the consumptive and hysterical Marya Dmitrievna Isayeva, who died in 1864. He resumed his literary activities shortly before he returned to European Russia (1859). Once back in St Petersburg, he started publishing, together with his brother Michael, the periodical Vremya in which he printed his novel Unizhennye i oskorblënnye ('The Insulted and Injured', 1861) and his absorbingly interesting Siberian reminiscences, Zapiski iz mërtvogo doma ('Memoirs from the House of the Dead', 1861–62). When, in 1863, Vremya had been prohibited, he published in its short-lived successor, Epokha (1864–65), his Zapiski iz podpolya, a philosophic-psychological prelude to his great novels, Prestuplenie i nakazanie ('Crime and Punishment', 1866), Idiot (1868), Besy ('The Possessed', 1871–72), and Bratya Karamazovy ('The Brothers Karamazov', 1879–80).

After a hectic and painful love affair with Apollinaria Suslova, described in his short novel Igrok ('The Gambler', 1866), he married in 1867 the devoted Anna Grigoryevna Snitkina with whom he fled from his creditors to western Europe. Disappointed with what he had seen abroad, he returned in July 1871 to Russia where his fame was now increasing until it reached its climax with the publication of Bratya Karamazovy. During 1873–74 he moreover published in the periodical Grazhdanin his Dnevnik pisatelya ('An Author's Diary'), which he continued as a series of independent issues in 1876–77, and then again in 1880, in a thoroughly Slavophil spirit. Yet in his Pushkin speech, in 1880, he defined his own Slavophil creed as that universality of the Russian mind in which a creative synthesis of east and west is eventually bound to take place.

Already in Dostoyevsky's first two works are indicated the two main elements of his writings: pity and psychology. Yet as psychologist he was interested above all in the abnormal mental states, since he was convinced that only such states can reveal that true essence of man which he was anxious to explore and to reveal. In this he anticipated the findings of recent psychology as well as the problems raised by Nietzsche and—later—by the more serious existentialists. The ultimate mystery of human personality, of good and evil, of Christianity, of God and immortality urged him to go farther and farther in his quest. Refusing to separate social problems from metaphysical values he became, in spite of his hidden scepticism, a modern God-seeker with an insatiable thirst for religion. Both came to a head in Bratya Karamazovy—a novel in which he championed a renewal of man and life through a change of consciousness in the name of deeper spiritual values. In addition to his great novels he wrote a number of narratives, among which Bobok is one of the most cruel satires ever written.

Polnoye sobranie sochineniy (6 vols, 1886); Polnoye sobranie khudozhestvennykh proizvedeniy (19 vols, 1933–34); The Novels of Fyodor Dostoevsky (tr. C. Garnett, 1912 ff.); Stavrogin's Confession (tr. S. S. Koteliansky and V. Woolf, 1922); The Brothers Karamazov (tr. C. Garnett, 1927); The Possessed (tr. C. Garnett, 1931); The Diary of a Writer (tr. B. Brasol, 2 vols, 1949); Crime and Punishment (tr. D. Magarshack, 1951).
Letters of F. M. D. to his Family and Friends (tr. C. Mayne, 1917); New D. Letters (tr. S. S. Koteliansky, 1929); The Letters of D. to his Wife (tr. E. Hill and D. Mudie, 1930); Lettres de D. à A. M. Maikov (tr. J. Lodine, 1933).

V. Rozanov, Legenda o velikom inkvizitore, (1894); D. Merezhkovsky, Tolstoy i D. (1901); L. Shestov, D. i Nietzsche (1905); A. Gide, D. (1923); N. Berdyayev, Mirosozertsanie Dostoevskogo (1923); V. Pereverzev, D. (1925); A. P. Suslova, Gody blizosti s Dostoyevskim (1928); A. J. Meier-Graefe, D. the Man and his Work (1928); A. Yarmolinsky, D. (1934); A. S. Dolinin (ed.), F. M. D. (1935); W. Neuschaeffer, Dostojewski's Einfluss auf den engl. Roman (1935); H. Troyat, D. (1940); J. Lavrin, D. (1943); N. M. Zernov, Three Russian Prophets (1944); A. Stocker, Âme russe. Réalisme psychologique des Frères Karamazov (1945); J. Lloyd, D. (1946); A. S. Dolinin, V tvorcheskoy laboratorii Dostoevskogo (1947); S. Freud, D. and Parricide (1947); K. V. Mochulsky, D. (1947); J. C. Powys, D. (1947); L. A. Zander, D. (1948); A. L. Bem, Evolyutsiya obraza Stavrogina (1949); R. Curle, Characters of D. (1950); E. J. Simmons, D. (1950); N. Gorodetsky, Saint Tikhon Zadonsky, Inspirer of D. (1951); V. Ivanov, D. (1952). J.L.

Douglas, GAVIN (*Tantallon Castle, Scotland c. 1474; †London IX 1522), Scottish bishop and poet. Educated at St Andrews University; provost of St Giles', Edinburgh, 1501; and bishop of Dunkeld, 1516. He went to London on the fall of his nephew and patron, the earl of Angus, and there died of the plague. The Palice of Honour (1553 ?, 1579; a poem of over 200 nine-line stanzas) and King Hart (120 eight-line stanzas) are conventional allegories in the English medieval tradition. Douglas was apparently the first British translator of the Aeneid. His decasyllabic version (which included a translation of the pseudo-13th book of Mapius Vegius) has considerable poetic merit; but his finest work is in the original prologues to the books, especially in his descriptions of nature in a strong, rich Scots diction.

King Hart and Conscience (Maitland Folio MS.; pr. 1786); The XIII Bukes of Eneados (1553; 1839).—Poetical Works, ed. J. Small (4 vols, 1874).

L. M. Watt, D.'s Aeneid (1920). J.K.

Dousa, JANUS (*Noordwijk 5 XII 1545; ∞1566 Eliz. v. Zuylen; †The Hague 8 X 1609), Dutch humanistic statesman, historian and poet. He studied at Louvain, Douai and Paris. In 1572 he joined the Reformation and the Revolt. He was one of the leading figures during the siege of Leiden and visited England several times as ambassador. In 1591 he moved to The Hague as councillor in the Supreme Court. Dousa was early attracted to poetry, first through the influence of Janus Secundus. In 1569 Epigrammatum lib. ii, Satyrae ii, Elegorum lib. i, Silvarum lib. ii appeared, in 1575 Nova Poemata (including topical songs on the siege of Leiden), in 1586 Odae Britannicae, an impression of his experiences in England. His poems in Dutch are rare. In collaboration with Jan van Hout he translated Secundus's Basia; he also wrote a preface in verse for Melis Stoke's Rijmkroniek (1591). His chief merit lies in his historiographical work. With his metrical Annales (1599), extended and adapted in prose in 1601 into Bataviae Hollandiaeque Annales, based on primary sources, he paved the way for modern critical historiography.

Poemata pleraque selecta (1609); Nederduitsche Ged., ed. P. C. Molhuysen in De Navorscher (1901).

H. Kampinga, De opvattingen over onze oudere vaderl. gesch. bij de Holl. historici der 16e en 17e eeuw (1917); G. Ellinger, Gesch. d. neulatein. Lyrik in d. Niederlanden (1933). J.J.M.

Douwes Dekker, EDUARD: see MULTATULI.

Dovizi, BERNARDO, also called IL BIBBIENA (*Bibbiena 1470; †Rome 1520), Italian playwright, created cardinal by pope Leo X, whose secretary he had been. 'Homo faceto et discreto' Francesco Vettori called him in a letter to Machiavelli, and as such he appears in the role assigned to him by Castiglione in Il Cortegiano. His portrait was painted by Raphael. His comedy, La Calandria, first produced at Urbino in 1513, was performed at the Vatican in 1514 with scenery by Peruzzi which has been described by Vasari.

La Calandria, crit. ed. I. Sanesi, in Commedie del Cinquecento (1912).

A. Santelli, Il cardinale Bibbiena (1931); I. Sanesi, La Commedia, I (1911). B.R.

Dowden, EDWARD (*Cork 3 V 1843; †Dublin 4 IV 1913), Irish scholar; professor of English literature at Trinity College, Dublin. His literary reputation rests mainly upon his Shakespearean studies.

Shakespeare, his Mind and Art (1875); A Shakespeare Primer (1877); Essays, Modern and Elizabethan (1910).—Poems (1876). R.McH.

Dowson, ERNEST CHRISTOPHER (*Lee 2 VIII 1867; †Catford 23 II 1900), English lyrical poet. His mother committed suicide; his father died in 1894, leaving him an insolvent dry-dock, which he sold; from that date until 1899 he lived in France, earning his living by translating French classics for the notorious but enterprising publisher Leonard Smithers. His first and best book, Verses (1896), placed him at once among the great poets of the day, with his friends W. B. Yeats and Lionel Johnson. Many of his poems appeared first in the Yellow Book, the Savoy and the two Books of the Rhymers' Club. His early death was precipitated by tuberculosis and the reckless disregard with which he treated his health.

Verse: Verses (1896); The Pierrot of the Minute, a dramatic phantasy in one act (1897); Decorations (1899).—Novels: A Comedy of Masks (1893, with Arthur Moore); Dilemmas (1895); Adrian Rome (1899).—Collected Poems, ed. Arthur Symons (1905; intro. unreliable); Poetical Works, ed. D. Flower, with full intro. and life (1934, incl. 40 unpub. poems).

V. Plarr, E. D. Reminiscences, 1887–97 (1914; biog. details unreliable); H. J. C. Grierson, Lyrical Poetry from Blake to Hardy (1928); M. Longaker, E. D. (2nd ed. 1945).

D.F.

Drachmann, Holger Henrik Herholdt (*Copenhagen 9 X 1846; ∞1871 Vilhelmine Charlotte Erichsen, ∞1879 Emmy Culmsee, ∞1903 Sophie Elisabeth Drewsen, née Lasson; †Hornbæk 14 I 1908), Danish poet, novelist and short-story writer, originally a painter. A visit to England in 1871 inspired him to write his first significant poems. He was then a staunch supporter of Georg Brandes, but in the 1880s he turned violently against Brandes' radical views and became a poet of romantic and patriotic sentiment, finally adopting an attitude of bohemian individualism, unattached to any group.

Drachmann holds a high place in Danish literature as a lyric poet, passionate, impulsive and capricious. His temperament was lyrical and impressionable, greatly influenced by women. He saw his own changeable nature in the sea, a subject to which he constantly returned. His faults are obvious—his wordiness, his egotism, his poses—but in his best poems he has a complete mastery of verse and phrase, and ranks with Johannes Ewald. He is also indebted to Oehlenschläger, Winther and Aarestrup, and to Heine and Byron. His nearest equivalent in English literature is Swinburne.

Verse: Digte (1872); Dæmpede Melodier (1875); Sange ved Havet (1877); Ungdom i Digt og Sang (1879); Ranker og Roser (1879); Prinsessen og det halve Kongerige (1878); Østen for Sol og Vesten for Maane (1880); Gamle Guder og nye (1881); Dybe Strenge (1884); Sangenes Bog (1889); Unge Viser (1892); Broget Løv (1901); Vagabundus (1910).—Plays: Vølund Smed (1894); Renæssance (1894; Renaissance, Melodrama, tr. in Poet Lore, XIX, 1908); Melodramaer (1805); Gurre (1898).—Novels and Various: Med Kul og Kridt (1872); I Storm og Stille (1875); Tannhäuser (1877); Derovre fra Grænsen (1877); Paa Sømands Tro og Love (1878); Poul og Virginie under Nordlig Bredde (1879; Eng. tr. Paul and Virginia of a Northern Zone, 1895); Lars Kruse (1879); Vildt og Tæmmet (1881); Vandenes Datter (1881); Smaa Fortællinger (1884; Eng. tr. The Cruise of the Wild Duck and Other Tales, 1891); Strandby Folk (1883); Der var engang— (1885); Skyggebilleder (1883); Derovre fra Grænsen (1886); Med den brede Pensel (1887); Troldtøj (1889); Forskrevet (1890); Den hellige Ild (1899); Kirke og Orgel (1904); Hr. Oluf han rider—(1906).—Eng. tr.: Byron in Homespun (1920); Robert Burns (1925).—Samlede poetiske Skrifter (12 vols, 1906–09); Poetiske Skrifter i Udvalg (10 vols, 1927).

E. Juel-Hansen, D. som Dreng (1906); V. Vedel, H. D. (1909); E. Gosse, Two Visits to Denmark (1911); Emmy Drachmann, Erindringer om H. D. (1925); H. Bentzon, D. i Breve til hans Fædrenehjem (1932); P. V. Rubow, D.s Ungdom (1940); L. Nielsen, H. D. (1942); P. V. Rubow, H. D. 1878–97 (1945); P. V. Rubow, H. D. Sidste Aar (1950).

E.B.

Dracontius, Blossius Aemilius, of Carthage (fl. late 5th century A.D.), Christian Latin poet. Imprisoned by the Vandal King Gunthamund (484–96) for having eulogized an enemy, he sought pardon in an elegiac poem, the Satisfactio, and, before his release, composed a didactic poem in hexameters, the De Laudibus Dei. Both these are illustrated from legend and from Roman as well as biblical history. Dracontius' secular poems, the Romulea, include short mythological epics and rhetorical school-exercises, and show a knowledge of classical literature which is, for the period, remarkable. The Orestis Tragoedia is also now correctly ascribed to him.

Dracontii carmina, ed. F. Vollmer in Mon. Germ. Hist., 14 (1905) and in Poetae Latini Minores, 5 (1914).

F. J. E. Raby, Christian Latin Poetry (1927).

A.J.D.

Drake, Joseph Rodman (*New York 7 VIII 1795; ∞1816 Sarah Eckford; †ibid. 21 IX 1820), American poet. He studied medicine, wrote the satirical 'Croaker' pieces with his friend Halleck. 'The Culprit Fay' was long regarded as one of the best American poems.

Poems, by Croaker, Croaker & Co., and Croaker, Jun. (1819); The Culprit Fay and Other Poems (1835).

F. L. Pleadwell, The Life and Works of J. R. D. (1935).

H.L.C.

Draper, John William (*St Helens 5 V 1811; †Hastings-on-Hudson 4 I 1882), American scientist and historian who approached history as a science.

History of the Intellectual Development of Europe (1862); History of American Civil War (3 vols, 1867); History of Conflict between Religion and Science (1874).

Thomas Waln-Morgan Draper, The Drapers in America (1892); M. S. Brown, 'Historical Writings of J. W. D.', in The Colonnade (New York University, 1911). R.M.H.

Drayton, MICHAEL (*Hartshill, Warwicks. 1563; †London 23 XII 1631 ?), English poet and dramatist who was competent, often more than competent, in all the many forms and styles to which he turned. Little is known of his youth. He was apparently page to Henry Goodere in 1573 and served Thomas Goodere at Collingham c. 1580, returning to Henry c. 1585. In London in 1591, Drayton published his pastoral Idea two years later. From 1606 to 1619, possibly longer, apparently unmarried, Drayton celebrated his love for Anne Goodere, wife of Sir Henry Rainsford, in the Idea of his verse. With Mortimeriados published (1596), he collaborated (1597–1601) with Munday, Dekker and Wilson in plays for Henslowe. In Scotland 1599, he attended as esquire Walter Aston's creation as K.B. (1603). Drayton was connected with the Children of the King's Revels at Whitefriars (1607–08), was in prince Henry's household (1612) and was associated with Edmund Bolton's scheme for an academy (c. 1617). Drayton, a well-liked, sincere, sociable countryman, was thorough in all his writing and kept abreast of developments; his sonnets, at first conventionally mellow, were later colloquially ironic. His couplets show a grasp of technique, apparent also in his rhyme royal and ottava rima. His feeling for epic is expressed in the patriotic Polyolbion, and his perfect fusion of native and classic inheritance in the delightful Muses' Elyzium (1630). B.L.J.

Poems (1605 etc.; 1637; repr. Spenser Soc., 1888).—The Harmony of the Church (1591); Idea (1593); Ideas Mirror (1594); Matilda (1594); Endimion and Phoebe (1595); Mortimeriados (1596); Robert of Normandy etc. (1596); England's Heroical Epistles (1597 etc.); Polyolbion (1612 etc.; repr. Spenser Soc., 1890); The Battle of Agincourt (1627; 1631); The Muses Elizium (1630).—SELECTIONS: Minor Poems, ed. C. Brett (1907); Idea. In Sixty Three Sonnets, ed. M. F. Crow (1897). —Complete Works, ed. J. W. Hebel, K. Tillotson and B. Newdigate (1931–41).

O. Elton, An Introduction to M. D. (Spenser Soc., 1895), M. D., A Critical Study (1905); L. Whittaker, 'D. as a Dramatist', Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 18 (1903); B. Newdigate, M. D. and his Circle (1940). J.R.B.

Dreier, FREDERIK HENRIK HENNINGS (*Copenhagen 16 XII 1827; †ibid. 9 V 1853), Danish essayist. He was Denmark's first socialist, a highly gifted personality. He is a consistent realist in the middle of Denmark's romantic period.

Blik paa det det verdenshistoriske Værk Clara Raphael (1851); M. A. Goldschmidt, et Literaturbillede (1852); Aandetroen og den frie Tænkning (1852).

R. Nielsen, F. D. (1921). E.B.

Droogenbroeck, JAN VAN, pseud. JAN FERGUUT (*St Amands 18 I 1835; †Brussels 27 V 1902), Flemish poet. A disciple of Dautzenberg, he concentrated on form. He translated Rückert and compiled a rhyming dictionary (1883).

Makamen en Ghazelen (1866); Dit zijn zonnestralen (1873); Spreuken en Sproken (1891).

J. Muyldermans, in Jaarboek der Kon. Vl. Academie (1908). R.F.L.

Drost, AARNOUT (*Amsterdam 15 III 1810; †5 XI 1834), Dutch theologian and writer, admired by Bakhuizen and Potgieter (with whom he founded 'De Muzen') because of his deep religiosity and harmonious personality. Drost's sketches and novels treated the national past in the spirit of pure romanticism; his friends finished his posthumous work in the style of the romanticism of De Gids. His literary criticism is well balanced.

NOVEL: Hermingard van de Eikenterpen (1832).—SKETCHES: Schetsen en Verhalen (2 vols, 1835 and 1836).

J. M. de Waal, A. D. (1918); P. N. van Eyck, in Bibl. der Ned. Letteren, II (1939) and in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., 60 (1941). J.W.W.

Droste, COENRAAT (*Dordrecht VIII 1642; †The Hague V 1734), Dutch soldier, writer of important memoirs (Verversing van geheugchenis, 1723), plays (De Haagsche Schouburg, 2 vols, 1710–14) and poetry. J.W.W.

Droste-Hülshoff, ANNETTE (Anna Elizabeth), Freiin von (*Schloss Hülshoff bei Münster 10 I 1797; †Meersburg, Bodensee 24 V 1848), German poet. A Westphalian aristocrat, she lived in retirement with her mother in a dower-house, though her literary interests were stimulated by contacts with the brothers Grimm, Freiligrath, Adele Schopenhauer, C. B. Schlüter, and, on visits to her brother-in-law Freiherr von Lassberg, with Uhland and other Swabian poets. Her warm friendship with Levin Schücking, 17 years her junior, ended in his marrying another and wounding her with his novel Die Ritterbürtigen. Her health was never good; her greatness, which now seems beyond question, not widely recognized during her lifetime. A poetic realist, she drew her inspiration, like Emily Brontë whom she in some ways resembled, from communion with her native countryside, fusing sensibility with microscopic intensity of vision. She was preoccupied, too, with the supernatural and the dark side of life. This found expression in her narrative poems and in her great Novelle Die Judenbuche (1842). A pious Roman Catholic, her spiritual struggles are recorded in Das Geistliche Jahr (1852), an outstanding collection of devotional verse.

Dichtungen (1838); The Jew's Beech-tree, tr. Lillie Winter (1915); Gedichte (1844).—Gesammelte Werke (5 vols, 1925) and Briefe (2 vols, 1943), both ed. K. Schulte-Kemminghausen.

Levin Schücking, A. v. D.-H., ein Lebensbild (1862; ed. L. L. Schücking, 1942); K. Schulte-Kemminghausen, A. v. D.-H. (1939); Jahrbuch der Droste-Hülshoff Gesellschaft (1947 ff.). H.A.P.

Drouart la Vache (fl. late 13th century), translated the De Amore of Andreas Capellanus into French verse (1290).

Ed. of the poem and study of the poet (with title D. la V.) by R. Bossuat (both 1926). F.W.

Drumev, VASSIL, also known as KLIMENT, archbishop of Tirnovo (*Shumen 23 II 1840; †Tirnovo 9 VII 1901), Bulgarian writer. He started writing as a student in the Moscow Religious Academy in the 1860s. His autobiographical novel Neshtastna Familia (1860) became at once a best seller in Bulgaria and was banned by the Turkish authorities. The Turks did not interfere, however, in Drumev's religious activities and in 1873 he was elected archbishop of Tirnovo, the virtual head of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church. His only play Ivanko (1871) is still considered the best in the Bulgarian theatre literature. After the liberation of Bulgaria he became active in politics and was for a time prime minister.

Collected Works, ed. T. Pashev (3 vols, 1911).

M. Arnaudov, Sbornik Kliment Tarnovski (1927); B. Penev, Parvata Balgarska Povest (1929); Y. Trifinov, Drumev-Jivot Deynost Harakter (1929.) M.P.

Drummond, WILLIAM (*Hawthornden 13 XII 1585; ∞1632 Elizabeth Logan; †ibid. 4 XII 1649), Scottish poet and royalist pamphleteer. Educated at Edinburgh University; studied law at Bourges and Paris; and spent most of his life in literary solitude at Hawthornden. He enjoyed the friendship of Montrose, Drayton, and Ben Jonson, whose visit to Hawthornden in 1619 is recorded in Drummond's Conversations. Drummond's poetry is in the English Elizabethan tradition; he is an accomplished artist in formal lyric; and there is passion as well as art in the sonnets on his dead mistress and his religious Flowers of Sion (1623).

Tears on the Death of Meliades (1613); Poems (1616); Forth Feasting (1617); A Midnight's Trance (1619; ed. R. Ellrodt, 1951); Cypress Grove (1623); The History of Scotland, 1453–1542 (1655); Poems (1656).—Conversations of Ben Jonson with W. D. (pr. imperfectly 1711; ed. D. Laing, 1842).—Poetical Works, ed. L. E. Kastner (2 vols, 1913).

D. Masson, D. of Hawthornden (1873); A. Joly, W. D. de Hawthornden (1934). J.K.

Drummond, WILLIAM HENRY (*Ireland 13 IV 1854; ∞1894 May Isabel Harvey; †Cobalt, Ont. 1907), Canadian physician and dialect poet who wrote in the manner of the French Canadian habitant.

The Habitant (London, 1897); The Voyageur (New York, 1905); The Great Fight (with biog. memoir, New York and London, 1908). M.H.M.M.

Drużbacka, ELŻBIETA, née Kowalska (*Pomorze 1695; †Tarnów 17 III 1765), Polish poet. Brought up at the courts of the nobility she spent her last years in a convent. Her poetry is natural, religious and pure in language; her descriptions of nature are particularly good.

Opisanie czterech pór roku (1752); Pochwała lasów (1752); Skargi kilku dam (1752).—Fabuła o księcin Adolfie (1752).—Poezje (2 vols, Leipsic, 1837).

E. Bełcikowski, 'E. z kowalskich Drużbacka', in Ze studiów nad liter. pol. (1886); W. Borowy, 'D. i Pani d'Aulnoy', in Kamienne rękawiczki (1932). S.S.

Druzhinin, ALEXANDER VASILYEVICH (*St Petersburg 8 X 1824; †14 I 1864), Russian critic and author of several narratives among which Polinka Sacks (1847), dealing with woman's emancipation, had the greatest success. He defended the purely aesthetic values against the utilitarian attitude of Belinsky, Chernyshevsky etc. He also translated several Shakespeare plays and wrote essays about English authors.

Sobranie sochineniy (8 vols, 1865–67); Pis'ma Druzhinina k Turgenevu (1930).

S. A. Vengerov, Kritiko- bibliogr. slovar' russkikh pisateley i uchënykh, V (1897); Ocherki po istorii russkoy kritiki, I, ed. A. Lunacharsky and V. Polyansky (1929). J.L.

Dryden, JOHN (*Aldwinkle-All-Saints 9 VIII 1631; ∞London 1 XII 1663 Lady Elizabeth Howard; †London I V 1700), English poet, dramatist, translator and prose writer, who was king's scholar at Westminster School and proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge (1650). In 1654 he was employed in a secretarial post with Milton and Marvell, possibly hack-writing for Herringman, until the restoration brought him royal favour and a fashionable public. His service to the Commonwealth with the poem to Cromwell's memory (1659), and his transference of loyalty to Charles II, with his embracing the religion of James II, have led to his being represented as a turncoat, especially as he became poet laureate (1668) and historiographer royal (1670); but Dryden's unhesitating devotion to faith and king forfeited these posts after the revolution. Although a mild and kindly person of regular habits and with domestic virtues he was involved frequently in political and literary controversies which descended to personalities. Mistaken for the author of the anonymous Essay upon Satyr he was assaulted (Dec. 1679). Dryden was one of those few writers of vast range and output, whose creative energy is matched by the ability rarely to fall below competence and often to rise above it. He thoroughly understood every form which he attempted and in his imagination and ideals as in his wit and workmanship he was, as much as Shakespeare, Spenser or Milton, a fulfilment of the earlier renaissance. With a fine ear, he combined harmony and grace with clear and strong thinking, whether in blank or rhyming verse or prose. As a satirist he was the model for the next century. As critic he passes on easily and elegantly the informed opinion of the educated gentleman unsmirched by any hint of pedantry. Always sensitive to transmit the temper of his age, he lets us see it as the heir to the past despite all innovation. While defending Shakespeare, he none the less acknowledged the competence of Rymer. Dryden has been acclaimed for his prose and non-dramatic verse, but changes of theatrical fashion have obscured his excellence as a constructor of plays. The plots are intricate but coherent, the verse and prose easy to speak and not unpleasant to listen to (often rising to heights, never bad for long; and, if trivial, rarely bad theatre). It is probable that in the effort of writing 28 plays under contract for the King's Players, and then for the Duke's Company, Dryden achieved the sureness of touch which distinguishes his prologues, occasional verse and longer poems. No mean translator, he achieved his aim of making his poet speak the kind of English which is equivalent to the style and language of the original, a redistillation of spirit which serves two civilizations.

B.L.J.

Annus Mirabilis, etc. (1688, first collected ed. of the poems); Original Poems and translations (1701); Poetical Works with notes by Joseph Warton (etc.), ed. H. J. Todd (4 vols, 1811); Poetical Works, ed. W. D. Christie (1870), ed. G. R. Noyes (1908); The Works (1691, first collected ed. of the plays); Comedies, Tragedies and Operas (2 vols, 1701); Dramatic Works, ed. W. Congreve (6 vols, 1717), ed. M. Summers (6 vols, 1931–32); The Prose Works, ed. E. Malone (3 vols, 1800); Essays, ed. W. P. Ker (2 vols, 1900); Prologues and Epilogues, ed. W. B. Gardner (1951); The Works, ed. W. Scott (18 vols, 1808), rev. G. E. B. Saintsbury (1882–92).

G. E. B. Saintsbury, D. (1881); A. W. Verrall, Lectures on D. (1914); M. Van Doren, The Poetry of D. (rev. 1931); T. S. Eliot, Homage to J. D. (1934); M. Macdonald, J. D. A bibliography (1939); J. M. Osborn, J. D. Some biographical facts and problems (1940); D. N. Smith, J. D. (1950); S. M. Monk, J. D.: a list of critical studies 1895–1948 (1950). J.R.B.

Držić, DJORDJE (*Ragusa 6 II 1461; †ibid. 26 IX 1501), Dalmatian poet. With Menčetić, he is the earliest Ragusan poet whose work survives. His love poems show little originality and are frank imitations of Petrarch, though some influence of the old traditional Slav poetry is also to be seen.

Stari Pisci Hrvatski, vol. 2 (1870). S.C.

Držić, MARIN (*Ragusa c. 1518; †Venice 2 V 1567), Dalmatian poet and playwright, came of an artistic Ragusan family, studied in Italy and travelled widely through Europe, returning to Ragusa where he won repute as a musician, poet and organizer of carnivals. Though few of his works survive in toto, he may be regarded as Ragusa's leading dramatist of renaissance spirit. His comedies are constructed with the conventional machinery of involved plots and far-fetched coincidences. His dialogue is realistic and lively, and his characters (e.g. deceived husband, greedy miser etc.) memorable prototypes comparable to Molière's. Their construction is often slap-dash, but his best work—Dundo Maroje (c. 1551)—gives a vivid picture of contemporary Ragusa. S.C.

Duarte, king of Portugal, 1433–38 (*Viseu 1391; ∞1428 Leonor of Aragon; †1438), Portuguese moralist, son of João I and Philippa of Lancaster. He commissioned Fernão Lopes to write his chronicles of the kings of Portugal. A man of studious disposition, he has left in the Leal conselheiro his reflections on a great variety of subjects. His analysis of melancholy and his exposition of 'methodical doubt' are of extraordinary interest for the period in which they were written. His other work, a treatise on horsemanship, also contains many penetrating observations of a moral and psychological nature.

Leal conselheiro, ed. J. I. Roquette (Paris, 1842), ed. J. M. Piel (1942); Livro da ensinança de bem cavalgar toda sela, ed. J. M. Piel (1944).

A. Soares Amora, El-rei D. Duarte e o 'Leal conselheiro' (São Paulo, 1948); M. Rodrigues Lapa, 'D. Duarte e a prosa didáctica', in Lições de literatura portuguesa. Época medieval (3rd ed. 1952). T.P.W.

Du Bartas, GUILLAUME DE SALLUSTE, seigneur (*Montfort, nr Auch 1544; †Paris VII 1590), French poet. A militant Huguenot like d'Aubigné, he visited England and Scotland (1587) on diplomatic missions for Henry of Navarre. His early long poems (Uranie, Le Triomphe de la foi, Judith) are filled with religious didacticism and biblical reminiscences, and the same qualities reappear in his masterpiece, the two Semaines, enormously popular in their day and possibly influential over Tasso and Milton. The first Semaine (1578) recounts the days of the Creation in seven cantos. The second (unfinished) was to continue the story of humanity to the birth of Christ and beyond. The grandeur of Du Bartas's conceptions and of his descriptive alexandrines is marred by his outdated scientific notions and his often barbarous handling of language, but his very faults make him an interestingly original poet.

Works, crit. ed. U. T. Holmes etc. (Oxford, 1935).—The Historie of Judith, tr. T. Hudson (1584); Urania, tr. R. Ashley (1589); Du B. His Divine Weekes and Workes, tr. J. Sylvester, (1592–99).

G. Pellissier, La Vie et les œuvres de Du B. (1882). G.B.

Du Bellay, GUILLAUME (*1491; †1543), French statesman, author of an allegorical poem entitled Peregrinatio humana (1509). His memoirs (Ogdoades), originally written in Latin, were translated into French at the request of Francis I.

V. L. Bourilly, G. du B., seigneur de Langey (1905). E.V.

Du Bellay, JOACHIM (*Liré, Anjou 1522; †Paris 1 I 1560), French poet. Belonging to a younger branch of a powerful family, Du Bellay became Ronsard's fellow-student at the Collège de Coqueret and a brilliant Latinist. He launched in 1549 La Deffence et illustration de la langue françoise, the first manifesto of the Pléiade group (see B. ANEAU and T. SEBILLET). Du Bellay argued that the French language was a potential medium for the finest literature, but only if French writers would reject the medieval traditions and assimilate the Greeks and Latins, the great models of excellence. At the same time he published L'Olive, a collection of 115 sonnets of Petrarchan inspiration addressed to a mistress not certainly identified, and perhaps imaginary. This was the first French sonnet-sequence. In 1553–57 the poet was in Rome with his uncle cardinal Jean Du Bellay (earlier Rabelais' patron), whom he served unhappily as intendant. His impressions of Rome and the Romans and his personal misery in exile inspired his two finest works, Les Antiquités de Rome and, particularly, Les Regrets, both sonnet-collections (see O. DE MAGNY). Other notable books of poems were his miscellaneous Jeux Rustiques and his Latin Poemata (both composed in Rome).

The principal Pléiade poet after Ronsard, Du Bellay stands as the greatest French sonneteer. Though he owed much to Italian models, he achieves in Les Regrets at least an entirely personal note. He is a poet primarily of nostalgia, but capable also of irony, eloquence and exceptional delicacy in his lighter poems.

Deffence et illustration de la langue françoise (1549), crit. ed. H. Chamard (new ed. 1948), tr. G. M. Turquet (1939); L'Olive I, with Vers Lyriques (odes) (1549); Recueil de poésie (1549, 1553); L'Olive II, with Musagnœomachie (1550); Divers poèmes (1552); Les Jeux Rustiques (1558), ed. V. L. Saulnier (1947); Les Regrets and Les Antiquités de Rome (1558), both ed. E. Droz (1945), tr. in Spenser's Complaints (1591); Poemata (1558, in Latin; the Amores only ed. and tr. into Fr. by T. Sandre, 1923); Le Poète courtisan (1559); Discours (1558–67); Les Amours (1568); Xenia (1569, Latin epigrams).—Œuvres, ed. H. Chamard (6 vols, 1908–31; authoritative for all French works), ed. E. Courbet (2 vols, 1918; contains Latin works also).

H. Chamard, J. Du B. (1900); R. V. Merrill, The Platonism of Du B. (1926); J. Vianey, Les 'Regrets' de Du B. (1930). G.B.

Du Cange, CHARLES DU FRESNE, seigneur (*Amiens 18 XII 1610; †Paris 23 X 1688), French scholar, is currently remembered for his great medieval Latin dictionary which is still in use. He also edited Villehardouin (1657) and Joinville (1668).

Glossarium ad Scriptores Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis (3 vols, 1678; most recent expanded ed. by L. Favre, 10 vols, 1883–87, reissued 1937 ff.); Glossarium ad Scriptores Mediae et Infimae Graecitatis (2 vols, 1688).

L. Feugère, Essai sur la vie et les ouvrages de Du C. (1852). D.H.

Ducas (Christian name unknown), 15th-century Byzantine historian in the service of the Genoese Gateluzzi rulers of Lesbos. His world history gives valuable detail on the 15th century. He knew Turkish and Italian as well as his native Greek; and in spite of his love of classical antiquity he writes in the vernacular.

Historia, ed. I. Bekker (1934, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 157 (with Latin tr.).

W. Miller, 'The historians Doukas and Phrantzes', in Jour. Hell. Stud., 46 (1926). J.M.H.

Ducasse, Isidore-Lucien: see Lautréamont, Le Comte de.

Duchosal, Louis-Albert (*Geneva 13 IV 1862; †ibid. 28 II 1901), Swiss poet whose short career, marked by progressive paralysis, was a courageous spiritual reaction against his cruel destiny. His poems which at first expressed a revolt (Posthuma, 1910) came to be transpositions of his painful experiences. Le Livre de Thulé (1891) contains some traditional verse, but Duchosal is also the first of the rare French-Swiss symbolists. Le Rameau d'or (1894), a revised edition of La Forêt enchantée (1892), is perhaps the best work of a poet whose taste and artistry remain inferior to his genuine lyrical gift.

R.-L. Piachaud, Trois poètes, Tavan, D., Spiess (1917). J.P.I.

Ducis, Jean-François (*Versailles 22 VIII 1733; †ibid. 31 III 1816), French translator and dramatist. His timid adaptations of Shakespeare, though later than P. A. de La Place's abridged versions (1745–48) and less faithful than P. Le Tourneur's translation (1776–82), had the merit of first putting Shakespeare on the French stage. His own plays are colourless. See also Destouches.

Adaptations: Hamlet (1769); Roméo et Juliette (1772); Le Roi Lear (1783); Macbeth (1784); Othello (1792).—Plays: Œdipe chez Admète (1778); Abufar ou la Famille arabe (1795).—Œuvres (4 vols, 1826).

F. Baldensperger, Etudes d'hist. litt.: Shakespeare en France (1907). G.B.

Duclos, Charles Pinot (*Dinan 12 II 1704; †Paris 26 III 1772), French writer. He was at first an author of short stories and novels, in which a scabrous story was interlaced with moral reflexions. Appointed historiographer royal in succession to Voltaire, he produced his chief work, Les Considérations sur les mœurs de ce siècle (1751), which combines with epigrammatic comment a lively picture of contemporary manners and personalities.

Novel: *Les Confessions du comte de * (1742).—History: Histoire de Louis XI (1745); Mémoire pour servir à l'histoire des mœurs du 18e siècle (1752); Mémoires secrets sur les ègnes de Louis XIV et de Louis XV (1791).

L. le Bourgo, D. (1902). G.B.

Du Fail, Noël (*Château-Létard, nr Rennes c. 1520; †Rennes 7 VII 1591), French story-writer. A Breton country squire who had fought and travelled, Du Fail wrote realistically and understandingly of peasant life. His work contains amusing stories and sketches written with something of the verve of Rabelais and a strong dose of common-sense philosophy.

Propos rustiques (1547), ed. L. Lefèvre (1928); Baliverneries ou Contes nouveaux d'Eutrapel (1548), ed. L. Lefèvre (1928); Contes et discours d'Eutrapel (1585), ed. E. Courbet (1894).

E. Philippot, La Vie et l'œuvre de N. Du F. (1914); G. Reynier, Les Origines du roman réaliste (1912). G.B.

Dufferin, Helen Selina, née Sheridan, subsequently Countess of Gifford (*England ? 1807; ∞1825 Lord Dufferin (†1841), ∞1862 Earl of Gifford; †London ? 13 VI 1867), grand-daughter of Richard Brinsley Sheridan; wrote poems and some satirical prose of slight merit.

Collected Songs, Poems and Verses (1894). R.McH.

Duffet, Thomas (fl. 1678), English milliner who turned burlesque dramatist. He wrote The Mock Tempest (1675) for Drury Lane to oppose Dryden's Tempest at Dorset Gardens.

New Poems etc. (1676); The Spanish Rogue (1674). B.L.J.

Duffy, Sir Charles Gavan (*Monaghan 12 IV 1816; †Nice 9 II 1903), Irish statesman and writer; founder of Young Ireland movement; emigrated to Victoria 1855 and became its prime minister; returning to Ireland in 1880, he helped the Irish literary revival.

Young Ireland (1880); My Life in Two Hemispheres (1898). R.McH.

Dufresny, Charles Rivière (*Paris c. 1654; †ibid. 6 X 1724), French dramatist. An illegitimate descendant of Henri IV, he began in his 40s to write lightly-sketched comedies of character. His non-dramatic work, Les Amusements sérieux et comiques (1699), describing the adventures and reflexions of a Siamese visitor to Paris, has been seen as a forerunner of Montesquieu's Lettres Persanes.

Le Malade sans Maladie (1699); L'Esprit de Contradiction (1700); Le Double veuvage (1702); Le Jaloux honteux de l'être (1708); La Coquette du village (1715); La Réconciliation normande (1719); Le Mariage fait et rompu (1721).—Œuvres (1731, 1747).
W. Domann, D.'s Lustspiele (1904). G.B.

Dugdale, SIR WILLIAM (*Shustoke, nr Coleshill 12 IX 1605; ∞1622; †Blythe Hall 10 II 1685/6), English bibliographer, historical scholar. A friend of Sir Henry Spelman, Dugdale's driving force as an editor accomplished much, and earned him the severe nickname of 'Grand Plagiary'.

Monasticon Anglicanum (with Dodsworth, 1655–73); Antiquities of Warwickshire (1656), ed. W. Thomas (1730), repr. J. Jones (1765); Origines Judiciales (1666; 1671); The Baronage of England (1675–76).—The Life, Diary, and Correspondence of D., ed. W. Hamper (1827).—D. Douglas, English Scholars 1660–1730 (2nd ed. 1951). B.L.J.

Dugonics, ANDRÁS (*Szeged 18 X 1740; †ibid. 25 VII 1818), Hungarian novelist and playwright, professor of mathematics at Budapest. Dugonics wrote the first popular Hungarian novel, Etelka (2 vols, 1788). Like his contemporary, Gvadányi, he was strictly conservative and tried to preserve Hungarian traditions, particularly in his use of dialect forms.

Jolánka, Etelkának leánya (2 vols, 1803).—Magyar példabeszédek és jeles mondások (2 vols, 1820).
A. Prónai, D. A. életrajza (1903); D. Baróti, D. A. (1934). G.F.C.

Du Guillet, PERNETTE (*Lyons c. 1520; †ibid. 17 VII 1545), French poet. Married to a Du Guillet (1537 or 1538), she was the disciple and platonic mistress of Maurice Scève. With Louise Labé she completes the trio of Lyons poets who linked France with the poetry of the Italian Renaissance. Her verse, all contained in one posthumous volume (Rymes), owes much to Petrarchan and neo-platonic influences. Her early death may have been caused by plague.

Rymes de gentile et vertueuse dame, P. du G., Lyonnoise (1545, 1552), ed. J. Aynard as Poèmes et chansons (1924).
V. L. Saulnier, 'P. du G.', in Bibl. d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 4 (1944). G.B.

Duim, FREDERIK (*Amsterdam 1674), Dutch playwright and actor, writer of the epic poem, Jacob de aartsvader (1752); interesting as a presumptuous critic of Voltaire.

De vlugt van Huig de Groot (1742); De dry deelen van Huig de Groot (1742); Menalippe, de bevegter van zich zelve (1743, with imp. pref.).
C. v. Schoonneveldt, Over de navolging der klassiek-fransche tragedie in Ned. treurspelen der 18e eeuw (1906). J.W.W.

Duke, RICHARD (*1658?; †Witney 10 II 1710/1), English clergyman-poet, a friend of playwrights and actors, who wrote occasional verse and contributed to Dryden's translations of Juvenal and Plutarch, and to Ovid's Heroides (1683).

Collected Poems (ed. Johnson, xi; Anderson, vi; Chalmers, ix).
S. Johnson, The Lives of the Poets, II, ed. G. B. Hill (1905). B.L.J.

Dulk, ALBERT FRIEDRICH BENNO (*Königsberg 17 VI 1819; ∞26 X 1846 Johanna Dulk and 1857 in open bigamy Else Buszler; †Stuttgart 30 X 1884), German dramatist. Revolutionary thinker, romantic hermit, atheist and practising polygamist, he founded the first German congregation of free-thinkers and in his last years served a prison sentence for socialist convictions. His unsuccessful, but at times quite original dramas belong to the Young German movement. His Irrgang des Lebens Jesu (2 vols, 1884–85) inspired Gerhart Hauptmann's novel Der Narr in Christo.

Orla (1844); Lea (1848); Jesus der Christ (1865).—Sämtliche Dramen, ed. E. Ziel (3 vols, 1893–94).
E. Ziel, Literarische Reliefs, IV (1895); E. Rose, 'Das erste moderne Christusdrama der deutschen Literatur', in Jour. Eng. and Ger. Phil., XXIII (1924) and 'Der Briefwechsel zwischen A. D. und P. Heyse, 1866–82', in Ger. Rev., IV (1929). E.R.

Dullaart, JOAN (*Rotterdam c. 1629; †after 1681), Dutch playwright, wrote and translated historical plays. In the conflict between Nil Volentibus Arduum and the theatre board he was on the latter's side.

Karel Stuart of rampzalige majesteit (1652); Alexander de Medicis of 't bedrooge vertrouwen (1653); Jan van Leiden en Barent Knipperdolling (1653).
Wybrands, Het Amst. Tooneel van 1617–1772 (1873). A.M.B.W.

Dullaert, HEIMAN (*Rotterdam 6 II 1636; †ibid. 6 V 1684), Dutch poet and painter. Incapacitated by feeble health he turned to the arts—music, painting (talented pupil of Rembrandt) and poetry. Despite their serious contents his poems (published only after his death) have a light rhythm and show appreciation of the beauty of life. Long neglected, he was characterized as a poet of merit by Albert Verwey.

D. v. Hoogstraten, Werken van H. D. (1719; with biog.); A. Verwey, 'H. D.', in Stille toernooien (1901); J. Witte, H. D. (1926); H. A. J. Ruys, 'H. D.', in Oud-Holland, XXXI (1913); J. Greshof, Bloemlezing (1923).
A.M.B.W.

Dumas, ALEXANDRE DAVY DE LA PAILLETERIE, known as Dumas père (*Villers-Cotterets 24 VII 1802; ∞1840 Ida Ferrier; †Puys, nr Dieppe 5 XII 1870), French novelist and playwright. Dumas was the grandson of a creole and a negress, and a son of one of the generals of the Revolution, who died in 1806. He went to Paris in 1823 to seek his fortune and was at first employed by the duc d'Orléans. He later lived by his pen. His first success was won in the theatre (1829). He was for some time the lover of Marie Lebay, the mother of Alexandre Dumas fils. His existence was an extraordinary hotch-potch of work and dissipation. Politically he was an ardent republican and enthusiastically supported the revolution of 1848. After 1851 he went into voluntary exile, fought with Garibaldi in 1860 for the cause of Italian independence, lived at Naples for four years, returned to France and died, crippled by debts. Dumas' earliest writings were grandiloquent poems and mediocre theatrical farces. Then, with Hugo, he created the romantic drama (Henri III et sa cour, 1829). His best production in this field was Antony (1831), a melodramatic piece which has 'dated' badly, though not lacking in brio and sincerity. As a novelist, Dumas first sought his subjects in the police news. He soon specialized, however, in adventure tales and particularly in historical novels of the 'cloak and dagger' variety, which he issued in serial parts. Working with a team of collaborators (of whom Auguste Maquet was one) he produced 300 works of fiction. Though none of them are great art, their ingenuity, their vitality and the astonishing adventures of their generous and high-spirited heroes justify their immense and continuing success. Among numerous works of other kinds, Dumas has left a series of valuable and highly flavoured memoirs.

PLAYS: La Chasse et l'Amour (1825); Napoléon Bonaparte (1831); Richard Darlington (1832); La Tour de Nesles (1832); Térésa (1832); Angèle (1833); Catherine Howard (1834); Caligula (1837); Mlle de Belle-Isle (1839); La Reine Margot (1845); Monte-Cristo (1848); L'Orestie (1856); La Dame de Monsoreau (1860).—NOVELS: Madame et la Vendée (1832); Acté (1839); Les Crimes célèbres (15 vols, 1839 ff.); Les Trois Mousquetaires (1844; The Three Musketeers, tr. W. Robson, 1950) with sequels, Vingt-ans après (1845) and Vicomte de Bragelonne (1847); Le Comte de Monte-Cristo (18 vols, 1844–45); La Reine Margot (1845); Le Chevalier de Maison Rouge (1846); Les Mohicans de Paris (1854).—VARIOUS: Impressions de voyage (1833); Excursions sur les Bords du Rhin (1841–42); De Paris à Cadix (5 vols, 1846–48); Mes Mémoires (22 vols, 1852–54); Souvenirs . . . (1854–55; new ed. 1868).

H. Parigot, Le Théâtre de D. père (1899); H. Lecomte, A. D., sa vie intime, ses œuvres (1903); A.-P. Davidson, A. D. père, his life and works (1902); H. d'Alméras, A. D. et 'Les Trois Mousquetaires' (1929); F. W. Reed, Bibliography of A. D. (1933); M. Constantin-Weyer, L'Aventure vécue de D. père (1946); A. Craig Bell, A. D. (1950). M.G.; J.P.R.

Dumas, ALEXANDRE, fils (*Paris 27 VII 1824; †Marly-le-Roi 27 XI 1895), French novelist and dramatist, the illegitimate son of Alexandre Dumas père. He spent his early years in poverty with his mother. Recognized and educated by his father, he came to know intimately the demimonde he was to depict in some of his plays. The circumstances of his birth and upbringing account for his firm belief in the dramatist's duty as a moralist. His first—and now most famous—play, La Dame aux Camélias (1852), was a dramatization of his successful novel published in 1848. The long series of plays that followed established the pièce-à-thèse on the French stage. Dramatically effective even when overcharged with argument, they deal with such problems as marriage, adultery, illegitimacy, prostitution, female emancipation. Most of his later plays Dumas provided with well-written, forcefully argued prefaces. In his lifetime he outshone his father as an influential literary figure and was elected to the French Academy in 1875.

PLAYS: Diane de Lys (1853); Le Demimonde (1855); La Question d'argent (1857); Le Fils naturel (1858); Un Père prodigue (1859); L'Ami des Femmes (1864); Les Idées de Madame Aubray (1867); La Princesse Georges (1872); La Femme de Claude (1873); Monsieur Alphonse (1874); L'Étrangère (1876); Denise (1885); Francillon (1887).—Théâtre complet (10 vols, 1923).—NOVEL: L'Affaire Clémenceau (1866).

C. Noel, Les Idées sociales dans le Théâtre de D. fils (1912); H. S. Schwartz, D. fils, dramatist (1927); P. Lamy, Le Théâtre de D. fils (1928);

H. Lyonnet, La Dame aux Camélias, in Les Grands Événements littéraires (1930); F. A. Taylor, The Theatre of D. fils (1937). T.W.

Du Maurier, George Louis Palmella Busson (*Paris 6 III 1834; ∞1863 Emma Wightwick; †London 6 X 1896), English artist in black and white and novelist. He made graceful fastidious illustrations for Thackeray, other novels and Punch. Of his three novels, Trilby (1894), depicting bohemian life, was a sensational success.

Peter Ibbetson (1891); The Martian (1897).
D. P. Whiteley, G. du M. His Life and Work (1948); T. A. Armstrong, Reminiscences of G. du M. (1912); F. Moscheles, In Bohemia with G. du M. (1896); The Young G. du M. (letters, 1860–67), ed. D. du Maurier (1951). R.M.H.

Dunash ben Labrat, known as Adonim ha-Levi (*Baghdad c. 920; †Fez c. 980 ?), Hebrew poet and grammarian. He appears to have been the first Hebrew poet to employ the Arabic metre which was used by all poets of the Spanish 'Golden Age'. He wrote liturgical poems as well as odes addressed to patrons. He brought to the west the new science of Hebrew grammar (developed under Arab influence); he and his pupils engaged in a bitter literary quarrel with the school of Menahem ben Saruq.

Dunash ben Labrat: Shirim, ed. N. Allony (1947); Criticae Vocum Recensiones, ed. H. Filipowski (1855).
N. Allony, The Scansion of Medieval Hebrew Poetry (in Heb., 1951). C.R.

Dunbar, Paul Laurence (*Dayton, Ohio 27 VI 1872; ∞1898 Alice Ruth Moore; †ibid. 9 II 1906), American short-story writer, novelist, poet. He has been called the first American negro to feel the life of his people aesthetically and express it lyrically. His best poems are written in a racy Negro dialect.

Verse: Lyrics of Lowly Life (1896); Folks from Dixie (1898); Lyrics of Love and Laughter (1903); The Complete Poems of P. L. D. (1913).—Novels: The Uncalled (1898); The Love of Landry (1900); The Sport of the Gods (1902)—Stories: The Best Stories of P. L. D., ed. B. G. Brawley (1938).
B. G. Brawley, P. L. D.: Poet of His People (1936). H.L.C.

Dunbar, William (*c. 1460; †c. 1515), Scottish poet. Dunbar was possibly educated at St Andrews and may have been a Grey Friar. He appears to have served James IV not only as a court poet but as a diplomatic envoy; and he visited England and the continent. In 1500 he was granted an annuity of £10 by the king; this was increased by 1510 to £80. The most versatile and individual of the early Scots poets, Dunbar celebrated and satirized occasions and personalities at the Scottish court. He revitalizes and gives a humorous and original turn to allegory, vision, complaint and love débat—the conventional forms of later medieval verse. He ridicules the practices of amour courtois, burlesques the romance, irreverently turns the offices of the church to satiric account and gives freshness and strong personal colour to the verse epistle. His visions are not only of moral abstractions or the deadly sins, but of a flying friar and a tournament of soutars and tailors. The life, brilliance, merrymaking and lovemaking of James's court are portrayed with rollicking humour and verve; and he satirizes in a caustic rhetorical style the conglomeration of charlatans and buffoons about the king.

His versatility is apparent in verse forms as much as in themes. He ranges from the old alliterative line through octosyllabic couplets to a variety of stanza forms. His poetic diction is remarkably varied. He is richly Latinate in courtly allegory; direct and colloquial in satire and complaint; plainly dignified in the expression of melancholy and religious sentiment; and exuberant and fantastic in satire, in a Billingsgate of his own creation. His gravitas, strong humour, whimsicality, bold experimentalism and satiric force make him a fine poet in his own right; and he is the initiator of a long Scots poetic tradition.

The Poems of W. D., ed. D. Laing (2 vols, 1834); ed. John Small (3 vols, 1893); ed. J. Schipper (1894); ed. W. M. Mackenzie (with a good intro., 1932).
J. Schipper, D., sein Leben und seine Gedichte (1884); J. M. Ross, Early Scottish History and Literature (1884); Æ. J. G. Mackay, W. D. (1889); H. B. Baildon, The Rhymes of D. (1899); Cécile Steinberger, Étude sur D. (1908); R. A. Taylor, D., The Poet and his Period (1931); J. W. Baxter, W. D. (1952). On the Dunbar canon see W. Geddie, A Bibliography of Middle Scots Poets (1912). J.K.

Dunlap, William (*Perth Amboy, N.J. 19 II 1766; ∞1789 Elizabeth Woolsey; †New York 28 IX 1839), American playwright, painter, historian. First in America to write gothic drama, he showed versatility in adapting and producing plays. His History of the American Theatre (1833) is still valuable.

Plays: André (1798); The Italian Father (1810).—History: A History of the Rise and Progress of the Arts of Design in the United States (1834).

O. S. Coad, W. D.: A Study of His Life and Works and of His Place in Contemporary Culture (1917). H.L.C.

Duns Scotus, JOHANNES (*Maxton, Roxburgh c. 1265; †Cologne 8 XI 1308), Scottish philosopher and scientist, long revered as doctor subtilis. He joined the Franciscans at Dumfries c. 1280, studied and later taught at both Oxford and Paris, and died while teaching at Cologne. His principal works are two commentaries on the Sentences of Peter Lombard; and the brief disquisition De Primo Principio. He stressed above all the formal distinction between the structure of thought and the structure of fact, and the univocation of being; and asserted a certain primacy to the will over the intellect. The subtleties and refinements of Scotism were later attacked; and in the 16th century the name Duns or Dunce gained its present ignominious meaning.

Opera Omnia, ed. L. Wadding (12 vols, 1639; repr. L. Vivès, 26 vols, 1891–95; contains spurious writings and a corrupt text); C. Balić, Ratio criticae editionis operum omnium I. D. Scoti (2 vols, 1939–41; outlines the plans for a new ed., of which vols 1 and 2 appeared 1950).

C. R. S. Harris, D. S. (2 vols, 1927; a full-length study, unfortunately partly based on spurious works); E. Longpré, La Philosophie du B. D. S. (1924); A. G. Little, 'Chronological Notes on the Life of D. S.', in Eng. Hist. Rev., XLVII (1932); E. Bettoni, Vent'anni di Studi Scotisti, 1920–40 (1943); E. Gilson, Jean D. S. (1952). R.W.B.

Duonelaitis (also DONALITIUS), KRISTIJONAS (*Lasdinehlen, East Prussia 1 I 1714; ∞Anna Ohlefant; †Tolmingkehmen, East Prussia 18 II 1780), Lithuanian poet. He received a Protestant theological training in Königsberg and spent most of his life as vicar of the village church in Tolmingkehmen. Though he also wrote German verse and did Lithuanian translations of Aesop's fables, he is known exclusively by his descriptive poem in 569 hexameters, Metai ('The Seasons'), which recalls James Thomson's poem in title and theme and shows classical influence. Metai was written about 1794, but not published till 1818. It has been translated into several languages, including German.

L. J. Rhesa, Das Jahr in vier Gesängen (1818); Horn, Christian Donalitius (1893); V. Gaigalat, K. D., jo gyvastis ir darbai (1914); M. Biržiška, Duonelaičio gyvenimas ir raštai (1927). W.K.M.

Du Perrier (or DUPÉRIER), CHARLES (*Aix; †Paris 28 III 1692), French Latin poet. A member of the Paris Pléiade, with Ménage, Santeul, Commire, Rapin, Petit and La Rue, he excelled especially in Horatian lyrics. A bitter rival of Santeul, he won academy prizes for an eclogue and a poem on Louis XIV's exploits.

C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Causeries du Lundi, 12. P.T.

Du Perron, JACQUES DAVY (*Saint-Lô; †Paris 5 IX 1618), French prelate and poet. A pre-classic poet, he wrote French versions of the Psalms and other religious and 'official' verse. Often abstract and rhetorical, he announces Malherbe. He played a considerable political role at the French court, became a cardinal (1604) and archbishop of Sens (1606).

Œuvres (1622).—P. Feret, Le Cardinal du P. (1877); A. Cart, La Poésie française au 17e siècle (1939). G.B.

Dupin, AURORE: see SAND, GEORGE.

Duran, SIMEON BEN ẒEMAH, known as RASHBAẒ (*Mallorca 1361; †Algiers 1444), Spanish Hebrew religious writer, philosopher and poet. Rabbi in Algiers, his opinion on legal problems was widely sought; his 929 responsa (replies) are very thorough and an interesting source for social history. He was an enthusiastic Cabbalist, but against mystical interpretation of the Bible. He formulated the dogmas of Judaism. Forty-six liturgical poems by him are preserved.

RESPONSA: Tashbeẓ (Amsterdam, 1738).—PHILOSOPHY: Magen Avoth (4 parts, Livorno, 1763–85); Commentary on Job (Venice, 1589).—POETRY: Quntres Teḥinnoth u-Fizmonim, ed. I. Morali, in Ẓofnath Pa'aneaḥ (1897).

I. Epstein, The Responsa of S. b. Z. D. (1930); J. Guttmann, 'Die Stellung des S. b. Z. D. in der . . . jüdischen Religionsphilosophie', in Monatsschr. Ges. Wiss. Judentums, 52–53 (1908–09); J. Guttmann, Die Philosophie des Judentums (1933). C.R.

Duranty, LOUIS ÉMILE EDMOND (*Paris 3 VI 1833; †ibid. 10 IV 1880), French novelist. A disciple of Champfleury, Duranty defined realism as 'the exact, complete and sincere reproduction of the social milieu, the epoch in which one lives'. The best of his six novels published 1860–78 is Le Malheur d'Henriette Gérard (1860).

E. Bouvier, La Bataille réaliste (1913); R. Dumesnil, Le Réalisme (1936). T.W.

Durão, JOSÉ DE SANTA RITA (*Cata Preta 1718?, 1720?; †Lisbon 24 I 1784), Brazilian poet, member of the mineira group of poets, although educated in Portugal, where, as an Augustinian friar, he lived many years. He wrote an epic poem Caramuru (1781) on the discovery of Bahía and the adventures of Diogo Alvares among the Indians and the way in which his native wife conveyed to John III her sovereign rights over the land. The poem, the national epic, is vigorous but the sentiment conventional. E.Sa.

Duris (*Samos; fl. late 4th–early 3rd century B.C.), Greek historian, pupil of Theophrastus at Athens, tyrant of Samos after 301; author of a history (Hellenica or Macedonica) recounting events from 370 to c. 280 B.C., as well as of works on literary and art history. A dramatic but unreliable narrator, he was much drawn upon by historians of the period of the Diadochi.

F. Jacoby, Fragmente der griech. Historiker, 2 (1926).
G. Mehnert, De Duride Samio (1921). R.B.

Du Ryer, PIERRE (*Paris c. 1600; †ibid. 6 XI 1658), French dramatist and translator. Most of his 16 plays were tragicomedies, a mixed genre popular in the French theatre before the establishment of the unities and the triumph of pure tragedy. His biblical tragedies, Saül (1640) and Esther (1642), are also notable for their period, as is his pastoral comedy, Les Vendanges de Suresnes (1633). A fashionable though inaccurate translator, his Herodotus (1645) popularized that author as an important source of the contemporary drama and the novel, as Mlle de Scudéry's Grand Cyrus (1649).

Arétaphile (c. 1628); Argenis et Polyarque (c. 1629); Alcionée (1636), crit. ed. H. C. Lancaster (1930); Lucrèce (1636); Saül, crit. ed. H. C. Lancaster (1931); Thémistocle (1646); Nitocris (1648); Dynamis (1649); Anexandre (1653).
H. C. Lancaster, P. Du R. dramatist (Washington, 1912). G.B.

Dutt, AKSAY-KUMĀR (*1820; †1886), one of the founders of the religious movement called the Brāhma Samāj and contributor to the Tattvabodhinī Patrikā, a prominent Bengali journal. He was one of the creators of modern Bengali prose.
H.G.R.

Dutt, MICHAEL MADHUSŪDANA (*1824; †1873), was the pioneer of the new Bengali poetry and drama which found its fulfilment in Rabindranath Tagore. He wrote three Bengali poems, Tillotama, Maghnadvadh and Viranganā, on themes drawn from the Indian epics, in Miltonic blank verse, and also sonnets and plays.

J. C. Ghosh, Bengali Literature (1948).
H.G.R.

Dutt, ROMESH CHANDRA (*Calcutta 13 VIII 1848; †Baroda 30 XI 1909), author of a History of Civilization in Ancient India (2 vols, 1893), a History of Bengali Literature (1877; rev. 1895) and many verse translations from Sanskrit poetry, including The Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata (1910). H.G.R.

Dutt, TORU (*1856; †1877), Bengali poet, who wrote A Sheaf Gleaned in French Fields, Ancient Ballads and Legends of Hindustan and some exquisite lyrics admired by Sir Edmund Gosse. 'In her all too brief life she mastered Sanskrit and wrote in French and English with a grace, a facility and an individual distinction which have given her rank among the authentic voices of western literature.' (H. A. L. Fisher). Her elder sister Aru (†1874) was also a lyric writer of some merit.

M. Macnicol, Poems by Indian Women (1923).
H.G.R.

Du Vair, GUILLAUME (*Paris 7 III 1556; †Tonneins, Lot-et-Garonne 1621), French philosophical writer. A brilliant orator, he exercised political influence, was made governor of Provence, then bishop of Lisieux. A humanist, he aimed at reconciling Catholic doctrine with the morality of the Stoic philosophers. His writings were an important source, couched in fine prose, for the Stoics of the 17th century.

Œuvres politiques, morales et meslées (1606–41); De l'éloquence française, ed. R. Radouant (1908); De la constance, ed. J. Flach and F. Funck-Brentano (1925); De la sainte philosophie and De la philosophie morale des Stoïques, ed. G. Michaut (1946).
R. Radouant, G. du V., l'homme et l'orateur (1908); L. Zanta, La Renaissance du stoïcisme au 17e siècle (1914). G.B.

Duym, JONKHEER JACOB (*Louvain 1547; †Mutsebrouck ? before 1624), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition (motto: 'Reden verwint'). Member of the town council of Louvain, captain in the army of the Prince of Orange, from 1586 at Leiden (in 1591 emperor of the local Chamber 'D'oraigne-lelie'), from 1612 at Mutsebrouck, Brabant. He wrote several historical works and a number of plays (collected in a Spiegelboeck and a Ghedenckboeck), which are of importance for the transition from medieval to modern times.

K. Poll, Over de tooneelspelen van . . . J. D. (1898); E. v. Even, 'De krijgsman en dichter J. D.', in Versl. Med. Vlaamse Ac. (1901); J. Prinsen, in Nieuw Ned. Biogr. Wdb., I (1947). J.J.M.

Duyse, PRUDENS VAN (*Dendermonde 17 IX 1804; †Ghent 13 XI 1859), the most versatile and important Flemish poet of the romantic generation. All genres and forms are represented in his enormous output. A 'rederijker' in his literary development and extraordinary talent for improvisation, he was at the same time a genuine romanticist, who, however, for national and religious reasons, avoided the consistent individualism of romanticism and expressed his easily roused emotions in intimate lyrics.

VERSE: Vaderlandsche Poëzij (3 vols, 1840); Natalia (1842); Het Klaverblad (1848); Jacob van Artevelde (1859); Nazomer (1859); Nagelaten gedichten (10 vols, 1882–85).—ESSAYS: Verhandeling over den Nederlandschen versbouw (1854); De rederijkkamers in Nederland (1900). —Anthologies by F. van Duyse (1889), V. de Meyere (2 vols, 1907) and P. Sterkens-Cieters (1942).

J. Micheels, P. v. D. (1893); P. Sterkens-Cieters, P. v. D. (1929). R.F.L.

Dwight, TIMOTHY (*Northampton, Mass. 14 V 1752; ∞1777 Mary Woolsey; †New Haven, Conn. 11 I 1817), American educator and theologian. One of Yale's great presidents, he wrote uninspired poetry, preached persuasive sermons on his Calvinist doctrines.

The Triumph of Infidelity: A Poem (1788); Theology Explained and Defended (1818–19); Travels in New-England and New-York (1821–22).

C. E. Cunningham, D., a Biography (1942). H.L.C.

Dyce, ALEXANDER (*Edinburgh 30 VI 1798; †London 15 V 1869), Scottish man of letters. Educated at the High School, Edinburgh, and Oxford; took holy orders; and in 1825 set up in London as a scholar. He edited many Elizabethan poet-dramatists and played a leading part in founding the Percy Society and the Shakespeare Society (1840); for the latter he published for the first time the play of Sir Thomas More (1844). He also published Recollections of the Table Talk of Samuel Rogers (1856). See the biographical sketch by J. Forster in the Catalogue (1875) of the South Kensington Museum, to which Dyce bequeathed his library. J.K.

Dyer, SIR EDWARD (*Sharpham Park, Somerset 1545; †London V 1607), English courtier of queen Elizabeth, lyric poet and musician. A friend of Hatton and Sidney, Dyer engaged in diplomacy in Paris (1576) and the Netherlands (1584–85). His conduct, even on the death of Essex, was such that no reproach is recorded against him. B.L.J.

The Writings in Verse and Prose, ed. A. B. Grosart (1872); R. M. Sargent, At the Court of Queen Elizabeth: the life and lyrics of Sir E. D. (1935). J.R.B.

Dyer, JOHN (∼Llanfynydd 13 VIII 1699; ∞Miss Ensor; †1758), English poet. After a period as a solicitor's clerk and as an itinerant painter he became vicar of Calthorp, Leics., in 1741. He afterwards held several Lincolnshire livings; 1752, LL.B., Cambridge, by royal mandate. Best remembered for his poem, 'Grongar Hill', which first appeared in A New Miscellany (1726); then, in Miscellaneous Poems and Translations (ed. Savage, 1726); and in its final version in Miscellaneous Poems (ed. Lewis, 1726). Dyer's verse has freshness and some charm.

The Ruins of Rome, a poem (1740); The Fleece, a Poem, in four books (1757); Poems, viz. Grongar Hill, The Ruins of Rome, The Fleece . . . (1761); Poetical Works . . . (carefully corrected) (1765); Poems . . . (1770); The Poetical Works of Mark Akenside and J. D., ed. R. A. Wilmott (1855); The Poems of J. D., ed. E. Thomas (1903).

S. Johnson, Lives of the Poets, III, ed. G. Birkbeck Hill (1905); G. Greever, 'The Two Versions of Grongar Hill', in Jour. Eng. and Ger. Philol., XVI (1917); H. S. Hughes, 'J. D. and the Countess of Hertford', in Mod. Philol., XXVII (1930). C.P.

Dygasiński, TOMASZ ADOLF, pseud. Dygas (*Niegosławice 7 III 1839; †Grodzisk 3 VI 1902), Polish author. A democrat and pessimist, he realistically described Polish life and portrayed animals with the same understanding as Kipling.

NOVELS: Pan Jędrzej Piszczalski (2 vols, 1890); As (1896); Zając (1900); Gody życia (1902; Le banquet de la vie, tr. M. Baron-Guihomard and J. A. Teslar, 1937).—SHORT STORIES: Z siół, pól i lasów (2 vols, 1887); Beldonek (1883); Na pańskim dworze (1887; Auf dem Edelhofe, tr. Dr Ruhe and A. Grabowski, 1885).—Pisma (1948 ff.).

Z. Wasilewski, 'A. D.', in Współcześni (1923); Z. Szweykowski, Dramat. D. (1938); J. Topass, 'A. D.', in Visages d'écrivains . . . (1930); W. Borowy, 'O "Godach życia" D-o', in Twórczość, XI (1946). S.S.

Eadmer (†c. 1124), biographer of St Anselm, was the precentor of Christ Church, Canterbury. In 1120 he was elected bishop of St Andrews but never took office. He wrote a history of his own times, the lives of SS. Bregwin, Dunstan, Oswald and Wilfrid, and a treatise on the Immaculate Conception.

Opera Historica, ed. M. Rule (1884).

A. Wilmart, 'Edmeri Nova Opuscula De Sanctorum Veneratione et Observatione', in Rev. des Sciences Religieuses, 15 (1935). R.R.R.

Earle, John, bishop of Worcester and Salisbury (*York 1601 ?; †Oxford 17 XI 1665), English clergyman, poet and Character writer. A friend of Falkland and tutor to Prince Charles, Earle became dean of Westminster (1660) after 16 years in exile. Valued as a good man, his qualities appear in the wit and creative insight of his Characters.

Micro-Cosmographie (1628, etc.); ed. E. Arber (1868); ed. H. Osborne (1933).

G. Murphy, Bibliography of English Character-Books 1608–1700 (1925). B.L.J.

Eberhard von Cersne (fl. c. 1400), German allegorist. Canon of Minden; author (apart from some lyrics) of Der Minne Regel (1404), a free adaptation, within an allegorical and narrative framework, of the Tractatus Amoris of Andreas Capellanus.

Der Minne Regel von E. C. (lyrics in appendix), ed. Fr. X. Wöber (1861). F.P.P.

Eberhard von Gandersheim (fl. early 13th century), Low German poet. As deacon and notary of Gandersheim he wrote a rhymed chronicle of the abbey, the first poem in Middle Low German (completed c. 1216). Expressly aimed at laymen, it shows the influence of popular tradition, in its prosodic technique also.

Ed. L. Weiland, Mon. Germ. Hist., Dt. Chron., II (1877); L. Wolff (1927).

T. Dahlberg, Niederdt. Jahrb., 63/64 (1938). G.C.

Eberlin von Güntzburg, Johann (*Günzburg c. 1465; †Wertheim after 1530), German satirist. A Franciscan monk, he became an ardent follower of Luther. His Die 15 Bundesgenossen, though dedicated to Charles V, is a trenchant satire on the Roman church; it made a great impression and was bitterly attacked by Murner. A brilliant preacher, Eberlin wrote many religious tracts, often extremely violent.

Ed. L. Enders (3 vols, 1896–1902); selections ed. A. E. Berger (Deutsch. Lit., Reihe Ref., 2, 1931); Letters, ed. O. Langguth, Arch. f. Reformationsgesch., 31, 33.

H. Werner, J. E. v. G. (1889); J. H. Schmidt, Die 15 Bundesgenossen des J. E. v. G. (Diss. Leipzig, 1900); H. Ahrens, Die religiösen, nationalen u. sozialen Gedanken Eberlins (Diss. Hamburg, 1939). D.G.D.

Ebers, Georg (*Berlin 1 III 1837; †Tutzing 7 VIII 1898), German Egyptologist and novelist, whose discovery of the Ebers papyrus (1873) transformed the study of Egyptology. Retiring early through ill health he poured his learning into cultural best-sellers of international repute in their day, conventional romances whose chief virtue lay in their highly wrought archaeological settings.

Eine ägyptische Königstochter (1864); Homo sum (1878); Die Schwestern (1880); Kleopatra (1890).—Gesammelte Werke (32 vols, 1893–97); Historical Romances of G. E., tr. D. Appleton (1915).

Otto Kraus, Der Professorenroman (1884); R. Gosche, G. E., der Forscher und Dichter (1887). H.A.P.

Ebert, Johann Arnold (*Hamburg 8 II 1723; †Brunswick 19 III 1795), German translator. A master at the Carolinum school, Brunswick, Ebert was a friend of Klopstock, who dedicated an ode to him, and of Lessing and Eschenburg. A good translator, he published the German version of Young's Night Thoughts (1751).

Translations: Episteln und Vermischte Gedichte (2 vols, 1789).—Glover's Leonidas (1749); Übersetzungen einiger poetischen und prosaischen Arbeiten der besten englischen Schriftsteller (2 vols, 1754–56).

W. Creizenach, in Allgem. dtsche Biogr., vol. 5 (1877). H.B.G.

Eble II de Ventadorn (c. 1100–40), Provençal troubadour. Contemporary sources present this noble of Limousin as a lavishly generous protector of the poets. None of his own poetry has been preserved. According to Marcabru—and Bernart de Ventadorn whose songs were addressed to Eble's wife and who was his pupil—Eble was the leader of the new school of courtly love founded by Guilhem of Aquitaine. R.R.B.

Eble, Gui, Peire and Elias d'Ussel (fl. c. 1190–1240), Provençal troubadours of the family of the lords of Ussel; the first three were brothers, Elias their cousin. All wrote tensons and partimens, which are typical examples of Provençal occasional verse. We possess cansos and pastorelas written by Gui.

H. Carstens, Die Tenzonen aus dem Kreise der Trobadors G., E., E. und P. d'U. (1914); J. Audiau, Les poésies des quatre troubadours d'Ussel (1922). R.R.B.

Ebner, MARGARETHE (*Donauwörth 1291; †Medingen 1351), German mystic. One of a number of nuns who wrote ecstatically of their religious experiences (Offenbarungen, 1344 ff.). Her correspondence with the lay-preacher Heinrich von Nördlingen and others is the oldest preserved in the German language.

Ph. Strauch, M. E. u. Heinr. v. N. (1882); W. Oehl, Dt. Mystikerbriefe (1931); modernized, H. Wilms (1928). F.P.P.

Eça de Queirós: see QUEIRÓS, JOSÉ MARIA DE EÇA DE.

Echeverría, ESTEBAN (*Buenos Aires 2 IX 1805; †Montevideo 19 I 1851), Argentinian poet. On his return from Paris (1826–30) he introduced the romantic movement to his native country. He believed it necessary to achieve cultural as well as political independence from Spain, and was one of the earliest to substitute French cultural leadership for that of Madrid. His early work was greatly influenced by Byron and, to a slight extent, by German romantic poetry, known in translation. La cautiva ('The Captive Maid') sets a conventional love fable in the local setting of the desert. It is not great poetry, but achieved fame in Spain as well as at home. Echeverría was a firm opponent of Rosas and formed a political society for which he wrote the prose essay El dogma socialista.

Elvira o la novia del Plata (1832); Los consuelos (1834); Rimas (1837, including La Cautiva, frequently pub. since alone and tr. into Ger.); Cantos a Mayo (1844); La Guitarra (1849); Obras completas (5 vols, 1870). E.Sa.

Eckermann, JOHANN PETER (*Winsen 21 IX 1792; ∞9 XI 1831 Johanna Bertram (†30 IV 1834); †Weimar 3 XII 1854), German writer. Grew up in poverty and, attracting Goethe's attention with his second book, became his unpaid assistant, living thereafter in the shadow of the great man and of the complete edition of his works. His selfless absorption bore fruit in his Gespräche, composed from notes taken with Goethe's permission from 1824 onwards—a noble portrait, which for truth to the spirit of its subject ranks with Boswell's Johnson.

Gedichte (1821); Beiträge zur Poesie mit besonderer Hinweisung auf Goethe (1824); Gespräche mit Goethe in den letzten Jahren seines Lebens (1836; Conversations with Eckermann, tr. J. Goebel, 1925); Gedichte (1838).

J. Petersen, Die Entstehung der Eckermannschen Gespräche und ihre Glaubwürdigkeit (1924); H. H. Houben, J. P. E., sein Leben für G. (1925); E. Beutler, Essays um Goethe, II (1947). H.A.P.

Eckhart, 'MEISTER' (*Hochheim, nr Gotha c. 1260; †1327), German theologian, the greatest of the medieval mystics. Studied in Strasbourg and Paris (Magister 1302); head of the Dominican province Saxonia 1303–11; condemned a heretic in 1326. He was, when his theology had passed through the more 'poetical' works of Suso and the sermons of Tauler, the most important figure in German religious life before Luther. In popular devotional literature Eckhart appears as a semi-legendary 'learned Doctor of Paris' who admits himself ignorant beside the unschooled but pious soul he has catechized (docta ignorantia).

The problem of E.-scholarship is the canon of his works: see J. M. Clark, The Great German Mystics (1949) p. 7 ff. and p. 34 on the state of two projected editions, the more scholarly of which was sabotaged by the Nazis. C. de B. Evans, Meister Eckhart (tr. 1924) is based on F. Pfeiffer's Deutsche Mystiker (4th ed. 1924) and should be used with equal caution. F.P.P.

Eddius (fl. 711–31), surnamed Stephanus, came to Northumbria with Bishop Wilfrid in 669 to introduce the Roman method of chanting. After Wilfrid's condemnation in 702, Eddius accompanied him to Rome and was present at his death at Ripon in 709.

The Life of Bishop Wilfrid, ed. B. Colgrave (1927); B. W. Wells, 'Eddi's Life of Wilfrid', Eng. Hist. Rev., VI (1891). R.R.R.

Edelstadt, DAVID (*Kaluga, Russia 9 V 1866; †Colorado, USA 17 X 1892), one of the earliest Yiddish socialist-revolutionary poets. He started writing in Russian; at nine wrote poetry and at twelve was first published. He left 1882 for USA and was later active in the anarchist movement in New York, editing several publications and periodicals.

Collection of his poetry and political writings pub. Arbeter-Frajnd (London, 1910). J.S.

Edgeworth, MARIA (*Bourton Abbots, Oxon. 1 I 1767; †Edgeworthstown, Co. Longford 22 V 1849), novelist; daughter of Richard Lovell Edgeworth, Irish landlord and M.P. She began her literary career by writing stories for her father's large family by four wives. Her novels are didactic and stilted but contain much accurate recording of contemporary life.

A pioneer of the Irish regional novel, she influenced Scott and Turgenev.

Castle Rackrent (1800); Belinda (1801); Tales from Fashionable Life (1809–12); Ormond (1817).
Helen Zimmern, M. E. (1883). R.McH.

Edgren, A. C.: see LEFFLER.

Edward, 2nd DUKE OF YORK (*Norwich ? c. 1373; ∞Philippa, daughter of Lord Mohun of Dunster; †Agincourt 1415), translated into English, under the title The Master of Game, Gaston de Foix's famous hunting manual, Livre de la Chasse.

Ed. W. A. and F. Baillie-Grohman (1909). R.W.B.

Edwards, CHARLES (*Llansilin, Denbighshire 1628; ∞ c. 1650; †after 1 VII 1691), Welsh prose writer. A scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, he devoted himself to preaching, studying and writing and the editing of Welsh religious books. From 1666, when he separated from his wife, he spent much of his time in Oxford and in London. The argument of his chief work, 'the history of the Christian faith and its virtue', is developed with precision and assurance; the work abounds in images which not only lighten the style but enlarge and enrich the meaning.

Y Ffydd Ddi-ffuant (1667; rev. and enlarged ed. 1671; again rev. and enlarged, 1677; ed. G. J. Williams, 1936); Fatherly Instructions ... (tr. from the Christian Fathers) with an appendix . . . Gildas Minimus (1686); An Afflicted Man's Testimony (1691).
S. Lewis, Ysgrifau Dydd Mercher (1945), 'Arddull C. E.', in Efrydiau Catholig, 4 (1949). B.Re.

Edwards, JONATHAN (*East Windsor, Conn. 5 X 1703; ∞1727 Sarah Pierpont; †Princeton 22 III 1758), American clergyman and mystic. A precocious youth, he attended Yale, then studied theology. He is remembered as a hell-fire Calvinist preacher. But more important were his metaphysical dissertations on the problem of evil, the freedom of the will and the roots of religious experience. Shortly before his death, he became president of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton).

A Treatise Concerning Religious Affections (1746); A Careful and Strict Enquiry . . . of That Freedom of Will . . . (1754); The Great Christian Doctrine of Original Sin Defended (1758).—S. E. Dwight, The Works of President E.: With a Memoir of His Life (10 vols, 1829–30).
O. E. Winslow, E.: A Biography (1940); A. C. McGiffert, E. (1932). H.L.C.

Edwards, RICHARD (*1523 ?; †X 1566), English poet and dramatist. As Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, Edwards was responsible for presenting plays at court; his only surviving play is the tragicomedy Damon and Pythias (1571). He also wrote verse and compiled an anthology of early 16th-century poetry, The Paradys of Daynty Devyses (1576).

L. Bradner, Life and Poems of R. E. (1927). J.B.B.

Edwards, THOMAS, better known as TWM O'R NANT (*Penparchell Isaf, Denbighshire I 1738/9; ∞1763 Elizabeth Hughes; †Denbigh 3 IV 1810), Welsh poet, author of 'interludes' (a traditional type of popular drama in which a serious theme was interspersed with a stereotype farce), and small-holder, haulier, mason, stone-cutter, toll-keeper, innkeeper and actor. His occasional verse is in the old bardic metres and in song metres.

Y Farddoneg Fabilonaidd; Cyfoeth a Thylodi; Tri Chydymaith Dyn (1769); Pedair Colofn Gwladwriaeth (1786); Pleser a Gofid (1787); Tri Chryfion Byd; Gardd o Gerddi (1790); Cybydd-dod ac Oferedd (1870); Gwaith Twm o'r Nant, ed. I. Foulkes (1889); Hunangofiant a Llythyrau Twm o'r Nant, ed. G. M. Ashton (1948); 'Interliwd ynghylch Cain ac Abel', ed. G. M. Ashton, in Bull. Board Celtic Studies, XIII (1949).
O. Williams, Bibliography of Denbighshire, 3 (1937); D. D. Williams, Twm o'r Nant (1911); A. Watkin Jones, 'The Interludes of Wales . . .', in Bull. Board Celtic Studies, IV (1928); G. G. Evans, 'Yr Anterliwt Gymraeg', in Llên Cymru, I (1950). B.Re.

Effen, JUSTUS VAN (*Utrecht 21 II 1684; ∞1732 Elisabeth S. Andriessen; †'s-Hertogenbosch 18 IX 1735), Dutch prose writer; for a long time private tutor, 1715 and 1727 ambassadorial secretary in Britain, from 1732 clerk at the government store houses. He wrote his first essays in French but those comprising his chief work are written in a lively, natural Dutch.

Le Spectateur français (1725); De Hollandsche Spectator (12 vols, 1731–35).
W. Zuydam, J. v. E. (1922); J. E. Brown, 'Goldsmith's indebtedness to Voltaire and J. v. E.', in Mod. Philol. (1926); W. J. B. Pienaar, English influences in Dutch literature and J. v. E. as intermediary (1929); E. J. van Dam Gras, 'J. v. E.', in Bundel de Vooys (1940). J.W.W.

Efrati, JOSSEF (*Troplowitz 1770; †Ratibor 1804), Hebrew dramatist. His drama, Meluchat Shaul, describes the struggle in Saul's heart during the last years of his reign. Y.H.

Eftimiy, Patriarch: see Tarnovsky, Eftimiy.

Egan, Pierce, the Elder (*London? 1772; †ibid. 3 III 1849), English sporting journalist and historian of the ring, popular for spirited reports of races and fights: the Cruikshanks illustrated his Pleasures of London.

Boxiana: or Sketches of Modern Pugilism (1818–24); Life in London or the Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn Esq. and . . . in their . . . Sprees through the Metropolis (1821); Pierce Egan's Book of Sports and Mirror of Life (1832).
J. C. Hotton, Preface to Life in London (1870); W. M. Thackeray, Roundabout Papers. R.M.H.

Egen von Bamberg (fl. 1320–40), German poet (probably of Bamberg) known by some 350 lines of verse (Klage der Minne, das Herz) and a reputation for mastery in the art of 'geblümte Rede' (wilfully obscure diction laden with extravagant metaphors and similes).

O. Mordhorst, E. v. B. und die 'geblümte Rede' (1911). F.P.P.

Eggers Brothers, Friedrich (*Rostock 27 XI 1819; †Berlin 11 VIII 1872) and Karl (*Rostock 7 VII 1826; †Warnemünde 18 VII 1900), Low German poets. Friedrich, art-historian at Berlin University, wrote Gedichte (1873) and, together with Karl, a lawyer in Rostock, a volume of lyrics and ballads, Tremsen ('Corn-flowers', 1875).

E. Strenge, in Mitt. Quickborn, XIII (1919). G.C.

Eggleston, Edward (*Vevay, Ind. 10 XII 1837; ∞1858 Lizzie Snider, ∞1891 Frances Goode; †New York 2 IX 1902), American novelist and historian. He wrote novels of Indian life and of the primitive settlements in the middle border states.

The Hoosier School-Master (1871); The Circuit Rider (1874); Roxy (1878); The Hoosier School-Boy (1883); A History of the United States and Its People (1888).
W. P. Randel, E. E.: Author of 'The Hoosier School-Master' (1946). H.L.C.

Ehrensvärd, Carl August, Count (*Stockholm 5 V 1745; †Örebro 21 V 1800), Swedish soldier, artist and philosopher. He was an advocate of neo-classicism, which he probably first encountered in France; and later, more forcibly, in Italy. The new doctrine was propagated—not without discrimination—in Resa till Italien 1780, 1781, 1782 (1786) and in his best-known work De fria konsters filosofi (1786). His philosophic criteria at first reflect the materialism of Montesquieu and Locke, afterwards veering to Leibniz's more dynamic view. Ehrensvärd's concise, somewhat unsystematic style is often obscure, but is lightened by frequent aphorisms on Swedish and Italian temperament and milieu.

Samlade Skrifter, ed. C. Eichorn (1866), G. Bergh (2 vols, 1922–25).
K. Warburg, C. A. E. (1893). C.H.K.

Eichendorff, Joseph Freiherr von (*Schloss Lubowitz, Silesia 10 III 1788; ∞1814 Luise v. Larisch; †Neisse 26 XI 1857), German poet. Educated by tutors on his father's estate till 1801 when he and his brother Wilhelm were sent first to Breslau, then Halle. In Heidelberg (1807) he was influenced by the romantics, particularly Görres and Loeben, and in Vienna (1810) made contact with Friedrich and Dorothea Schlegel. He entered the Prussian civil service in 1816 and resigned in 1844 from the administration of Roman Catholic affairs in the Kultusministerium. Eichendorff's lyrics, though narrow in range, show a balance and perfect relation between form and matter rarely found except in Goethe; they were the expression of a serene inner life securely founded in faith, combined with delight in the outer world—as is the light-hearted spontaneity of his Novelle Aus dem Leben eines Taugenichts. These are his enduring works, but he wrote much besides, with varying success: satires, tragedies, narrative poems, translations from Spanish, and, in his later years, histories of literature.

Poems: Gedichte (1837); Julian (1853); Robert und Guiscard (1855); Lucius (1857).—Novellen: Ahnung und Gegenwart (1815); Aus dem Leben eines Taugenichts (1826; The Happy-go-lucky, tr. Mrs. A. L. Wister, 1889); Das Marmorbild (1826; The Marble Statue, tr. F. E. Pierce, 1927); Das Schloss Durande (1837); Die Glücksritter (1841); Krieg den Philistern (1824); Maierbeths Glück und Ende (1827).—Plays: Ezelin von Romano (1828); Der Letzte Held von Marienburg (1830); Die Freier (1833).—Miscellaneous: Über Pressfreiheit (1832); Über die ethische und religiöse Bedeutung der neueren romantischen Poesie in Deutschland (1847); Geschichte der poetischen Literatur Deutschlands (1857).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. W. Kosch (12 vols, 1908 ff.).
H. v. Eichendorff, J. v. E., sein Leben und seine Schriften (1864; ed. K. v. Eichendorff and W. Kosch, 1923); H. Brandenburg, J. v. E. (1922); Eichendorff-Kalender, ed. W. Kosch (19 vols, 1910–29); Aurora (12 vols, 1929–43). H.A.P.

Eike von Repgowe (*Reppichau, Anhalt, fl. c. 1180–1235), author of the Sachsenspiegel, a comprehensive account of German customary law, widely used in N. Germany and imitated elsewhere; probably also the compiler (from various sources) of the Sächsische Weltchronik.

Sachsenspiegel, ed. K. A. Eckhardt (1933); modernized, H. C. Hirsch (1936–39); Weltchronik, in Mon. germ. hist., Dt. Chron., II (1877).

K. A. Eckhardt, Die Entstehungszeit des Sachsenspiegels und der Sächsischen Weltchronik (1931). F.P.P.

Eilhart von Oberg (*nr Brunswick; fl. c. 1170 or 1180), author of the first German Tristan epic. Whether he wrote before or after Heinrich von Veldeke is uncertain. Of his Tristrant only about 1,000 lines are preserved, but the work of elaborators, a Czech redaction and the prose novel (printed in 1484) show that his source was the (lost) O.Fr. estoire, which he translated conservatively, having little understanding of amour courtois (see GOTTFRIED v. STRASSBURG).

K. Wagner, E. v. O. (1924); F. Lichtenstein, E. v. O. (1877; the fragments and the elaborated texts; still indispensable); F. Pfaff, Tr. u. Is. Prosaroman des 15. Jh. (1881).

H. Küpper, Bibliographie zur Tristan-Sage (1939); G. Schöpperle, Tr. and Is. (2 vols, 1913); F. Ranke, Tr. u. Is. (1925). F.P.P.

Einhard (c. 770–840), biographer of Charlemagne. Of noble parentage (Main valley) he studied at Fulda (c. 788–91) and under the name Bezaleel (Exod. 31, 2 seq.) was in charge of building projects at the court of Charlemagne. He served successfully with Louis the Pious. Retiring to his estate Seligenstadt (Odenwald), he there composed (inter alia) the Vita Caroli Magni (c. 820), in conscious emulation of Suetonius—one of the main works of the 'Carolingian revival'.

Ed. O. Holder-Egger (1927); tr. A. J. Grant, Early Lives of Ch. (1905).

A. J. Grant, Eginhart, etc. (1922); H. Pyritz, 'Das Karlsbild E.s', in Dt. Vierteljhrsschr. XV (1838); G. Baesecke, 'Karlische Ren.', ibid. XXIII (1949). F.P.P.

Eiximeniç, FRANCESC (c.* 1340; †1409?), Catalan theologian and writer. Studied at the university of Lleida (Lerida) and then at Cologne, Paris, Oxford and Toulouse. He was at the papal court and was on friendly terms with the contemporary Catalan kings. As a Franciscan friar he resided for 25 years in Valencia, until appointed bishop of Elna in Roussillon (1408). He was a prolific writer, second only to Ramón Lull. His greatest work is El Crestià (1381–86), an encyclopaedia of all the aspects of man as a Christian. Only four of the projected 13 books are extant—the first (origins of Christianity), the second and third (morals) and the twelfth, a political treatise on the government of a republic. The Libre de les Dones is a study of the condition of women from girlhood to married and religious life. Other books on theology and mysticism are Vida de Jesuchrist, Libre dels Angels, Pastorale and Scala Dei. His prose is clear, direct, studded with anecdotes, and invaluable as a reflection of contemporary life, public and private, and political thought and practice. J.M.B.i R.

Ejima KISEKI, pseud. of EJIMA SHIGETOMO, also known as Ejima Ichirōemon (*Kyoto 1667; †ibid. 1736), Japanese novelist. The son of a Kyoto grocer, he wasted his inheritance by luxurious living and took up writing for a living. In 1699 he became an associate of Andō Jishō in writing popular novels for a publishing-house which Jishō owned and the two gained rapid success and produced a steady succession of books to satisfy public demand. In 1712 Kiseki quarrelled with Jishō and published his books in a rival publishing-house of his own, but joined him again in 1719 and continued to work in co-operation with him until his death. A large number of their writings were published in their joint names, but it is certain that Kiseki wrote most of these. The novels which he wrote were in the same tradition as those of Ibara Saikaku, dealing with the life of the demi-monde, with graphic and humorous accounts of the courtesans and their amorous adventures.

Seken musume katagi (1716); Kokusenya Minchō Taiheiki (1717).

H. S. Hibbet, 'E. K. and his Katagi-mono', in Harvard Jour. As. Stud., 14 (1951). E.B.C.

Ekiken: see KAIBARA EKIKEN.

Ekkehart I (*900/10; †973), monk and finally dean of the Alemannic monastery of St Gall. Critics are uncertain of the extent to which his Waltharius manu fortis (a work of his youth known to have been conceived as an essay in the Virgilian epic style) preserved a genuine Germanic 'Heldensage' (of Walther and Hildegunde, cf. the Anglo-Saxon Waldere). Such doubts do not make it less readable. This Ekkehart and Ekkehart the Courtier (†900) are rolled into one in Scheffel's novel (1855).

Ed.: K. Strecker (2nd ed. 1924) and H. Althof (text 1899, commentary 1908). Ger. tr. Althof (1925) and P. v. Winterfeld, Dt. Dichter des lat. MA. (1922).

F. J. E. Raby, Secular Lat. Poetry, I, 262 seq.; (1934); J. M. Clark, The Abbey of St Gall (1926); K. Stackmann, 'Forschungsbericht', in Euphorion, XLV (1950); O. Schumann, in Anz. f. dt. Alt., 65 (1951). F.P.P.

Ekkehart IV (*c. 980; †c. 1060), dean of St Gall. He was the author of a Liber Benedictionum, religious verses for school use, but, above all, of the Casus Sancti Galli, a lively, if not always reliable, account of the history of the abbey

J. Egli, Der liber benedictionum Ekkeharts IV (1909); Casus S. Galli, ed. G. Meyer v. Knonau (1877). F.J.E.R.

Ekken: see KAIBARA EKIKEN.

Eknāth (†A.D. 1608), Marāthī writer of hymns in honour of the god Vithobā of Pandharpur. He came from Paithan in the Deccan. Though a Brahmin, he committed the then unheard-of act of dining with an outcaste.

N. Macnicol, Psalms of the Marāthā Saints (1923). H.G.R.

Eleutherophilos: see LINSCHOTEN, PAŪLUS.

Elgström, PER (*Kronoborgs län 24 XII 1781; †Stockholm 28 X 1810), Swedish poet and pamphleteer. He considerably influenced Swedish neo-romanticism in the early 19th century, being the first to adopt Schelling's system of objective idealism. He had much in common with C. J. L. Almquist.

Samlade vitterhetsarbeten af Per Elgström och G. Ingelgren, ed. P. Hanselli (1860).

S. Magnusson, Det romantiska genombrottet i Auroraförbundet (1936). C.H.K.

Eliade-Radulescu, ION: see HELIADE-RADULESCU.

Elias d'Ussel: see EBLE D'USSEL.

Elias, WILLEM, alias WILLEM VRANCX, 16th-century Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition, factor of the Chamber of Rhetoric, 'De Lelie' at Diest. He wrote the remarkable Cluyt van Tielebuys.

L. Willems, 'De diestersche rederijker W. E.', in Gedenkboek A. Vermeylen (1932). J.J.M.

Elie of Winchester, 12th-century Anglo-Norman poet. He translated the Disticha Catonis (see CATO).

Elie's de Wincestre, eines Anonymus und Everarts Übertragungen der Disticha Catonis, ed. E. Stengel (1886). M.F.L.

Elijah of Wilna: see WILNA, ELIJAH.

Eliot, GEORGE, pen-name of Mary Ann Evans (*Arbury Farm, Warwicks 22 XI 1819; ∞1880 J. W. Cross; †London 22 XII 1880), English novelist. George Eliot spent her youth looking after her father's household in Warwickshire, reading widely and acquiring a knowledge of classical and European languages. Her friendship with Charles Bray brought her into contact with new ideas and forced her to reconsider her religious beliefs. On her father's death (1849) she became assistant editor of The Westminster Review (1851–53), making the acquaintance of John Chapman and Herbert Spencer. From 1854 until his death in 1878 she lived with G. H. Lewes who did much to encourage her creative powers. Her literary apprenticeship was served in translation and criticism, but in 1857 she made her début as a novelist with three stories in Blackwood's Magazine.

George Eliot's tolerance and largeness of mind gives a deep humanity to all her novels. Her early work is largely autobiographical in its treatment of English rural life and of the experiences of childhood. Her gift for comedy blends with a command of pathos to lend warmth to her characterization; and to her firm moral sense, with its emphasis on duty and renunciation, her plots owe both their dramatic intensity and their seriousness.

The freshness of the first novels is lacking in the later, where historical documentation and philosophical issues engaged her attention for their own sake, but in Middlemarch these preoccupations are successfully adjusted to the interest of plot and character. The first English novelist to draw 'intellectual' men, she had great range in portraiture. Middlemarch is a study of the Victorian age, not merely of 'provincial life', and does justice to its greatness.

NOVELS: Scenes from Clerical Life (2 vols, 1858); Adam Bede (3 vols, 1859); The Mill on The Floss (3 vols, 1860); Silas Marner (1861); Romola (3 vols, 1863); Felix Holt, the Radical (3 vols, 1866); Middlemarch (4 vols, 1871–72); Daniel Deronda (4 vols, 1876).—TRANSLATIONS AND ESSAYS: D. F. Strauss, The Life of Jesus Critically Examined, tr. by Marian Evans (3 vols, 1846); L. Feuerbach, The Essence of Christianity, tr. by Marian Evans (1854); Impressions of Theophrastus Such (1879); Essays and Leaves from a Notebook, ed. C. L. Lewes (1884).—VERSE: The Spanish Gypsy (1868); The Legend of Jubal and Other Poems (1874).—Collected Works (20 vols, 1878–80; Illustr. Copyright ed., 21 vols, 1908).

J. W. Cross, G. E.'s Life, as related in her

Letters and Journals (3 vols, 1885); M. Blind, G. E. (1883); O. Browning, Life of G. E. (1890); L. Stephen, G. E. (1902); M. H. Deakin, The Early Life of G. E. (1913); E. S. Haldane, G. E. and Her Times (1927); A. H. Paterson, G. E.'s Family Life and Letters (1928); A. T. Kitchel, George Lewes and G. E. (1934); G. S. Haight, G. E. and John Chapman (1940); Gerald Bullett, G. E. and her Novels (1947); Joan Bennett, G. E.: Her Mind and her Art (1948).—Articles on G. E. in F. W. H. Myers, Essays Modern (1883); Henry James, 'The Life of G. E.' and 'Daniel Deronda, A Conversation', in Partial Portraits (1888), 'The Poetry of G. E.', in Views and Reviews (1908); Virginia Woolf, The Common Reader (1925); F. R. Leavis, The Great Tradition (1948). R.F.

Elisabeth, Countess of Nassau-Saarbrücken (1397–1456) compiled a series of German prose 'novels', Loher (= Lothar) und Maller, Hug Schapler, Herpin, Sibilla (all by 1437), using stories and motifs from French chansons de geste and their prose derivatives. It is difficult for us to believe that they were not intended as burlesques: often reprinted in the 16th century, they finally joined the chapbooks.

Hug Schapler, ed. H. Kindermann (Dt. Lit. in Entw.-Reihen, 1928); further biblio. details in G. Ehrismann, Gesch. d. dt. Lit. . . . des MAs. (Schlussbd., 1935); W. Liepe, E. v. N.-S. (1920); L. Mackensen, Die dt. Volksbücher (1927). F.P.P.

Elizabeth I, Queen of England and Ireland (*Greenwich 7 IX 1533; †Richmond 24 III 1603). Tutored by Ascham, she could read the Greek Testament, Sophocles, Cicero, Livy and some of the early Christian Fathers. Her translations of Boethius, Plutarch (De Curiositate) and Horace (De Arte Poetica) show ability in verse and prose. B.L.J.

Letters to James VI, 1582–1602, ed. J. Bruce (1849); Englishings of Boethius, Plutarch, Horace (1593), ed. C. Pemberton, Early Eng. Text Soc. (1899).

G. B. Riddleborough, 'Queen Elizabeth's Translations of Boethius', in Jour. Eng. Ger. Philol. (1946). J.R.B.

Elliott, Ebenezer (*Masborough 17 III 1781; †Great Houghton 1 XII 1849), English poet who dedicated his not inconsiderable talent to vigorous passionate rhymes against the Corn Laws.

Village Patriarch (1829); Corn Law Rhymes (1831); Love: A Poem (1831); Splendid Village, etc. (2 vols, 1850).—Works, ed. by son, E. Elliott (2 vols, 1876).

J. Watkins, Life, Poetry and Letters of E. E. (1850); J. Searle, Memoirs of E. E. (1850). R.M.H.

Ellis, George (*West Indies 1753; †1815), English pamphleteer, historian and editor who contributed both to the Whig satires, Rolliad (c. 1785) and, later, The Anti-Jacobin; a friend of Scott.

Poetical Tales by Sir Gregory Gandes (1778); History of the Dutch Revolution (1789); ed. Specimens of the Early English Poets (1790), Specimens of the E. E. Romances (1792). H.An.

Elster, Kristian Mandrup (*Overhalla 4 III 1841; ∞1874 Sanna Fasting; †Trondhjem 1881), Norwegian novelist and short-story writer. Elster achieved posthumous fame with his novel Farlige Folk (1881), and, although his earlier short stories and sketches had been favourably received, he failed, largely by reason of a morbid lack of self-confidence, to establish himself as a writer. Fantasy versus reality is the central problem in his work.

Tora Trondal (1879); Udvalgte Fortællinger, ed. A. Kielland (1881).—Samlede Skrifter (2 vols, 1903). R.G.P.

Elstob, Elizabeth (*Newcastle on Tyne 29 IX 1663; †3 VI 1756), English author of an Anglo-Saxon grammar (1719) and translator of Homily on the Nativity of St Gregory (1709).

Mrs (Mary) Delany, Autobiography, ed. Lady Llanover (1861–62); G. B. Richardson, William and Elizabeth Elstob, the learned Saxonists (1847). R.M.H.

Elyot, Sir Thomas (*1490?; ∞after 1522 Margaret Abarrow; †20 III 1546), English diplomatist and scholar, who helped to 'augment our English tongue' with his translations and Latin-English Dictionary (1538). He was a reluctant ambassador to Charles V of Spain (1531–32). The sound theory of education developed in his Governor (1531) shows an awareness of the ideal relationship between matter and style which is exemplified in his translations. B.L.J.

The Boke named the Governor (1531), ed., with life and criticism, H. H. S. Croft (2 vols, 1880), ed. F. Watson (1907); The Castel of Health (1539), repr. facs. (1937); Of the Knowledge which maketh a Wise Man (1533), ed. E. J. Howard (1946).

D. T. Starnes, Sir T. E. (1933); J. Wortham, 'Sir T. E. and the Translation of Prose', in Hunt. Lib. Quart. (1948). J.R.B.

Elys, Edmund (*Haccombe, Devonshire 1634?; †after 1707), English divine and poet who defended the Quakers in pamphlets. A fellow of Balliol College, Oxford (1655), he edited H. More's

Letters (1694) and translated Boethius (1674).

Dia Poemata (1655); Divine Poems (1658; 1659); Miscellanea (1662). B.L.J.

Emerson, RALPH WALDO (*Boston 25 V 1803; ∞1829 Ellen Tucker (†1831), ∞1835 Lydia Jackson; †Concord, Mass. 27 IV 1882), American poet, essayist and philosopher. Following his long line of preacher ancestors, he attended Harvard and became a pastor; but resigned when he could not conscientiously administer the Eucharist. On his first trip to Europe he formed a life-long friendship with Carlyle. His productive years began when he remarried and settled in Concord; here he helped found the Transcendental Club and edited The Dial. His first book, Nature (1836), contains the gospel of his transcendental ideas. He was considered revolutionary when he gave the Harvard address, The American Scholar (1837), demanding independence in thought and art, emphasizing supreme self-reliance. Now famous, he produced two series of Essays (1841 and 1844); lectured throughout the West and abroad; published Representative Men (1850), testing the values of great men, and English Traits (1856), gracefully analysing British society. His social criticism culminates in The Conduct of Life (1860). An experimental poet as well as philosopher, he was leader of the American renaissance.

Poems (1847); Society and Solitude (1870); Selected Poems (1876); Natural History of the Intellect and Other Papers (1893).—COLLECTED: The Complete Works of R. W. E., ed. E. W. Emerson (12 vols, 1903–04); The Complete Essays and Other Writings of R. W. E., ed. B. Atkinson (1940).—JOURNALS: The Journals of R. W. E., ed. E. W. Emerson and W. E. Forbes (10 vols, 1909–14); The Heart of E.'s Journals, ed. B. Perry (1926).—LETTERS: The Correspondence of Thomas Carlyle and R. W. E., ed. C. E. Norton (2 vols, 1883); The Letters of R. W. E., ed. R. L. Rusk (6 vols, 1939).

G. E. Woodberry, E. (1907); G. W. Cooke, E.: His Life, Writings, and Philosophy (1881); B. Perry, E. Today (1931). H.L.C.

Emin, FËDOR ALEXANDROVICH (*Yugoslavia? 1735?; †St Petersburg 1770), the first Russian novelist at a time when Russian prose-fiction consisted mainly of translations. He went to Russia in 1761, learned the language, edited in 1769 the best satirical journal of that period, Adskaya Pochta ('The Hell Post'), and wrote seven didactic-adventurous novels. Some of them are modelled on Fénelon's Les aventures de Télémaque. His Pis'ma Ernesty i Doravry ('Letters between Ernesta and Doravra', 1766) shows a strong influence of Rousseau's La nouvelle Héloïse.

A. Lyashchenko, Publitsisticheskiy element v romanakh Emina (1898); V. V. Sipovsky, Ocherki iz istorii russkogo romana, I (1909). J.L.

Eminescu, MIHAIL, pseud. of MIHAIL EMINOVICI (*Botoşani 13 or 15 I 1850; †Bucharest between 3 and 15 VI 1889), a great Rumanian poet, though he ceased writing at the age of thirty-three. While still a schoolboy in Cernautz (1865) some of his poems were printed in the Familia magazine. At sixteen he ran away for the second time with a company of strolling players whose prompter he was for three years. In 1869 he went to Vienna university and thence with a 'Junimea' scholarship to Berlin university (1872–74) but failed to take a degree at either. A poem of his, Venerea şi Madona, published in Convorbiri Literare (1870) attracted much attention. From 1877 to 1883 he was one of the editors of the daily Timpul in Bucharest. He showed signs of insanity in 1883 but was cured and became assistant librarian at Jassy university until his first relapse (1886) when he was interned in Neamtz monastery. After a short lucid interval he had another relapse (1889) and died shortly after, in tragic circumstances.

Eminescu was a romantic dreamer whom extreme sensibility and powerlessness to face the ups and downs of life turned into a pessimist. He had the intellectual equipment of a great poet—culture and ideas. He was deeply interested in science and sociology. Between two relapses he studied Sanskrit and actually left a Sanskrit grammar and a translation from Kant. He wrote 60 poems, two philosophical tales (Sărmanul Dionis and Cesara), a novel (Geniu Pustiu), fairy tales (Făt frumos din lacrimă) and a great many articles on a wide range of subjects. Some of his poems and tales have been translated into French, German, Italian and English.

Poezii (1880, 6th ed. 1892; other eds. 1938, 1950; Ger. trs: Der Abendstern (Luceafărul) E. von Herz, 1893; Gedichte, Tecouţia, 1893; Deutsche Übertragungen aus den Dichtungen des Poeten E., 1901; Gedichte, M. W. Schroff, 1913; Quelques poésies de E., tr. A. G. Soutzo, 1911; Poèmes, tr. P. Nicolescu, 1931; Poèmes choisis, tr. R. P. Barral, 1934; Hypérion (Luceafărul), tr. P. Lahovary, 1943; Poems, tr. E. Pankhurst and I. O. Stefanovici, 1930); Prosa şi versuri (1890; Der arme Dionis (Sărmanul Dionis), Ger. tr. Sanielevici and W. Majerczik, Bucharest, 1904; Novellen, tr. M. W. Schroff, Cracow, 1913).

N. Petrascu, E., Studiu critic (1891); M. Dragomirescu, Critica stiinţifica şi E. (1895); I. Scurtu, E., Leben und Prosaschriften (1904); N. Zaharia, E., Pesimismul şi personalitatea sa artistica (1910); T. Vianu, Poezia lui E. (1920); D. A. Nanu, Le poète E. et la poésie lyrique française (1930); D. Caracostea, Arta cuvântului la E. (1938); U. T. Paunescu, Problema E., Comentarii şi Interpretari (1941); I. San Giorgio, Neue deutsche Quellen bei E. (1941). A.V.W.

Emo (*Westeremden ? c. 1175; †Wittewierum 1237), Frisian chronicler, studied at Orleans, Paris and Oxford, became a teacher at Westeremden, entered the Premonstratensian order and founded the abbey of Bloemhof at Wittewierum in 1214. Here he remained as abbot until his death. He wrote a chronicle, important for the history of Friesland, running from 1204 until 1234, continued by Menko until 1273 and next by Folberd (?) until the end of the 13th century.

Ed. H. O. Feith and G. Acker Stratingh, in Werken v. h. Hist. Genootschap te Utrecht, N. S., IV (1866); L. Weiland, in Mon. Germ. Script., XXIII (1874).

A. W. Wijbrands, De abdij Bloemhof te Wittewierum in de 13e eeuw (1883); J. Romein, Gesch. van de Noord-Nederlandsche geschiedschrijving in de Middeleeuwen (1932). J.J.M.

Empedocles of Acragas (mid-5th century B.C.), Greek philosopher, a man of varied activities, including politics, medicine, cosmology and religion. His work in hexameter verse, On Nature, gives a pluralist cosmology based on four ultimate elements (earth, air, fire and water), and biological theories of perception and thought. A second poem, Purifications, belongs to religion rather than to science or philosophy, and maintains the doctrine of metempsychosis. Quite lengthy fragments survive, mostly from On Nature. His main importance is his determination to reassert, against Parmenides, the value of the evidence of the senses for an understanding of reality.

H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, I (6th ed. 1951).

J. Burnet, Early Greek Philosophy (4th ed. 1945; with tr.); E. Bignone, Empédocle (1916); W. Jaeger, Theology of the Early Greek Philosophers (1947); W. Kranz, Empedokles (1949); W. J. Verdenius, ‘Empedocles’ “theory of sight”’, in Studia Vollgratt (1948). D.J.F.

Emrys ap Iwan, pen-name of Robert Ambrose Jones (*Abergele 24 III 1851; †Rhewl, Denbighshire 6 I 1906), Welsh critic. After a few years of studying and teaching on the continent, he spent his life as a minister in the Vale of Clwyd. In contributions to newspapers and periodicals he pilloried the defeatist snobbery and philistine religiosity of his fellow-countrymen, and advocated home-rule. His style shows influence by the prose-writers of the period between the Reformation and the Methodist revival.

Various contributions to Y Faner (1876–85) and Y Geninen (1883–1903); Homilïau (2 vols, 1906–09); Breuddwyd Pabydd wrth ei Ewyllys (2 vols [1931]); Detholiad o Erthyglau a Llythyrau Emrys ap Iwan, ed. D. M. Lloyd (3 vols, 1937–40).

T. Gwynn Jones, E. ap I. (1912); R. T. Jenkins, Yr Apêl at Hanes (1930); S. Lewis, Ysgrifau Dydd Mercher (1945); B. Jones, ‘Arddull E. ap I.’, in Y Llenor, XXIX (1950). B.Re.

Enchō, pseud. of Debuchi Jirokichi (*Edo (=Tokyo) 13 V 1839; †ibid. 11 VIII 1900), Japanese story-teller, whose numerous stories were taken down and published. E.B.C.

Encina, Juan del (*Salamanca 1468; †León ? 1529 ?), Spanish poet, dramatist and musician. He studied under Nebrija, sang in the cathedral and entered the household of the duke of Alba. His first plays were performed in the duke's palace in 1492. He failed to become cantor at the cathedral, went to Rome and obtained a canonry at Málaga in 1508. After two more visits to Rome he went to Jerusalem in 1519, where he said his first mass. On his return he became a canon at León. His Cancionero (1496) contains his essay on the art of poetry, some good lyrics, many rather conventional longer poems and eight plays, some religious, some profane. These plays are simple, in a literary dialect, and have considerable charm and realism. Several later ones were acted in Salamanca and Rome, including his more ambitious Égloga de Plácida y Victoriano. The first considerable Spanish dramatist, his work influenced L. Fernández, Vicente and Torres Naharro. He was a skilled musician, and his songs in Barbieri's Cancionero include some fine examples of his art. He also wrote a lament on the death of Prince John of Castile and a verse account of his pilgrimage to Jerusalem. His work as a whole is of artistic as well as historical importance.

F. Asenjo Barbieri, Cancionero musical de los siglos XV y XVI (1890); Teatro complete, ed. M. Cañete (1893); Cancionero (fac. repr., ed. E. Cotarelo, 1928); Canciones, ed. A. J. Battistessa (Buenos Aires, 1941).

J. P. W. Crawford, Spanish Drama before Lope de Vega (Philadelphia, 1937). E.M.W.

Enciso, Diego Jiménez de: see Jiménez de Enciso, Diego.

Engelbretsdatter, Dorothe, daughter of Engelbret Jørgensen (*Bergen 16 I 1634; ∞1652 Ambrosius Hardenbech; †ibid. 19 II 1716), Norwegian poet. The daughter of a clergyman, Dorothe was much praised in her day as a writer of baroque religious verse. She is somewhat lachrymose in her sentiments, but has a power of versification second only to that of Petter Dass with whom she shares the literary honours of the century.

Siælens Sangoffer (1677?); Andægtige Taare-Offer (1685).

J. Storjohann, Norges første Digterpar D. E. og Peder Dass (1911). R.G.P.

Engelen, Adriaan Walraven; pseud. H. van Apeltern (*Valkeveen 23 VIII 1804; †Velp 29 I 1890), Dutch liberal historian, prose writer and poet.

Poetry: Poëzij (1829); Dichterlijken brief aan Dr. H. Riedel (1833); Staatshervormen (1845).—Prose: De grot van Fosto (3 vols, 1840); Herinneringen van vroeger en later leeftijd (1887).

E. J. Potgieter, Kritische Studiën, 2 (1876). J.W.W.

Engelen, Cornelis van (*Utrecht 1722; †Leiden 1793), Dutch mennonite clergyman, man of letters and translator.

Welke zijn de algemeene oogmerken die een dichter moet bedoelen (1779). J.W.W.

Ennius, Quintus (*Rudiae, Calabria c. 239; †Rome 169 B.C.), 'the father of Roman poetry'. After service in the Roman army in Sardinia, Ennius was brought by M. Porcius Cato to Rome, where he earned a living by teaching Greek. He became an intimate friend of Scipio Africanus and in 184 obtained Roman citizenship. The extant fragments of his works, which included tragedies, comedies, satires and didactic poems, show Ennius as a poet of versatility both in form and subject-matter. His undying fame at Rome was achieved principally by his hexameter epic of Roman history, the 18 books of Annales. The extant lines (some 550) are conspicuous for their rugged greatness. The versification is rough, but it is impossible to overestimate Ennius' creation of the Latin quantitative hexameter.

Ennianae Poesis Reliquiae, ed. J. Vahlen (3rd ed. 1928); The Annals of Q. E., ed. Ethel M. Steuart (1925); E. H. Warmington, Remains of Old Latin, I (Loeb Libr. 1935).

W. Y. Sellar, The Roman Poets of the Republic (3rd ed. 1889); E. Norden, E. und Virgilius (1915). A.J.D.

Ennodius, Magnus Felix (*473; †521), Christian writer, became bishop of Pavia in 511, and led embassies to Constantinople in 514 and 517 to fight the Eutychian heresy. His letters, speeches, poems and a life of St Epiphanius are of some historical interest, but exemplify in style the false taste of his age.

W. Hartel, Corp. Script. Eccl. Lat., 6 (1882); F. Vogel, Mon. Ger. Hist., Auct. Ant., 7 (1885). J.A.W.

Enomoto no Kikaku: see Kikaku.

Enríquez Gómez, Antonio (*Segovia 1602; †Amsterdam? 1660), Spanish poet, dramatist and novelist. Of Jewish descent, he left Spain in 1636, served Louis XIII as secretary and joined the Jewish community at Amsterdam. He wrote copiously in many genres. His most interesting works are a satire called El siglo pitagórico (which contains his picaresque novel Don Gregorio Guadaña), a couple of tragedies of vengeance and a handful of satirical lyrics. He was much influenced by Quevedo, Góngora and Calderón.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 33, 42, 47; Academias morales de las Musas (Bordeaux, 1642); El siglo pitagórico (Rouen, 1644).

M. Menéndez y Pelayo, Historia de los heterodoxos españoles, 5; C. Roth, A History of the Marranos (1940). E.M.W.

Envallson, Carl Magnus (*Vaxholm 24 X 1756; †Stockholm 14 VII 1806), Swedish writer. He revolutionized Swedish vaudeville, for which he translated, revised and wrote large numbers of plays. Of these, Kronofogdarne eller Slottерölet (1787), modelled on Piis and Barré's Les vendangeurs ou les deux baillis, was his greatest success, while his lyrical tragedy Gustaf Ericsson i Dalarne (1784) was the first patriotic musical play in Sweden.

J. Flodmark, C. E. och hans 'Kronofogdar' (1914). C.H.K.

Enzinas, Francisco de; alias Dryander, Du Chesne, Van-Eick, etc. (*Burgos 1520?; †Strasbourg 1552), Spanish humanist. He studied at Louvain and Wittenberg where he met Melanchthon. His translation of the New Testament caused him to be imprisoned in Brussels. He escaped (1545) and travelled widely. He taught Greek at Cambridge and produced some translations of Plutarch and Lucian.

El Nuevo Testamento (Antwerp, 1543); Diálogos de Luciano (Strasbourg, 1550); Las vidas de ilustres y excelentes varones griegos y romanos (Strasbourg, 1551); Mémoires de Francisco de Enzinas (Brussels, 1862).

M. Menéndez y Pelayo, Historia de los heterodoxos españoles, IV (1948). E.M.W.

Enzo (*1220/25; †1272), Italian poet. A natural son of the emperor Frederick II, Enzo was made king of Sardinia (1239) and imperial legate in the Romagna. Being taken prisoner by the Bolognese in 1249, he remained in captivity in Bologna until his death. It seems that he was able, in this period, to cultivate the society of literary men; and what is perhaps his only authentic surviving poem, the fine nostalgic canzone, Amor mi fa sovente, may have been written in prison. Salimbene da Parma describes him admiringly in his chronicle.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912).

V. De Bartholomaeis, Primordi della lirica d'arte in Italia (1943); A. Monteverdi, 'Per una canzone di R. E.', in Studi romanzi, 30 (1947); S. Santangelo, in Studi medievali, 17 (1951). K.F.

Eötvös, József, Baron (*Buda 3 IX 1813; ∞1842 Ágnes Rosty; †Budapest 2 II 1874), Hungarian novelist, poet and essayist. Liberal philosopher and statesman, Eötvös won immediate recognition with his A Karthauzi (1839–40), probably modelled on Sainte-Beuve's Volupté. No great stylist, he was nevertheless a deep thinker, whose literary and political activity alike were aimed at social reform.

Novels: A falu jegyzője (3 vols, 1845; The Village Notary, tr. O. Wenckstern, 3 vols, 1850); Magyarország 1514-ben (3 vols, 1847). —Various: Reform (Leipzig, 1846); A XIX. század uralkodó eszmeinek befolyása az álladalomra (2 vols, 1851–54).

J. Péterfy, Összegyüjtött munkái, I (1901); G. Voinovich, Báró E. J. (1903). G.F.C.

Ephorus (*Cyme, fl. mid-4th century B.C.), Greek historian, probably pupil of Isocrates in Athens. His Histories in 30 books moralizes upon the story of the Greek people and of such foreign nations as they knew, from the Dorian invasion to c. 340. This first 'universal' history, itself a compilation, was much drawn upon by succeeding historians.

F. Jacoby, Fragmente der griech. Historiker, vol. 2 (1926).

E. Cavaignac, 'Réflexions sur Éphore', Mélanges Glotz, I (1932); A. Momigliano, 'La Storia di Eforo e le Elleniche di Teopompo', Riv. filol. class., 13 (1935); G. L. Barber, The Historian Ephorus (1935). R.B.

Ephraem, Byzantine historian. Nothing appears to be known about him except that he wrote a Chronicle in verse c. 1313 on the history of the Roman and Byzantine emperors to 1261. Its importance lies chiefly in its usefulness in establishing the text of other historians on whose work Ephraem relies.

Ed. I. Bekker (1840, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 143 (with Latin tr.). J.M.H.

Epicharmus (c.* 530; †c. 440 B.C.), wrote short comic dramas at Syracuse under Gelo and Hiero, and before that at Megara Hyblea. Of 35 plays, 18 were myth-burlesques, with Heracles and Odysseus as popular characters; some of the rest were apparently scenes from everyday life and dramatized debates. Elpis e Ploutos has the earliest known comic parasite; elsewhere there is much philosophizing, occasional flashes of wit and imagination, and traces of parody and contemporary allusion. Aristotle credits Epicharmus with beginning plot-construction; here, and in the treatment of certain favourite themes and characters, he may have influenced Athenian comedy. His reputation as a sage provoked imitation: spurious quotations and whole treatises circulated under his name.

G. Kaibel, Comicorum Graecorum Fragmenta, I (1899); A. Olivieri, Frammenti della commedia greca, I (2nd ed. 1946, with It. comm.); D. L. Page, Greek Literary Papyri, I (Loeb Libr. 1942).

A. W. Pickard-Cambridge, Dithyramb, Tragedy and Comedy (1927); G. Norwood, Greek Comedy (1931, with trs); E. Wüst, 'Epicharmos und die alte attische Komödie', in Rhein. Museum, N. F. 93 (1950). E.W.H.

Epictetus (*Hierapolis, Phrygia c. 55; †c. 135), Stoic philosopher. He was a slave but was later set free and taught philosophy at Rome and in Epirus. Arrian published his lectures and a Manual of his philosophy. Like other Stoics he taught submission to Fate, and happiness through self-reliance, but without the usual Stoic self-righteousness.

W. A. Oldfather (Loeb Libr., 2 vols, 1926).

T. Colardeau, Étude sur Épictète (1903); D. S. Sharp, E. and the New Testament (1914). D.J.F.

Epicurus (*Samos 341; †270 B.C.), Greek philosopher. He settled in Athens in 306, established his school, the rival of the Stoics, in a garden, and spent his whole life teaching there. Only three epistles, the Kyriai Doxai and some fragments of other works survive.

His problem was to show men the way to personal happiness and tranquillity in a hostile and unpredictable world, and the chief obstacles to be overcome were irrational desires, superstitions and fears. He taught a rigidly materialistic view of the world, based on the atomic metaphysics of Democritus and Leucippus: the world is a random product of natural causes, directed neither by fate nor by gods. Epicurus' emphasis on personal tranquillity, and the selfish hedonism which he appeared to teach, brought his system more disrepute than it deserved. It was admittedly unsocial, but it was not gross. It is expounded with magnificent fervour by the Roman poet Lucretius.

H. Usener, Epicurea (1887); C. Bailey, E. (1926, with tr.).

C. Bailey, The Greek Atomists and E. (1928; fullest Eng. account); E. Zeller, Stoics, Epicureans and Sceptics (1880); W. Wallace, Epicureanism (1902); R. D. Hicks, Stoic and Epicurean (1910); J. M. Guyau, La Morale d'Épicure (1927); A. J. Festugière, Épicure et ses Dieux (1944). D.J.F.

Equicola, Mario (*Alvito c. 1470; †Mantua 1525), Italian humanist, author of Libro de natura de amore (1525), an encyclopaedic treatise reflecting the Platonism of Marsilio Ficino. He was secretary to Isabella d'Este, whom he accompanied to Provence.

D. Santoro, Della vita e delle opere di M. E. (1906) and Il viaggio di Isabella Gonzaga in Provenza (1913); L. Savino, 'Di alcuni trattatisti d'amore', in Studi di letteratura italiana, XI (1914); N. Robb, Neoplatonism in the Italian Renaissance (1934). B.R.

Eraqi: see Iraqi.

Erasmus, Desiderius (*Rotterdam 27 or 28 X 1469; †Basle 12 VII 1536), Dutch humanist, son of Gerard, priest at Gouda, and Margaretha, a woman of Rotterdam. He was educated at the Latin school at Deventer and the friary school at 's-Hertogenbosch. In 1487 he entered the monastery of Steyn near Gouda and was ordained priest in 1492. Next year he left the monastery as secretary to the bishop of Cambrai, who in 1495 allowed him to take up his studies in Paris. There, at the Collège Montaigu, he renewed his acquaintance with the spirit of the Modern Devotion in which he was not very much interested, however. In 1499 he visited England in the suite of Lord Mountjoy. Here he met Thomas More whose lifelong friend he became, spent a few months at St Mary's College, Oxford and was influenced by John Colet who roused his interest in Christian antiquity. Until 1517 Erasmus was constantly abroad (1506–09 in Italy, where he became doctor of theology in Turin and next in England where he lectured at Cambridge). His literary fame by now was world-wide. After the pagan humanistic writings Antibarbari, Adagia and Colloquia, Erasmus professed his 'biblical humanism' in Enchiridion and next published two works which won him general and durable fame, Moriae Encomium, a delightful analysis of the contradictions of man's deepest urges, and an edition of the New Testament, which for centuries remained the basis of New Testament scholarship. Erasmus' years at Louvain (1517–21) were darkened by the battle of the Reformation. Urged by both Protestants and Catholics to take sides publicly, he finally gave in. At Basle where, anxious for his safety, he had taken refuge in 1521, he wrote against Luther his De libero arbitrio, forthwith replied to by the latter in De servo arbitrio. Erasmus lacked understanding for the Lutheran 'sola gratia', which he considered a danger to morality. Henceforward he belonged to the Roman camp. So when in 1529 the Reformation was triumphant at Basle he went into exile at Freiburg. He died while on a visit to his publisher Froben at Basle.

F. v. d. Haeghen, Bibl. Erasmiana (5 vols, 1897–1907); W. de Vreese, Bibl. Erasmiana (1936–41).

Opera Omnia, ed. J. Clericus (10 vols, 1703–06); Opus Epistolarum, ed. P. S. and H. M. Allen and H. W. Garrod, (11 vols, 1906–47), Eng. tr. (up to 1518) by F. M. Nichols, Th epistles of E. (3 vols, 1901–17); Opuscula, ed. W. K. Ferguson (1933).

J. Huizinga, E. (4th ed. 1947; Eng. tr. 1952); R. B. Drummond, E. his Life and Character (2 vols, 1873); F. Seebohm, The Oxford Reformers (4th ed. 1913); R. H. Murray, E. and Luther (1920); Preserved Smith, E. (1923) and A key to the colloquies of E. (1927); P. S. Allen, The age of E. (1914) and E., Lectures and Wayfaring Sketches (1934); J. B. Pineau, E., sa pensée religieuse (1924); A. Renaudet, E. (1926) and Études érasmiennes (1939); A. Hyma, The youth of E. (1930); M. Mann, E. et les débuts de la Réforme française (1934); T. Quoniam, E. (1935). J.J.M.

Eratosthenes (*Cyrene c. 275; †c. 195 B.C.). The last of the great Greek polymaths, he was literary critic, chronologist, mathematician, geographer and poet; head of the royal library at Alexandria from c. 235. None of his works survives entire. He combated the old conception of the poet as primarily an educator and did much for the study of Old Comedy. His work On Chronography, embracing cultural as well as political history, was the foundation of all later chronology. In his Geographica, stimulated by the voyages of discovery of the late 4th century, he cut geography loose from the leading-strings of Homer and applied mathematical methods to the measurement and description of the earth.

C. Müller, Eratosthenis Chronographiae fragmenta, in W. Dindorf's Herodotus (1844); E. Hiller, Eratosthenis carminum reliquiae (1872); C. Robert, Eratosthenis catasterismorum reliquiae (1878); H. Berger, Die geographischen Fragmente des E. (1880).

E. H. Warmington, Greek Geography (1934); H. F. Tozer, History of Ancient Geography (2nd ed. 1935); W. A. Heidel, The Frame of Ancient Greek Maps (1937); J. O. Thomson, History of Ancient Geography (1948). R.B.

Erauso, CATALINA DE, known as La Monja Alférez, 'the Nun Ensign' (*San Sebastián 1592; †Cuitlaxtla ?, Mexico 1650 ?), supposed Spanish autobiographer. Her Historia is probably an 18th-century forgery by Trigueros. The fact that she ran away from a convent and served for years as a soldier in America is undoubted. Several pamphlets and a play by Pérez de Montalbán were written about her adventures.

Historia de la Monja Alférez, Doña Catalina de Erauso, ed. J. M. de Ferrer (Paris, 1829); La Nonne Alférez, tr. J. M. de Heredia (1894); The Nun Ensign, tr. J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly (1908, containing the text of Montalbán's play).

M. Serrano y Sanz, Apuntes para una biblioteca de escritoras españolas, I (1903). E.M.W.

Erben, KAREL JAROMÍR (*Miletín 7 XI 1811; †Prague 21 XI 1870), Czech poet. The son of a fruit-farmer in north-eastern Bohemia, Erben qualified as a lawyer in Prague. He held various administrative posts until in 1844 he entered the service of the Bohemian museum in Prague, in which he spent the rest of his life. From 1851 he was archivist of the city of Prague. His early life was almost entirely devoted to the study of Slavonic (especially Czech) folk-lore, popular poetry, medieval literature and antiquities. In the spirit of romantic scholarship he collected Slavonic folk-tales (e.g. '100 Slavonic fairy-stories and tales in the original tongues', 1864) and Czech folk-songs ('Popular Czech songs and rimes', 1862–64).

His reputation as a poet rests on a single volume, Kytice ('The Garland', 1853), which ensures his place in the front rank of Czech poets and profoundly influenced later writers. It contains (in the definitive edition) 12 ballads and a prologue. The themes and rhythms are basically those of Czech folk-literature, with a distinct emphasis on the grim, irrational, demonic elements of folk belief. Yet Erben's conscious linguistic artistry and moral purpose make these poems much more than mere 'echoes' of popular poetry, such as Čelakovský had produced some years earlier.

Dílo, ed. A. Grund (5 vols, 1938–39); Kytice, best separate ed. by O. Fischer (4th ed. 1947).

A. Grund, K. J. E. (1935); R. Jakobson, 'Poznámky k dílu Erbenovu', in Slovo a slovesnost, I (1935). R.A.

Erceldoune, THOMAS OF, known as Thomas the Rhymer; or Learmont (c.* 1220; †c. 1297), quasi-legendary (yet named in charters) Scottish prophet and poet, corresponding to Merlin in England.

The Romance and Prophecies of T. of E., ed. J. A. H. Murray (1875); J. M. Burnham, 'A Study of T. of E.', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 23 (1908). R.W.B.

Ercilla y Zúñiga, ALONSO DE (*Madrid 1533; ∞1570 María de Bazán; †Madrid ? 1594), Spanish poet. He was of noble family, served as a page to Philip II, whom he accompanied to Flanders and England, and fought as a volunteer in Chile against the fierce Araucanian Indians. On his return to Spain he completed his epic poem on this subject, the three parts of which were published in 1569, 1578 and 1589 respectively. He married well and died rich. The Araucana is the most famous Spanish renaissance epic. It deals with Ercilla's own experiences and contains some magnificent descriptive writing: battle-scenes, landscapes, etc., though his style and versification are rather clumsy, and the poem contains too many irrelevant episodes. His sympathy for the Indians and admiration for their valour and fortitude are notable. The poem provided subject-matter for other poets and dramatists. The most famous sequel was written by Pedro de Oña.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 17; La Araucana, ed. T. Medina (Santiago, Chile, 4 vols, 1916), Morceaux choisis, ed. J. Ducamin (Paris, n.d.), adapted and tr. W. Owen, bk I, canto I (Buenos Aires, 1945).

M. J. Quintana, Discurso sobre la poesía épica española, Bibl. Autores Esp., 19; F. Pierce, The Heroic Poem of the Spanish Golden Age (Oxford, 1947); J. T. Medina, Vida de E. (1948). E.M.W.

Erckmann-Chatrian, joint pseud. of EMILE ERCKMANN (*Phalsbourg 20 V 1822; †Lunéville 14 III 1899) and ALEXANDRE CHATRIAN (*Soldatenthal 18 XII 1826; †Villemomble 3 IX 1890), French novelists and dramatists. Both were Alsatians who embarked on a joint literary career in 1847. Success came to them after 1859. They had a talent for portraying, often in an idealistic light, Alsatian manners (L'Ami Fritz, 1864) and for glorifying patriotic and humanitarian sentiments (Histoire d'un Paysan). They adapted their novels for the stage, and finally quarrelled (1889).

Novels: L'Illustre Docteur Mathéus (1859); Contes (3 vols, 1860–62); Le Fou Yégof (1862); Madame Thérèse (1864); Histoire d'un Conscrit de 1813 (1864; The Conscript, tr. R. D. Gellman, 1909); Waterloo (1865; Eng. tr. R. D. Gellman, 1909); Histoire d'un Paysan (4 vols, 1869–70; The Story of a Peasant, tr. R. D. Gellman, 1915); Le Brigadier Frédéric (1874).—Plays: L'Ami Fritz (1876); Les Rantzau (1882); Madame Thérèse (1882).

L. Shoumacher, E.-C. (1933).

M.G.; J.P.R.

Erinna, Greek poet from Telos (4th century B.C.), died at the age of nineteen. Fragments survive including a portion of her Distaff in which she recalls her girlhood with her friend Baucis and her horror at her friend's death soon after marriage.

E. Diehl, Anthologia Lyrica Graeca (1949); C. M. Bowra, Greek Poetry and Life (1936).

T.B.L.W.

Ershov, Peter Pavlovich (*1815; †1869), Russian poet; author of the charming fairy-tale in verse, Konëk-Gorbunok (1834, 'The Hunchbacked Pony'), a children's classic. It has been successfully filmed.

Stikhotvoreniya (1936); Little Magic Horse, tr. T. B. Drowne (1946). J.L.

Ertel, Alexander Ivanovich (*1855; †1908), Russian author whose stories and novels deal with life in the provinces after the reforms of 1861. Like Turgenev he delighted in natural scenery, and like Tolstoy he was a seeker for the meaning of life and an admirer of the simple people. His best works are Zapiski stepnyaka (1880–85) and the novel Gardeniny (1889, 1933).

Sobranie sochineniy (7 vols, 1909); Pis'ma (1909).

V. V. Bush, Ocherki literaturnogo narodnichestva (1931). J.L.

Erter, Isaac (*Koniuszek 1791; †Brody 20 IV 1851), Galician Hebrew satirist. After a career as a teacher marred by persecution on account of his modernist views, he began to study medicine at the age of thirty-four, practising at Brody from 1831. One of the chief exponents of Haskalah ('Enlightenment'), he directed his satires against all communal abuses, but also against Hasidism (see Ba‘al Shem Tov). He was influenced by Jean Paul, Heine, Börne; his contemporaries admired above all his pure biblical style. He made an unsuccessful effort to found a Hebrew periodical for scholarship and religious reform. A Hebrew translation of Robinson Crusoe by him is lost.

Ha-zofeh le-vet Yisra'el, ed. M. Letteris (1858).

J. Chotzner, 'I. E., a modern Hebrew Humorist', in Jew. Quart. Rev., III (1891); M. Lovitch, 'I. E., his life and works', in Hebrew Union College Annual, I (1904). C.R.

Erythraeus, Ianus Nicius, pseud. of Gian Vittorio Rossi (*Rome? 1577; †Rome 13 XI 1647), Italian scholar. After eighteen years as secretary to a cardinal, Rossi devoted himself to writing. An allegorical novel, Eudemia, satirizing contemporary Roman society, was inspired by John Barclay's Argenis. His collection of about 300 life-like sketches (in Latin) of contemporaries, Pinacotheca, remains a useful source.

Eudemia (1637; 2nd augmented ed. 1645); Pinacotheca (3 vols, Amsterdam, 1643); Dialogi (1645); Epistolae ad Diversos (4 vols, Colonia, 1645).—Opera (3 vols, Colonia [Amsterdam] 1645–49).

L. Gerboni, Un Umanista nel Seicento (1890); B. Croce, 'La "Pinacoteca" dell'Eritreo', in Nuovi Saggi sulla Lett. del Seicento (1931). U.L.

Esad, Mehmed: see Galib.

Escouchy, Mathieu d' (*1420?; †1482?), French chronicler; provost of Péronne and royal procurator at St-Quentin and Compiègne. His chronicle gives a remarkably impartial account of the last years of the reign of Charles VII of France (1444–61). His outlook on society is similar to that of Froissart, and his style is clear, lively and picturesque.

M. d'E., Chronique, ed. G. du Fresne (3 vols, 1863–64). A.H.D.

Escrivá, Juan (*Valencia 2nd half 15th century), Spanish poet, ambassador at Rome in 1497. His poems appeared in the Cancionero general of 1511. His most famous lines 'Ven, muerte, tan escondida' were often glossed, imitated and referred to by later writers, including Calderón.

H. del Castillo, Cancionero general, ed. J. A. de Balenchana (2 vols, 1882). E.M.W.

Espejo: see Santa Cruz y Espejo.

Espinel Martinez, Vicente (*Ronda 1550; †Madrid 1624), Spanish novelist and poet. He led a wandering life, studying at Salamanca and travelling through Navarre with visits to Aragon, Valladolid, Seville. While travelling to Italy he was held in captivity by Moors for a time. On returning to Ronda from Italy, he took orders.

He eventually became a chaplain in Madrid (1599), where he moved in musical and literary circles. His picaresque novel Marcos de Obregón (1618) has a hero who is not a rogue but a disillusioned observer of life. It is influenced by Alemán, but is less bitter. It influenced Lesage. In poetry he is said to have invented the décima.

Rimas (1591); Vida de Marcos de Obregón, ed. S. Gili Gaya (1922); A. Valbuena Prat, La novela picaresca española (1946); The History of the life of the Squire Marcos of Obregon, tr. A. Langton (2 vols, 1816).

E. Muret, 'Notes sur Marcos de Obregón', in Mélanges A. Jeanroy (1928). E.M.W.

Espinosa, Pedro (*Antequera 1578; †Sanlúcar 1650), Spanish poet, anthologist and prose-writer. After living in Granada, Seville and Valladolid he became a hermit and took orders; later he resumed an active life. His poems (especially La fábula del Genil and the Psalmos) are excellent; his anthology (1605) contained some of the best poems of his contemporaries. The prose satires are entertaining.

Flores de poetas ilustres, ed. J. Quirós de los Ríos and F. Rodríguez Marín (2 vols, 1896).

F. Rodríguez Marín, P. E.: Estudio and Obras (2 vols, 1907–09); A. Lumsden, 'P. E.', in Liverpool Studies in Spanish, II (1946). E.M.W.

Espronceda, José de (*nr Almendralejo, Badajoz 1808; †Madrid 1842), Spanish poet. Educated in the private school of Lista, he was at 15 already involved in a conspiracy. At 18 he fled to Gibraltar, Lisbon and London. He fought for the liberal cause in Holland (1828), on the Paris barricades (1830) and in Spain, with arms and pen, against Spanish absolutism. With less schooling than his model Byron, his lyrical impulse, wealth of metre and intensity of feeling made him the best Spanish exponent of extrovert romanticism. His limitations are painfully apparent in the ambitious, dramatic poem El diablo mundo (1840–41). He is most at home in virile patriotic poems calling for freedom, or when rebelling against society and siding with the underdog (A Jarifa en una orgia). He wrote two masterpieces. First, the Canto a Teresa (inexplicably included in El diablo mundo), in which he tells, in 44 octaves of poignant lyrical pessimism, of his personal experience from youthful illusions of freedom and love to utter disillusion and death; it became the canon of Spanish romanticism. Secondly, El estudiante de Salamanca (1839); its eerie atmosphere, restrained passion and variety of metre make this long poetic legend one of the most interesting versions of the Don Juan saga.

Obras Completas, ed. J. J. Domenchina (1945); Poesias y El estudiante de Salamanca and El diablo mundo, ed. Moreno Villa (1923); tr. in Translations from Hispanic Poets, pub. Hisp. Soc. Amer. (N. Y., 1938) and in J. Kennedy, Modern Poets and Poetry of Spain (1860).

J. Cascales Muñoz, Don J. de E.: su época, su vida y sus obras (1914); N. Alonso Cortes, E. (1942); P. H. Churchman, 'Byron and E.', in Rev. Hisp. (1909); A. Bonilla y San Martín, 'El pensamiento de E.', in Esp. Mod., 234 (1908); M. Garcia Blanco, E. o el enfasis (1943). R.M.N.

Esquilache, Francisco de Borja y Acevedo, Prince of (*Madrid 1582; †ibid. 1658), Spanish poet. He was governor of Peru from 1615 to 1621. His poems are often in the manner of the Argensolas: elegant, smooth and classical. They lack originality. Some of his romances approach the popular style.

Obras en verso (1639; Antwerp, 1654); Bibl. Autores Esp., 16, 29, 42, 61. E.M.W.

Estébanez Calderón, Serafín (*Málaga 1799; †Madrid 1867), Spanish writer. He studied law at Granada, intervened in politics, held important posts, was an Arabic scholar of distinction, a folklorist and a bibliophile. He made famous his nick-name of El solitario. He was the protector of his nephew Cánovas del Castillo. His poems and his historical novel Cristianos y moriscos are almost forgotten. His reputation rests on Escenas andaluzas (1847), a pictorial series of sketches of the Andalusian popular types and customs which he knew so intimately. In this type of costumbrismo he is held to be second only to Mesonero Romanos. His style, however, is at times too elaborate, and the fusion of popular and culto language is not always successful.

Poesías (1888).—A. Cánovas del Castillo, 'El solitario' y su tiempo (2 vols, 1883). R.M.N.

Estella, Fr. Diego de, otherwise Diego de San Cristóbal (*Estella 1524; †Salamanca 1578), Spanish religious writer. He studied in Salamanca and became a Franciscan friar in 1541. He afterwards resided in Portugal, Madrid and Salamanca. His magnificently written treatises on the vanity of the world (1574) and on the love of God (1576) were widely read, not only in Spain, but also in England and France.

Tratado de la vida del Evangelista San Juan (1554); Tratado de la vanidad del mundo (1574), The contempte of the world, tr. G. C. (Douai?, n.d.), A methode unto mortification called the contempt of the world, tr. T. Rogers (1586, 1605); Modus concionandi (1576); Meditaciones devotísimas del amor de Dios (1920); Arte de predicar y modus concionandi (1951).

P. Sagües Azcona, Fray D. de E. (1951).
E.M.W.

Estienne, Henri [II] (*Paris 1531 ?; ∞1555 Marguerite Pillot, ∞1565 Barbe de Wille; †Lyons 1598), French printer, humanist, philologist and polemist, son of Robert Estienne. He played a vital part in the diffusion of Greek culture in France, publishing the first edition (1554) of Anacreon (in reality, Alexandrian imitations) and a monumental Thesaurus graecæ linguæ (1572). His philological writings examined and defended the French language as an instrument of expression. An independent sceptic, as in the licentious tales of his so-called Apologie pour Hérodote, he conformed fully to neither Paris nor Geneva.

De la précellence du langage françois (1579), ed. E. Huguet (1896); Traité préparatif à l'Apologie d'Hérodote (1566), ed. P. Ristelhuber (1879).

L. Feugère, H. E. (1853); H. Dieterle, H. E. (Strasbourg, 1895).
G.B.

Estienne, Robert (*Paris 1503; ∞1528 Perrette Bade; †Geneva 7 IX 1559), French printer and humanist. A member of a celebrated family of printers (his father, Henri I, c. 1470–1520; his brother, Charles, 1504–64; his son Henri II), he was royal printer to François I and produced important editions of the Bible in Latin, Hebrew and Greek. Driven for this from France to Geneva (1550) he became a Protestant and attacked his enemies in his eloquent Censures des théologiens de Paris (1552).

A. Renouard, Annales de l'imprimerie des E. (1843).
G.B.

Estlander, Carl Gustaf (*31 I 1834; †28 VIII 1910), Finnish-Swedish scholar, professor of literature and aesthetics at Helsingfors university 1868–98, founded in 1876 the periodical Finsk Tidskrift and in 1885 started, in memory of Runeberg, the influential society Svenska Litteratursällskapet, of which he remained chairman until 1897. Runeberg and Snoilsky in many ways personified his literary ideals. Estlander was a cultural leader of the Finnish-Swedish minority.

Runebergs Skaldskap (1902); Ungdomsminnen (1918); Skrifter (4 vols, 1914–25); M. G. Schybergson, C. G. E. (1916).
B.M.E.M.

Estrada, Diego, Duque de (*Toledo 1589; †Cagliari ? 1647 ?), Spanish autobiographer. It is difficult to sort out truth from fiction in his memoirs, which tell of his murders, duels, imprisonments, tortures, life in Naples and Transylvania, in the Adriatic fleet and finally in a Sardinian monastery; but amidst rodomontade and bombast there are some good stories and interesting details of 17th-century life.

Comentarios del desengañado de sí mesmo, in Memorial histórico español, XII (1860).
E.M.W.

Estúñiga, Lope de (mid-15th century), Spanish poet, son of the Marshal of Navarre. He fought against John II of Castile, where he was imprisoned and later pardoned. His name is attached to a Spanish Cancionero compiled in Italy. His love poetry is elegant and subtle.

Cancionero de Estúñiga, ed. F. del Valle and S. Rayón (1872); R. Foulché-Delbosc, Cancionero castellano del siglo XV, Nue. Bibl. Autores Esp., XXII.

C. V. Aubrun, Le Chansonnier espagnol d'Herberay des Essarts (1951).
E.M.W.

Etherege, Sir George (*Bermuda ? c. 1634–35 ?; ∞1679 ? Matty Arnold; †Paris c. I–II 1691), English Restoration 'wit', who held diplomatic posts and wrote comedies and competent occasional verse. Etherege may have been in France during the Commonwealth. In 1668 he became secretary to the embassy in The Hague. Returning (1671) he took part in an infamous brawl at Epsom in 1676. From 1685 to 1688 Etherege was appointed to the embassy at Regensburg. The Letters written there are easy, graceful, shrewd and witty. Etherege is notable for writing his comedies in prose with serious scenes in rhyme. He had no great dramatic talent and was fortunate in his actors.
B.L.J.

Works . . . Plays and Poems (1704); ed. A. W. Verity (1888); ed. M. F. B. Brett-Smith (3 vols; I and II, 1927; III not yet pub.); The Letter-book, ed. S. Rosenfeld (1928).

D. Foster, in Notes and Queries (1927–28), Rev. Eng. Stud. (1932); B. Dobrée, Essays in biography (1925); F. S. McCarnie, Sir G. E. (1931).
J.R.B.

Étienne de Bourbon (*Belleville-sur-Saone c. 1190; †Lyons c. 1261), French Dominican, preached at Vézelay against the Albigensians and took part in the inquisition against them. His Tractatus de diversis materiis praedicabilibus, a collection of exemplicative stories for the use of preachers, was widely read in the middle ages.

J. T. Welter, L'Exemplum dans la lit tératur religieuse et didactique du moyen âge (1927).
R.R.R.

Étienne de Fougères, (†28 XII 1178), French poet; bishop of Rennes (1168) and chaplain to Henry II of England. He wrote Latin verse and prose. His chief production, however, is the vernacular Livre des Manières, outspoken against worldly vanity, and earliest among such works of general satire.

Le Livre des Manières, ed. J. Kremer (1887). M.F.L.

Étienne de Rouen (fl. 1160), a Benedictine of Bec, wrote an elegy on the death of Waleran de Meulant, son of Stephen I, and an epic poem entitled Draco Normannicus dealing with Norman affairs from 1167 to 1169.

Draco Normannicus, ed. R. Howlett, in Chronicles of the Reigns of Stephen, Henry II and Richard I, 2 (1885). R.R.R.

Etlar, CARIT: see BROSBØLL, J. C. C.

Ettinger, SALOMON (*Warsaw XII 1799; †Zhdanof 1855), one of the first modern Yiddish writers of poetry, fables and plays. He contributed to the development of modern Yiddish, but also wrote in Hebrew, German and Italian.

Serkele (Johannesburg, 1861; Warsaw, 1874), first modern play in Yiddish. Collection of his poems, fables, short stories, was published in St Petersburg in 1889, by his son. Second edition in 1890. J.S.

Eubulus (fl. c. 375–330 B.C.), poet of Athenian Middle Comedy, author of 104 plays: over 50 titles are known, more than half indicating burlesques of tragedy or myth. Sphingokarion illustrates the fondness of Middle Comedy for riddles; elsewhere the stock topics of food and sex are boisterously treated.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, II (1884); J. Demiańczuk, Supplementum Comicum (1912).

G. Norwood, Greek Comedy (1931); T. B. L. Webster, Studies in Later Greek Comedy (1953) and 'Chronological notes on Middle Comedy', in Class. Quart. N.S., II (1952). E.W.H.

Euclid OF ALEXANDRIA (c. 300 B.C.), Greek mathematician. His Elements of plane geometry, theory of numbers, irrational and solid geometry restated in different form the conclusions of his predecessors and added some of his own work: it remained a standard text-book from his own time until the 19th century.

Ed. J. L. Heiberg and H. Menge (8 vols, 1883–1916); tr. Sir Thomas Heath, The Thirteen Books of Euclid's Elements (2nd ed. 3 vols, 1926).

Sir Thomas Heath, A History of Greek Mathematics, I (1921). D.J.F.

Euclides OF MEGARA (c.* 450; †c. 380 B.C.), Greek philosopher, pupil of Socrates and founder of the Megarian school. The Megarians identified the 'One' of Parmenides with the moral good; chiefly they were famous for captious dialectic. D.J.F.

Eugenius OF TOLEDO (c.* 600; †13 XI 658), of noble Visigothic origin, became bishop of Toledo in 647. He wrote much verse and edited poems of Dracontius for king Chindasvinth.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 87; Analecta Hymnica, 50; Mon. Germ. Hist., Auct. Antiq., XIV.

F. Vollmer, 'Die Gedichtsammlung des E. v. T.', in Neues Archiv, 26 (1901). F.J.E.R.

Eugenius Vulgaris (fl. 900), a Neapolitan priest, who wrote a pamphlet in favour of the dead pope Formosus, whose memory and acts had been condemned. Besides Carmina figurata in imitation of Porfirius he also wrote other pieces in lyric metres.

Mon. Germ. Hist., Poet. Lat. Aevi Carolini, IV; E. Dümmler, Auxilius und Vulgarius (1866). F.J.E.R.

Eugippius (fl. 500), an African by birth, head of a monastery at Naples, wrote in 511 a life of Saint Severinus (†482), the apostle of Noricum, which is a valuable historical source.

Mon. Germ. Hist., Auct. Antiq., I; Corpus Script. Eccles. Lat., IX (1885–86).

A. Baudrillart, Saint Séverin (1908). F.J.E.R.

Eunapius (*Sardis c. 345; †c. 420), Greek historian. Adherent of the neo-platonic school of Iamblichus. Author of Historical Memoirs, recounting the history of the empire from 270 to 404, surviving in excerpts, and of Lives of the Sophists, i.e. the later neo-platonists. Tendentious, inaccurate and tasteless, Eunapius is nevertheless a valuable source.

L. Dindorf, Historici graeci minores (1870); J. F. Boissonade, Eunapius: Vitae Sophistarum (1822; repr. in A. Westermann, Philostratorum opera, 1849); W. C. Wright, Philostratus and E., Lives of the Sophists (Loeb Libr. 1922).

V. Lundström, Prolegomena in Eunapii vitas philosophorum et sophistarum (Uppsala, 1897); J. C. Vollebregt, Symbola in novam Eunapii vitarum editionem (1929); G. Moravcsik, Byzantinoturcica (1942). R.B.

Euphorion (*Chalcis c. 276 B.C.), Greek poet; librarian at Antioch under Antiochus the Great. He wrote short epics and composite poems on mythological subjects. The story counts for little; he is interested primarily in rare words and tricks of style.

He greatly influenced Roman poets of the generation of Catullus.

J. U. Powell, Collectanea Alexandrina (1925); K. Latte, 'Der Thrax des Euphorion', in Philologus, XC (1935). T.B.L.W.

Eupolis (*446?; †soon after 412 B.C.), poet of Athenian Old Comedy, with some 14 plays on political and social themes; first production 430/29. He attacked Pericles, Cleon, Hyperbolus and Alcibiades and quarrelled with Aristophanes over alleged borrowings from the Knights. The sophists and their rich patron Callias were the subject of Kolakes ('Flatterers': 421); the name-character of Autolykos (two versions, the first 420) was Callias' favourite, a young athlete. Outstanding, perhaps, were Poleis (422) in which a chorus of tribute cities protested against Athenian imperialism, and Demoi (412) with the resurrection of four great statesmen and their treatment of current problems. One of the greatest comic poets, Eupolis was admired for the ambitious fantasy of his plots and for satire which relied more on wit than vigour.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, I (1880), with important supplements in J. Demiańczuk, Supplementum Comicum (1912) and D. L. Page, Greek Literary Papyri, I (Loeb Libr. 1942).

G. Norwood, Greek Comedy (1931, with trs); Schmid-Stählin, Gesch. d. gr. Lit., I, 4, ii (1946). E.W.H.

Euripides (*Athens 485; †Macedonia 406 B.C.), Athenian tragic poet, son of Mnesarchus or Mnesarchides. His first production was in 455, his first victory in 441. Little is known of his life except that he associated with Socrates and Anaxagoras and went to the court of Archelaus of Macedon in 407. He wrote over 80 plays of which 19 survive. Of these Alcestis was produced in 438, Medea in 431, Hippolytus in 428, Trojan Women in 415, Electra in 413, Helen in 412, Orestes in 408, Bacchae and Iphigenia in Aulis after his death. Stylistic evidence suggests that Heraclidae, Hecuba and Andromache can be dated between 430 and 420, Suppliant Women and Hercules Furens between 420 and 415, Ion, Iphigenia in Tauris and Phoenissae between 415 and 406. The satyr play Cyclops was before 415; the Rhesus is probably the work of a later poet in the 4th century. Although (or because) more plays of Euripides survive (to which considerable papyrus fragments can be added) than of Aeschylus and Sophocles, it is difficult to show a clear progression in his art; the only connected trilogy that we know—Alexandros, Palamedes and Trojan Women—was produced in 415 and the thread binding those plays together seems much thinner than in the trilogies of Aeschylus. The studies of passionate women (Medea, and Phaedra in the Hippolytus) may belong to the years round 430 and are related to sophistic discussions of nature and convention and the Socratic equation of knowledge and virtue; the romantic melodramas which end happily after strange misadventures to close relatives (Iphigenia in Tauris, Helen, Ion) seem to belong to the last fifteen years of Euripides' life and exercised a great influence on 4th-century comedy and the novel. Structure of the whole is less important to him than the value of the individual scene or song. Prologue and final speech often give a prosaic account of past and future legendary history. Choruses are not primary interpreters of the poet's thought and their songs may show musical brilliance rather than relevant commentary: actors also may sing operatic arias which contrast strangely with the realism of character-drawing, costume and language in some of the dialogue. Debates, e.g. on the relative merits of light and heavy armour in the Hercules Furens, show Euripides' interest in the technique of the sophists. Scenes of self sacrifice (e.g. Hecuba), madness (e.g. Orestes), recognition (e.g. Iphigenia in Tauris) and narratives of rescues (e.g. Helen) or fighting (e.g. Andromache) show a sense of theatre which Aristotle admitted when he said that 'Euripides though faulty in other respects was most tragic on the stage'. He does not like Sophocles subordinate everything to a single aim; he sees dramatic elements in a great variety of human activity. He has too much sympathy with the advanced and pessimistic thought of the sophists to accept even the purified and moralized view of divine government which satisfied Sophocles and Aeschylus. Apollo can tell a lie (Ion) and Hera drives Heracles mad out of spite (Hercules Furens); war may turn human beings into heroines or beasts (Hecuba). But some human values such as loyalty, friendship, poetry and music are absolute, and gods like Aphrodite (Hippolytus) and Dionysos (Bacchae) personify forces with which the human being has to come to terms if he is to live. Euripides won only five victories, but after his death he soon became the most popular of the classical tragedians.

Ed. G. G. A. Murray (1901); A. S. Way (1923, with Eng. tr.); L. Méridier, L. Parmentier, H. Grégoire (1925, with Fr. tr.); A.

Nauck, Tragicorum Graecorum Fragmenta (1926); H. von Arnim, Supplementum Euripideum (1913); D. L. Page, Greek Literary Papyri (1942).—TRANSLATIONS: G. G. A. Murray, Alcestis, Bacchae, Electra, Hippolytus, Iphigenia in Tauris, Medea, Trojan Women, Rhesus (1902–14); H. A. Meredith, Hecuba, Heracles, Andromache, Orestes (1937); D. W. Lucas, Medea, Ion, Alcestis (1949–50).—COMMENTARIES: F. A. Paley (1872–80); U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Herakles (1895); D. L. Page, Medea (1938); M. Platnauer, Iphigenia in Tauris (1938); J. D. Denniston, Electra (1939); A. S. Owen, Ion (1940); E. R. Dodds, Bacchae (1944); A. M. Dale, Alcestis (1953).

P. Décharme, Euripide (1905); W. Nestle, Euripides (1901); G. G. A. Murray, Euripides and his age (1913); R. P. Winnington-Ingram, Euripides and Dionysus (1948); A. W. Pickard-Cambridge, in New Chapters in Greek Literature, 3rd ser. (1933). M.L.C.; T.B.L.W.

Eusebius (*260/64; †c. 340), Greek ecclesiastical writer. Pupil of Pamphilus at the Christian school at Caesarea in Palestine, consecrated bishop of Caesarea c. 313/15, excommunicated for Arianism in 324, took part in Council of Nicea in 325, close collaborator of the emperor Constantine. Author of many works of biblical criticism, apologetics, profane and ecclesiastical history as well as panegyrics on Constantine and other orations. Many works are lost, others survive only in translation. He is best known for his Ecclesiastical History in 10 books, in which, applying the methods of Hellenistic scholarship to the church up to 325, he preserves many priceless documents of early Christianity. It is through Eusebius' eyes that succeeding generations have seen and still see the pre-Nicene period.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 19–24; Eusebius Werke, ed. J. A. Heikel, E. Schwartz, T. Mommsen, E. Klostermann, H. Gressmann, J. Karst and R. Helm (7 vols, 1902–26); E. H. Gifford, Eusebii Evangelica Praeparatio (4 vols in 5, 1903, with Eng. tr).; K. Lake and J. E. L. Oulton, Eusebius: Ecclesiastical History (Loeb Libr., 2 vols, 1926–32); S. Lee, Eusebius on the Theophania (1843); W. J. Ferrar, The Proof of the Gospel (2 vols, 1920); H. J. Lawlor and J. E. L. Oulton, Eusebius, the Ecclesiastical History and the Martyrs of Palestine (2 vols, 1927–28).

J. Stevenson, Studies in E. (1929); R. Laqueur, E. als Historiker seiner Zeit (1929); F. J. Foakes-Jackson, E.: a Study of the Man and his Writings (1933); P. Henry, Recherches sur la Préparation Évangélique d'Eusèbe (1935); H. Grégoire, 'Nouvelles recherches constantiniennes', in Byzantion, 13 (1938); I. Daniele, I documenti costantiniani della Vita Constantini di E. di C. (1938); H. Berkhof, Die Theologie des E. von C. (Amsterdam, 1939). R.B.

Euskerken, CLAUS VAN (†30 IX 1520), Dutch writer, friar of the Heer Florenshuis and pastor of the Meester Geershuis at Deventer. Of his sermons, most instructive on the spirit of the Modern Devotion, only excerpts remain.

Ed. D. A. Brinkerink, in Ned. Archief v. Kerkgesch., N.S., III (1905). J.J.M.

Eustache (fl. c. 1170), French poet, author of the Fuerre de Gadres ('the foraging at Gaza'), dealing with incidents in the war between Alexander and Darius. It was revised and incorporated into the Roman d'Alexandre by Alexandre de Bernai, and forms the second branch of this work.

Ed. E. C. Armstrong and A. Foulet, in The Medieval French Roman d'Alexandre, 4 (1942). F.W.

Eustache d'Amiens, 12th-century French poet; author of the Boucher d'Abbeville (c. 1250), a 'fabliau' or short satirical tale about a trick played on a greedy country priest; it stands out for its dramatic qualities and lively characterization.

Ed. A. de Montaiglon and G. Raynaud, in Recueil gen. des fabliaux, III (1878); separately ed. J. Orr (1947). M.F.L.

Eustathius (†c. 1192), Byzantine scholar, metropolitan of Thessalonica, author of orations, letters, commentaries on classical texts, theological writings and an account of the capture of Thessalonica by the Normans in 1185.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 135–136 (with Latin tr.); De capta Thessalonica, ed. I. Bekker (1842). J.M.H.

Eutropius, Roman historian, served with Julian 363 and held high posts under Valens (364–78), at whose command he wrote Breviarium ab Urbe Condita, a digest of Roman history up to 364. His judgment is good and his style straightforward. Popular by its brevity, the work was continued by Paulus Diaconus (c. 770) and by Landulfus Sagax (c. 1000), who brought it down to Leo the Armenian (†820).

Ed. F. Rühl (2nd ed. 1913); Historia Miscella (Eutropius-Paulus-Landulfus), ed. H. Droysen, in Mon. Germ. Hist., II (ed. minor 1879).

W. Pirogoff, De Eutropii Breviarii indole ac fontibus (Diss. Berlin 1873). J.A.W.

Evagrius of Pontus (c.* 345; †399), one of the leading exponents of asceticism in the Egyptian deserts. He used Origen's writings and was later condemned as heretical. His works have survived in part, mainly in translations or under the names of other writers.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 40; O. Chadwick, John Cassian: a study in primitive monasticism (1950). J.M.H.

Evagrius Scholasticus (*Epiphaneia in Syria c. 536; †early 7th century), Byzantine historian. His Ecclesiastical History covers 431–594 and his style is modelled on that of Thucydides. Its value is mainly in the preservation of otherwise lost sources.

The Ecclesiastical History of Evagrius with the scholia, ed. J. Bidez–L. Parmentier (1898); Migne, Patr. Gr., 86 (with Latin tr.); History of the Church (Eng. tr., 1846). J.M.H.

Evans, Evan: see Ieuan Glan Geirionydd.

Evans, Mary Ann: see Eliot, George.

Evans, Theophilus (~Llandugwydd, Cardiganshire 21 II 1693; ∞1728?; †11 IX 1767), Welsh writer. He was ordained curate of Defynnog in Breconshire in 1717, and all his benefices, except Llandyfrïog (1722–28), were in the same county. His early masterpiece, dealing with the history of the ancient Britons and the history of Christianity among the Welsh, is of little value as a critical study, but the author's easy, flowing style, his flair for homely similes and graphic descriptions, and his cavalier treatment of historical figures and historiographers have given it lasting popularity.

Drych y Prif Oesoedd (1716; enlarged ed. 1740; ed. S. J. Evans, 1902); A History of Modern Enthusiasm (1752); also sermons and minor trs into Welsh.

T. J. Morgan, 'Drych y Prif Oesoedd', in Yr Athro, VIII (1935); D. Thomas, 'Cysylltiadau . . . T. E.', in Y Llenor, XVIII (1942). B.Re.

Evelyn, John (*Wotton, Surrey 31 X 1620; ∞27 VI 1647 Mary Browne; †ibid. 27 II 1706), English diarist and virtuoso, student at Middle Temple and Fellow of Balliol 1637. He served in the royalist army 1642, and travelled in France and Italy 1643–46. Returning with Edmund Waller he settled at Sayes Court, Deptford, 1653 and was secretary to the Royal Society in 1672. Evelyn's diary is more a written-up memoir than a day-to-day recording, and is inferior to Boswell's or Pepys'. His extraordinary range of interests was perhaps the outcome of his piety, which induced him to turn every moment of his life to good account.

Sculptura (1662); Sylva (1664); Life of Mrs Godolphin (1847); Diary, ed. E. S. de Beer (6 vols, 1954 ff.; first complete text).

A. W. H. Ponsonby, J. E., F.R.S. (1933). G.F.S.

Everaert, Cornelis (*Bruges c. 1480; †ibid. 14 XI 1556), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition. Cloth dyer, scribe of the St Sebastian guild of archers; member of the Chambers of Rhetoric 'De Heleghe Gheest' and 'De Drie Santinnen'. Between 1509 and 1538 he wrote 35 plays of which the religious and social plays are inferior to the comic ones; these no 16th-century poet has equalled.

J. W. Muller and L. Scharpé, Spelen van C. E. (1920); W. J. C. Buitendijk, Het Calvinisme in de spiegal van de Zuidnederlandsche literatuur der Contra-Reformatie (1942); J. J. Mak, Vier Excellente Kluchten (1948). J.J.M.

Everard le Moine, 12th-century Anglo-Norman poet, sometimes identified with the earlier Everard de Kirkham. He wrote a version of the Disticha Catonis and probably revised the work of Elie of Winchester.

Ed. E. Stengel (1886). M.F.L.

Evliya Çelebi (*Istanbul 1611; †1682), Turkish author. Apart from occasional government service, he spent most of his life in travelling in European, Asiatic and African dominions of the Ottoman empire and neighbouring countries. He wrote an elaborate account of his travels in ten large volumes, an invaluable source of information for history, geography, social life and folklore. Although the author's fiery imagination led him sometimes to exaggerate, he was a good observer and wrote in a comparatively simple and pleasant style.

Seyahatname (vols I–V 1898–99, vol. VI 1902, vols VII and VIII 1928, vol. IX 1935, vol. X 1938).

J. v. Hammer, Narrative of Travels . . . by Evliya Efendi (1840–50); F. Taeschner, 'Die neue Stanbuler Ausgabe von Ewliya Tschelebi's Reisewerk', in Der Islam, XVIII (1929); A. A. Pallis, In the Days of the Janissaries (1950). F.I.

Evrard the German (fl. before 1280), appears to have lived in Cologne. He wrote, in verse, the Laborinthus, on grammar, the art of poetry and the miseries of scholastic life.

E. Faral, Les arts poétiques du XIIᵉ et du XIIIᵉ siècle (1924). F.J.E.R.

Ewald, Carl (*Gram, North Slesvig 15 X 1856; ∞1880 Emilie Salomon, ∞1887 Betty Ponsaing; †Charlottenlund

23 II 1908), Danish novelist, short-story writer and essayist. His literary contributions fall into four main groups: novels discussing contemporary problems, historical novels, stories and fairy-tales, and journalistic novels, stories and essays. He is now mainly remembered as a writer of nature stories (based on a Darwinian philosophy) and satirical and humorous stories.

NOVELS: Regel eller Undtagelse (1883); En Udvej (1884); Lindegrenen (1886); Fru Johanne (1892); Børnekorstoget (1896); Makra (1897); Mogens Heinesen (1904); Karl Peter Ulrik (1905); Den største i Landet (1905); Danske Dronninger uden Krone (1906–08).—STORIES: I det Frie (2 vols, 1892–93); Fem nye Eventyr (1894); De fire Fjerdingsfyrster (1895); Den gamle Stue (1895); Cordts Søn (1896); Æventyr (12 vols, 1893–1905).—Eventyr i Udvalg (1941).—VARIOUS: Min lille Dreng (1899); Min store Pige (1904); James Singletons store Udenlandsrejse (1897); James Singletons Glæde over Danmark (1898); Historier (1902); Canta (1901); Gerhard Ramm (1906).

ENG. TR.: Two Legs, and other stories (1907); The Queen Bee, and other Nature stories (1907); My Little Boy (1908); The Old Room (1908); The Pond, and other stories (1909); The Four Seasons (1913); The Old Willow-Tree, and other stories (1921); The Old Post, and other Nature stories (1922); The Twelve Sisters, and other stories (1923). E.B.

Ewald, HERMAN FREDERIK (*Copenhagen 13 XII 1821; ∞1855 Julie Caroline Oest; †Fredensborg 29 IV 1908), Danish novelist. Following the example of Scott he wrote a series of very popular historical novels, in a pseudo-archaic style, but with little artistic inspiration.

Valdemar Krones Ungdomshistorie (1860), tr. as The Story of Waldemar Krone's Youth (2 vols, 1867); Svenskerne paa Kronborg (1867); Den skotske Kvinde paa Tjele (1871); Knud Gyldenstjerne (1875); Anna Hardenberg (1880); Dronningens Jomfruer (1885); Griffenfeld (1888); Niels Ebbesøn (1886); Caroline Mathilde (1890); Daniel Rantzow (1899). E.B.

Ewald, JOHANNES (*Copenhagen 18 XI 1743; †ibid. 17 III 1781), Danish poet and playwright. In search of easy fame he ran away from home and enrolled as a volunteer in the Seven Years' War. On his return he studied theology and became engaged to Arendse Hulegaard, the niece of his step-father. But in 1764 she married another suitor, and Ewald became a tragic, unhappy character, bitterly disappointed in love, a hopeless drunkard, physically broken down.

Ewald is regarded by many as Denmark's greatest lyrical poet. In a strange way he was both a forerunner of 19th-century romanticism and at the same time bound by 18th-century literary traditions. In his frail body was a restless and indomitable spirit, a lover of mankind and a worshipper of God. He filled the outdated form of the ode with new and fascinating contents—his poetry was passionate—full of the enraptured, harmonious expressions of the genuine poet. He was the first who delved into Scandinavian antiquity and discovered the poetic wealth in the myths, in Saxo Grammaticus, in the sagas and in the medieval ballads. His northern tragedies are inspired by Shakespeare, Milton, Rousseau and Ossian. But he found heroism also in everyday life (Fiskerne, 'The Fishermen'), and a new patriotic sentiment, hitherto unknown to Danish poetry, appears in this play.

Although mainly a lyrical poet Ewald wrote one prose work which has become a classic, his autobiography, entitled Levnet og Meninger ('Life and Opinions'), in imitation of Laurence Sterne, who influenced its style considerably. In these memoirs humour and gentle irony mingle with expressions of the profoundest grief.

PLAYS: Adam og Eva (1769); Rolf Krage (1770); Pebersvendene (1771); De brutale Klappere (1771); Harlekin Patriot (1772); Balders Død (1774–75; The Death of Balder, tr. G. Borrow, 1889); Fiskerne (1779).—VERSE: Adskilligt af Johannes Ewald (1771).—MEMOIRS: Levnet og Meninger (1804–08, new ed. 1942).—Johannes Ewalds samlede Skrifter (6 vols, 1914–24).

C. Molbech, J. E.'s Levnet (1831); A. Oehlenschläger, Om E. og Schiller (1854); H. Möller, Beiträge zur Charakteristik der Dichtungen J. E.'s (1906); H. Brix, J. E. (1913); E. Frandsen, J. E. Et Stykke dansk Aandshistorie (1939); L. Bobé, J. E. Biografiske Studier (1943); K. Flor, J. E. (1943); S. Thomsen, J. E. En Digters Livshistorie (1943). E.B.

Ewing, JULIANA HORATIA, née Gatty (*Ecclesfield 3 VIII 1841; ∞1867 Alexander Ewing; †Bath 13 V 1885), English writer of children's books notable for her imaginative grasp of the child's point of view. Her illustrators included Caldecott and Cruikshank.

Most of Mrs Ewing's stories appeared first in Aunt Judy's Magazine; the dates here given are those of the first edition in book form. Melchior's Dream and Other Tales (1862); Mrs Overtheway's Remembrances (1869); The Brownies (1870); A Flat Iron for a Farthing (1873); Lob Lie by the Fire (1874); Jan of the Windmill (1876); Jackanapes (1883); The Peace Egg: A Christmas Mumming Play (1887).—Collected Works (18 vols, 1894–96).

H. K. F. Eden, J. H. E. and her Books (1885); C. Maxwell, Mrs Gatty and Mrs Ewing (1949). R.F.

Eyth, Max von (*Kirchheim unter Teck 6 V 1836; †Ulm 25 VIII 1906), German writer and engineer, son of the theological writer Eduard Eyth. He spent long periods in England, Egypt, U.S.A. and Peru, returning to Germany 1882. His originality lay in novels of ideas built round a technical question.

Verse: Volkmar (1863).—Sketches and Novels: Wanderbuch eines Ingenieurs (6 vols, 1871–84); Der Waldteufel (1878); Der Kampf um die Cheopspyramide (2 vols, 1902); Hinter Pflug und Schraubstock (1899); Der Schneider von Ulm (1906).—Gesammelte Schriften (6 vols, 1909).

P. Gehring, 'M. v. E.', in Schwäbische Lebensbilder, I (1940); G. Kittel, Eyth und seine Sippe (1937). H.A.P.

Ezzo (fl. 1065), German religious poet. A canon of Bamberg who, evidently at the instigation of bishop Gunther (1057–65), composed a poem of some thirty rhyming stanzas (400 lines in a longer version), on the story from the Creation to the Resurrection. This is the earliest and, by its rhetorical power and extensive use of Christian symbol and allegory, the most poetic of some twenty works believed to reflect religious feeling in Germany after the introduction of the Cluny monastic reform.

A. Waag, Kleinere deutsche Ged. des xi. u. xii. Jh. (1916); H. de Boor and H. Schneider, in Zs. f. dt. Alt., 68 (1931). F.P.P.

Faassen, Pieter Jacobus (Rosier) (*The Hague 9 X 1833; †Rotterdam 2 II 1907), Dutch playwright and actor, the author of popular plays.

Annemie (1878), Eng. tr. C. Scott (1880); De ledige wieg (1878).—Dramatische werken (2 vols, 1883); Mijn leven (1897). J.W.W.

Faber, Peter Christian Frederik (*Copenhagen 7 X 1810; ∞1844 Frantzine Petrine Eibye; †ibid. 25 IV 1877), Danish poet. By profession he was a scientist and became the director of the Danish Telegraphs. As a poet he was an amateur, but his name is invariably linked with his song, Den tapre Landsoldat (written 1848, tr. The Gallant Soldier, Ill. London News, 1851), a simple and genial expression of the feelings of the Danish private soldier at the time of the first Slesvig war. Some of his Christmas songs, too, have gained enormous popularity in Denmark.

Viser og Vers (1877).—H. Brix, Fagre Ord (1908). E.B.

Fabius Pictor, Quintus, the first Roman historian, composed in Greek after the battle of Cannae (216) an annalistic history of Rome up to his own time, much used as a source by later Roman historians. Only fragments remain.

H. Peter, Hist. Rom. Rel. (2nd ed. 1914).
W. Harless, De Fabiis et Aufidiis rerum Romanarum scriptoribus (1853). J.A.W.

Fabre, Ferdinand (*Bédarieux 19 VI 1827; †Paris 11 II 1898), French novelist. Fabre, born of a peasant family, was sent to the seminary at Saint-Pons but left before finishing his studies. His novels presented a realistic picture of peasant life as he knew it in his native Provence—and, more particularly, of the psychology of the country priest.

Les Courbezon (1862); L'abbé Tigrane (1873); Mon Oncle Célestin (1881); Lucifer (1884); Ma vocation (1889).

J. Lemaître, Les Contemporains, II (1888); E. W. Gosse, French Profiles (1905). M.G.; J.P.R.

Fabre d'Églantine, pseud. of Philippe Fabre (*Carcassonne 28 XII 1755; †Paris 5 IV 1794), French writer. In turn priest, actor and a member of the Convention, Fabre d'Églantine ended his life on the scaffold in the company of Danton and Camille Desmoulins. He had been a disciple of Rousseau and was the author of the republican calendar. He wrote a number of songs, but is best known for his topical comedies which held the Paris stage during the revolution. In his best play, Le Philinte de Molière (1791), he sets himself to rehabilitate the misanthrope Alceste at the expense of Philinte.

Les gens de lettres (1787); L'aristocrate ou le convalescent de qualité (1791); L'intrigue épistolaire (1791); Les précepteurs (1800); Œuvres politiques (1914).

L. Moland, Théâtre de la Révolution (1877); L. Jacob, F. d'E., chef des 'Fripons' (1946). M.G.; J.P.R.

Fabri, or Lefevre, Pierre (of Rouen; †before 1520), French writer. His treatise on rhetoric (1521) is a full guide to writing prose and verse according to the practice of the rhétoriqueurs. He recommends the regular alternation of masculine and feminine rhymes, but only in the chant royal.

Le grand et vrai art de pleine rhétorique, ed. A. Héron (3 vols, 1889–90). M.Y.

Fabrizi, Cinzio Aloise (*Venice, first half of 16th century), Italian poet, author of Libro della origine delli volgari proverbi (1526), dedicated to Pope Clement VII.

Its obscenity led to the institution of a censorship in Venice in 1527.

G. Rua in Giorn. storico della lett. ital., 18 (1891); L. Di Francia, Novellistica, II. B.R.

Fa-hsien, religious name of Kung, personal name unknown (▫Wu-yang; †Ching-chou 420), Chinese Buddhist monk. Fa-hsien is the first Chinese pilgrim to India whose travel record has been preserved. He set out overland from Ch'ang-an c. 399, and, after 15 years abroad, of which he spent 6 in India and 2 in Ceylon, he returned home by sea. In 416 he wrote an account of his travels, Fo-kuo chi. He devoted his last years to translation of scriptures which he had brought back.

A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms, tr. J. Legge (1886); H. A. Giles, Record of the Buddhistic Kingdoms (1877); S. Beal, Buddhist Records of the Western World (2 vols, 1906). A.R.D.

Fairfax, EDWARD (*Leeds; †I 1635), English translator of poetic quality, whose managing of metre, especially the couplet of his heroic stanzas, influenced Waller and other couplet-writers. His translation of Tasso—the first complete—is represented in England's Parnassus (1600).

Godfrey of Bulloigne or the Recoverie of Jerusalem (1600), repr. H. Morley (1890).
R. E. N. Dodge, in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 44 (1929); R. C. Wallerstein, ibid., 50 (1935); C. C. Bell, 'History of F. Criticism', ibid., 62 (1947). B.L.J.

Faitinelli (Mugnone), PIETRO DE' (*Lucca 1290?; †c. 1349), Italian poet. A Black Guelf, he was exiled when the Ghibellines gained supremacy in Lucca (1314); recalled (1331), he resumed his profession as a notary. Faitinelli wrote autobiographical, moral and political sonnets expressing with colloquial immediacy his grief in exile and antipathy against the changing order.

Rime, ed. Del Prete (1874).
E. Gerunzi, 'P. d. F. detto M. e il moto di U. d. F. in Toscana', in Propugnatore, XVII (1885); N. Sapegno, Il Trecento (with biblio. 1945). M.W.

Fakhr al-Din Jurjāni, AS'AD, 11th-century Persian poet, is the author of Vis-u-Rāmin (Calcutta, 1865; Tehran, 1935), a romance in verse based on an old Parthian original.

V. Minorsky, 'Vis-u-Ramin, a Parthian Romance', in Bull. Sch. Or. Stud., XI (1946), XII (1947). E.Y.

Falaguera (IBN FALAQUERA, (IBN) PALQUIERA), SHEMTOB (*c. 1225; †c. 1295), Spanish Hebrew philosopher and poet. He was a faithful follower of Maimonides and a propagandist for the study of the sciences. Besides some encyclopaedias, he pursued this aim in a work of the Maqāma style (rhymed prose with poetry interspersed), Ha-Mevaqqesh (Cracow, 1646), which was widely read.

Iggereth ha-Wikkuah (1st ed. Constantinople, 1577; ed. A. Jellinek, 1875); Zori ha-Yagon (Cremona, 1557); Reshith Ḥokhmah, ed. M. David (1902).
H. Malter, 'Shem Tob ben Joseph Palquera', in Jew. Quart. Rev., n.s. I (1910). C.R.

Falcando, HUGO, Italian chronicler, lived in Sicily in the time of William I and William II. His Liber de Regno Sicilie, written before 1190, covers the period 1154–68.

Ed. L. A. Muratori, in Rerum Ital. Script., 7 (1732). R.R.R.

Falcão, CRISTÓVÃO (*c. 1515; †c. 1553), Portuguese poet. He is traditionally held to be the author of the long eclogue Crisfal, though attempts have been made to ascribe the work to Bernardim Ribeiro. The poem is an interesting example of the Portuguese type of pastoral, but its celebrity is to a large extent due to the polemics that have arisen over its authorship.

Trovas de Crisfal (n.d.); the eclogue was incl. in Bernardim Ribeiro, Hystoria de Menina e Moça (Ferrara, 1554); ed. F. Costa Marques (1943).
C. Michaëlis de Vasconcelos, 'C. F. e a Écloga Crisfal', in Bernardim Ribeiro e Cristóvão Falcão: Obras, I (1923); M. da Silva Gaio, Bucolismo, II: C. F. (1933). T.P.W.

Falco of Benevento (fl. 1100–50), jurist and chronicler. He wrote a valuable eyewitness account of the resistance of Benevento against Innocent II.

G. Del Re, Cronisti e scrittori sineroni Napoletani (1845); K. A. Kehr, 'Ergänzungen zu F. v. B.', in Neues Archiv, XXVII (1902). R.R.R.

Falconer, WILLIAM (*Edinburgh 11 II 1732; †at sea XII 1769), Scottish poet. He went to sea as a boy; won patronage and fame with The Shipwreck, which describes with vividness and a wealth of technical detail the loss of the Britannia in 1749, when Falconer was a survivor. This poem furnished Byron with storm material for Don Juan.

A Poem on the Death of Frederick Prince of Wales (1751); The Shipwreck. A Poem in three cantos. By a Sailor (1762; 1764); The Demagogue (1764); Universal Dictionary of the Marine (1769).

J. Friedrich, The Shipwreck (1907); Austin Dobson, 'F.'s Shipwreck', in Rosalba's Journal (1915). J.K.

Faleński, FELICJAN MEDARD, pseud. FELICJAN (*Warsaw 5 VI 1825; †ibid. 11 X 1910), Polish poet, playwright and novelist. He wrote with parnassian care for form, but his plays in particular lack individuality. He was a successful translator.

VERSE: Kwiaty i kolce (1856); Meandry (2 vols, 1892–98).—PLAYS: Utwory dramatyczne (3 vols, 1896–99).

A. Kraushar, 'Ze wspomnień o F. F.', in Echa przeszłości (1917); W. Przecławski, F. M. F. Zywot i dzieła (1922). S.S.

Falstaff Fakir: see WALLENGREN, A.

Falster, CHRISTIAN (*Branderslev 1 I 1690; ∞1717 Margrethe Baggesen; †Ribe 24 X 1752), Danish essayist and satirist. He was a distinguished classical scholar, headmaster of Ribe grammar school, and wrote a number of philological works in Latin. As an essayist he is a conservative counterpart to his contemporary Ludvig Holberg.

Disse Tiders onde Optugtelse (1720); Daarers alamodiske Leveregler (1721); Den daarlige udenlandske Rejse (1721); Den utidige Rangsyge (1722); Amoenitates philologicæ (3 vols, 1729–32), extracts in Eng. tr. A Scholar's Creed (1918), Danish tr. Lærdom's Lystgaard (3 vols, 1919–20); Verden som et Dolhus (1730); Den latinske Skriverstue (1742).

H. Hansen, De vita et rebus C. Falsteri commentariolus (1769); C. Bruun, Falsteriana (1869). E.B.

Fan CHʻÊNG-TA (□Wu-chün 1126; †1193), Chinese poet and scholar, had a distinguished official career. At court and in the provinces he worked for administrative improvements and, in particular, just regulations for the services required of the people. In 1164 he was sent on a difficult embassy to the Chin (Tatar) emperor of North China. Later, as military governor of Szechwan, he succeeded in checking the incursions of the Tʻu-fan (Tibetan) tribes. He was a leading member of the 'Kiangsi' school of pastoral poets. Besides his poetry he left a number of journals, one of the earliest local histories and a work on chrysanthemums.

VERSE: Ssŭ-shih tʻien-yüan tsa-hsing (The Golden Year of Fan Cheng-ta, tr. G. Bullett, 1946).—COLLECTED VERSE: Shih-hu chi.—JOURNALS: Lan-pʻei lu (wr. 1164); Tsʻan-luan lu (wr. 1172); Wu-chʻuan lu (wr. 1177).—LOCAL HISTORY AND MISCELLANEOUS: Wu-chün chih; Kuei-hai yü-hêng chih; Fan-tsun chiu-pu. A.R.D.

Fan CHUNG-YEN (□Wu-hsien 989; †Hsü-chou 20 VI 1052), Chinese scholar and poet, was among the most prominent political figures of the first half of the 11th century. By 1035 he had become chief magistrate of the capital, Kʻai-fêng. In the next year, however, he was banished to Jao-chou. His part in the conclusion of peace with the Hsi-hsia (north-west China) brought him back to high office and he became grand councillor (1043). With Fu Pi he submitted a ten-point reform programme which aroused great opposition. Like his friend, Ou-yang Hsiu, he believed in the direct application of the teaching of the Confucian classics to contemporary politics. He also wrote much poetry, including some fine tzʻŭ-songs.

Fan Wên-chêng kung chi (collected works). A.R.D.

Fándli, JURO (*Častá 22 III 1750; †Ompitál 1811), Slovak author of sermons and practical treatises. A follower of Bernolák, he was among the first to use Slovak for works of a utilitarian character (treatises on agricultural economy).

Pil'ní domajší a pol'ní hospodár (5 vols, 1792–1800).—J. Kotvan, J. F. (1946). R.A.

Fang HSIAO-JU (*Ning-hai 1357; †Nanking 1402), Chinese scholar. Fang was the principal adviser of emperor Hui whose tutor, as heir-apparent, he had been. He gained a martyr's fame when he was executed rather than serve the usurper, Yung-lo. An adherent of Chu Hsi, his writings are mainly on political and ethical subjects. He ranks among the finest prose stylists of the 14th century.

Fang Chêng-hsüeh chi (collected works); selected trs in H. A. Giles, Gems of Chinese Literature (2nd ed. 1923) and G. Margouliès, Anthologie Raisonnée de la Littérature Chinoise (1948). A.R.D.

Fang PAO (*Nanking 25 V 1668; †ibid 29 IX 1749), Chinese essayist. Though Fang's essays possessed no outstanding merit, his influence became great, when Yao Nai acclaimed him as the founder of the 'Tʻung-chʻêng' prose school. He illustrated his stylistic principles by his anthology, Ku-wên yüeh-hsüan (compiled 1733).

Wang-hsi hsien-shêng wên-chi (1746, supplemented 1851, 1852).

A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Chʻing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Fanshawe, SIR RICHARD (*Ware Park VI 1608; ∞Wolvercote 18 V 1644 Anne Harrison; †Siete Chimineos 26 VI 1666), English diplomat, renowned for his translations, who became secretary (1635) and chargé d'affaires (1638) at the Madrid embassy. Secretary to prince Charles during the civil war, Fanshawe was in the West Country, the Scilly Islands and Normandy (1645–47) and went abroad again in 1648. Accompanying the prince at Worcester (1656), he was taken prisoner. In Paris in 1659, he was in Charles's ship at the restoration and later became ambassador to Madrid. Fanshawe's verse is readable, capturing the spirit of his originals.

Translations (Plays): Il Pastor Fido, The faithfull Shepherd (1658); La Fida Pastora (i.e. Fletcher's Faithful Sheperdess, 1658).—Verse: Selected Parts of Horace, etc. (1652); The Lusiad (1655); The Fourth Book of Vergil's Aeneid, ed. A. L. Irvine (1929). B.L.J.

Fantoni, Giovanni, Conte (*Fivizzano (Lunigiana) 28 I 1755; †ibid. 1 XI 1807), Italian poet. 'Labindo' in Arcadia; the 'Etruscan Horace'; a soldier of restless republican sentiments; professor of rhetoric, Pisa (1800); president of the academy, Carrara (1807); a precursor of Carducci. Fantoni wrote fashionable occasional verse and 3 books of sonorous Odi (1784–1806) in which he strove, while maintaining rhyme, to imitate the classical prosody of Horace.

Poesie, ed. Lazzeri (1913).

G. Sforza, 'Contributo alla vita di G. F.', in Giorn. stor. e lett. d. Liguria, 7–8 (1906–07); G. Natali, Il Settecento (1936, with biblio.). M.W.

Faqāni, Baba (*Shiraz; †Mashhad 1519), Persian poet. His patron was sultan Ya'qub, the prince of White Sheep Turkmans, but Faqāni finally abandoned court life and passed the rest of his days in retirement. He developed a new style, which later found imitators especially in India and Turkey.

Divan-i Baba Faqāni (Tehran, 1937).

E. J. W. Gibb, Ottoman poetry, 3 (1904). E.Y.

al-Farabi (*Transoxania c. 870; †nr Damascus 950), Arabic philosopher, passed the greater part of his life in Baghdād and Aleppo. He combined a penetrating interpretation of Aristotle, following the neo-platonic school of Alexandria, with a vigorous appreciation of Plato's political theory which he applied to the Moslem problems of his day. He was bent on assigning to philosophy a dominant position in the Islamic world. He was appreciated by Ibn-Sina, and influenced particularly the Spanish-Arabic philosophers who very largely depend on his achievements. He was not unknown to the Schoolmen.

Alfarabius de Platonis philosophia, ed. F. Rosenthal and R. Walzer (1943); Alfarabius de Platonis Legibus, ed. F. Gabrieli (1953).

F. Dieterici, Al-F.s philosophische Abhandlungen (1892) and Al-F., Der Musterstaat (1900); F. Brönnle, Die Staatsleitung von F. (1904); E. Gilson, 'Les sources Gréco-Arabes de l'Augustinisme Avicennisant', in Arch. d'hist. doctrinale et litt. du moyen-âge, 4 (1929; on Al-F.'s De intellectu); I. Madkour, La place d'Al-F. dans l'école philosophique musulmane (1934); Jaussen-Karam-Chlala, Al-F., Idées des habitants de la cité vertueuse (1949). R.R.W.

Faraday, Michael (*Newington Butts, Surrey 22 IX 1791; ∞1821 Sarah Barnard; †Hampton Court 25 VIII 1867), English physicist. Faraday began as a blacksmith's apprentice, became Davy's assistant and made important discoveries in the fields of electro-chemistry and electricity.

Experimental Researches in Electricity (3 vols, 1839–55; repr. from Phil. Trans., 121–45, 1831–55); The Chemical History of a Candle (1861).

H. Bence-Jones, The Life and Letters of F. (1870); S. P. Thompson, M. F.: His Life and Work (1898); F. N. Appleyard, Tribute to M. F. (1931). B.H.

al-Farazdaq (fl. 7th–8th century), Arabic poet, and one of the greatest of the Umayyad period, continuing the spirit of pre-Islamic poetry. He and his rival Jarir engaged for many years in a 'public scolding-match'.

Divan de Férazdak, ed. R. Boucher (1870; incomplete). S.M.S.

Faria e Sousa, Manuel (*Pombeiro 19 III 1590; †Madrid 13 VI 1649), Portuguese poet, historian and critic. His histories, written like most of his works in Spanish, are uncritical but helped to spread knowledge of Portugal's discoveries and conquests in Europe. He was a devoted scholar of the works of Camões, though himself undistinguished as a poet.

Verse: Fuente de Aganipe y rimas varias (7 pts, 1624–27).—History: Epítome de las historias portuguesas (1628; Eng. tr. J. Stevens, 1698); Asia portuguesa (3 vols, 1666–75; The Portuguese Asia, tr. J. Stevens, 3 vols, 1694–95); Europa portuguesa (3 vols, 1678–80); Africa portuguesa (1681). T.P.W.

Farley, or Farlie, Robert (fl. 1638), Scottish poet and moralist. Wrote moral emblems in English and Latin verse. They are of a mediocre character, but the illustrations are interesting.

Lychnocausia (1638; repr. 1860). J.J.Y.L.

Farnwald, pseud. of Strubberg, F. A.

Farquhar, George (*Derry 1677?; ∞1703? London? Margaret Pernell; †London 29 IV 1707), Anglo-Irish actor and dramatist, who, tradition says, carried colours at the battle of the Boyne (1690). From acting in Dublin (1696) he came to London (1697), but after accidentally wounding a fellow-actor in The Indian Emperor he renounced the profession. The success of his plays did not rescue him from poverty, and he was given a commission in the Grenadiers (1704); his experiences recruiting at Lichfield and Shrewsbury inspired his Recruiting Officer (1706). Selling his commission the same year, he passed the rest of his life in distress. Farquhar's comedies outshine his Barcellona and his lively but not sustained essays and prefaces. He excels in drawing contemporary life and in dialogue. Translated into French and German he influenced Lessing. B.L.J.

Love and a Bottle (1699); A Constant Couple (1699); Sir Henry Wildair (1701); The Inconstant (1702); The Twin Rivals (1702); The Recruiting Officer (1706); The Beaux Stratagem (1707); (with Motteux) The Stage Coach (1704).—The Complete Works, ed. C. Stonehill (2 vols, 1930).

W. Hazlitt, English comic writers (1819); D. Schmid, G. F. (1904); H. T. E. Perry, The Comic spirit in Restoration drama (1925); J. R. Sutherland, 'New light on G. F.', in Times Litt. Supp. (6 III 1937); W. Connely, Young G. F. (1949). J.R.B.

Farrar, Frederick William, dean of Canterbury (*Bombay 7 VIII 1831; ∞1860 Lucy Cardew; †Canterbury 22 III 1903), English writer of boys' school tales and of works on philology and theology, including a popular Life of Christ (1874).

Eric, or Little by Little (1858); St Winifred's, or the World of School (1862); Life of St Paul (1879).

R. Farrar, Life (1905). R.M.H.

Farrukhi, Abu'l-Hasan Alī ibn Jūlūq (†1038), Persian poet, was a native of Sīstān and early in his career gained the favour of a local landowner by his musical and poetical abilities. Later, in search of a more generous patron, he journeyed to Transoxania and finally joined the court of the great patron of poets, Sultan Mahmūd-i Qaznavi, at Qazna. Here he found fortune and ranked amongst the most favoured poets of the court. His Divān consists mainly of panegyrics. He is the most popular and widely read poet of the Qaznavid period. His style is distinguished by simplicity of expression, great descriptive power and a youthful freshness of spirit. He has influenced many later Persian poets, especially in recent periods.

Divān-i Farrukhī, ed. A. Abd al-Rasūlī (1932).

H. Ethé, 'Neupersische Litteratur', in Grun. der iran. Phil., II (1896–1904); W. Jackson, Early Persian Poetry (1920). E.Y.

Fastoul, Baude, 13th-century French lyric poet, probably a minstrel. In his only extant work, Congé (1272), inspired by Jean Bodel's poem of the same title, he bids farewell to the world.

A. Guesnon, 'Deux trouvères artésiens, B. F. et J. le Vinier', in Mélanges M. Wilmotte (1910). A.H.D.

Fauchet, Claude (*Paris 3 VII 1530; †Paris 10? 1 1602), French historian, notable in a humanistic age for his competence in medieval political and social history, and for his exact research into medieval writers, particularly the trouvères. He is one of the first French literary historians (see E. Pasquier).

Recueil de l'origine de la langue et poésie françoise (1581), ed. J. G. Espiner-Scott (1939); Les Antiquités gauloises et françoises (1599–1602).

J. G. Espiner-Scott, C. F. (1938). G.B.

Fava or Faba, Guido (c.* 1200; †c. 1250), a teacher of rhetoric at Bologna and author of two compilations of standard specimens or 'formulae' of letters and speeches in the vernacular, La Gemma purpurea (c. 1229) and Parlamenti ed Epistole (c. 1240–45), which have some importance in the history of the origins of Italian prose.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); A. Monteverdi, Testi volgari ital. dei primi tempi (1948).

G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930); A. Schiaffini, Tradizione e poesia nella prosa d'arte ital. (1943). K.F.

Favart, Charles-Simon (*Paris 13 XI 1710; ∞1745 Marie-Justine Duronceray; †Belleville 12 III 1792), French playwright. After writing short farces for the Théâtre de la Foire he became a creator of the opéra-comique, a light (often pastoral) comedy interspersed with songs. His wife, an excellent actress, probably collaborated with him.

La Chercheuse d'esprit (1741); Bastien et Bastienne (1753); Ninette à la cour (1755); Annette et Lubin (1762); Les Moissonneurs (1768).—Œuvres, ed. L. Gozlan (1853).

A. Font, F. et l'opéra-comique (1894); A. Pougin, Madame F. (1912). G.B.

Favetti, Carlo (*Gorizia 1819; †ibid. 1892), Ræto-Romansch–Friulian poet.

He studied law in Vienna. Thereafter in what was Austrian Friuli he became an active spokesman of Italian nationalist aspirations and had to flee to Italy; he spent the remainder of his life in Milan and Venice. The product of his banishment and patriotism was a series of moving poems inspired by his native land.

Rime e prose in vernacolo goriziano (1893). R.R.B.

Fawcett, Henry (*Salisbury 26 VIII 1833; ∞1867 Millicent Garrett; †Cambridge 6 XI 1884), English economist and radical. Fawcett advocated poor-law and educational reform and as postmaster-general introduced many practical innovations.

A Manual of Political Economy (1863); Pauperism: its Causes and Remedies (1871); Aids to Thrift (1886; with J. Cardin).
L. Stephen, The Life of H. F. (1885). B.H.

Fawkes, Francis (*Warmsworth c. IV 1720; †Hayes 26 VIII 1777), English poet and divine. Fawkes translated minor Greek verse and the Latin poems of Christopher Smart.

Bramham Park, a Poem (1745); Original Poems and Translations (1761); Partridge Shooting, an Eclogue (1767).
I. A. Williams, Byeways Round Helicon (1921); R. Aldington, 'F.'s "Brown Jug"', in Times Litt. Supp., 8 III 1923, and subsequent corresp. B.H.

Fáy, András (*Kohány 30 V 1786; ∞1832 Zsuzsanna Sziráky; †Pest 26 VII 1864), Hungarian novelist and essayist. Known chiefly for his social novel A Bélteky-ház (2 vols, 1832), the first of its kind in Hungary, Fáy took an active part in the reform movement under Széchenyi. He also collected fables, wrote on banking and education, and helped to establish the national theatre.

F. A. eredeti meséi es aforizmái (1820; Originelle Fabeln u. Aphorismen, Ger. tr. L. Petz, 1825).—F. A. szépirodalmi összes munkái (collected works; 8 vols, 1843–44).
F. Badics, F. A. életrajza (1890). G.F.C.

Fayzi, Abu'l Fayz ibn Mubārak-Shāh (*Agra 1547; †ibid. 5 X 1595), Persian poet of India. Although greatly honoured by Akbar Shah (1556–1605) he was suspected of heresy by the orthodox Moslems. His poetry is somewhat diffuse and lacks vividness.

Divan (Delhi, 1894); Nal-u-Daman (Calcutta, 1831).—Tr. from Sanskrit Bhagavad gītā Fārsi (Allahabad, 1895, Benares, 1905–19); Mahābhārata Fārsi (Lucknow, 1897–1900).
G. Ouseley, Biographical Notices of Persian Poets (1846); Shibli Nu'mani, Shi'r al-Ajam, III (1924); M. A. Ghani, History of Persian Language and Literature at the Mughal Court, III (Allahabad, 1930). E.Y.

Fazio, Bartolomeo (*Spezia 1400; †Naples 1457), Italian humanist and historian, pupil of Guarino da Verona. His De origine belli inter Gallos et Britannos historia investigates the cause of wars between France and England.

De bello Veneto cum Genuensibus gesto; De rebus ab Alphonso primo Neapolitanorum rege (1455); De viris illustribus liber (wr. 1456; pub. 1745; with biog.).
F. Gabotto, in Atti di Società ligure di storia patria, 24 (1892). B.R.

Feijoó y Montenegro, Benito (* Casdemiro, Orense 1676; †Oviedo 1764), Spanish writer. He entered the Benedictine order very young and held various chairs at Oviedo university. From his cell he maintained a vast correspondence with the outside world and kept in touch with new European ideas and inventions. Through his writing, begun when he was almost 50, he exercised an influence on the revival of Spanish thought, education and life unsurpassed by any single person of his time or since. Considered the first real Spanish essayist, his Teatro crítico contains over a hundred essays on the most varied subjects. Ironic, at times witty, always persuasive and factual, Feijoó set out to fight the ignorance and superstition prevailing in Spain. He continued the task in his Cartas. A rationalist who did not lose his faith, this Benedictine was the great champion of encyclopaedism. His beneficial influence was enhanced by the lengthy and stormy polemics which arose over his writings.

Teatro crítico y universal (8 vols, 1726–39); Cartas eruditas y curiosas (5 vols, 1742–60). Sel. essays, ed. A. Millares Carlo, in Clás. cast. (3 vols, 1941).—Eng. tr.: The honour and advantage of agriculture (Dublin, 1764); An essay of the learning, genius, and abilities of the fair sex (London, 1774); Essays or discourses, tr. John Brett (London, 1777; 1780); Rules for preserving health (London, 1800).
G. Delpy, F., et l'Esprit européen (1936); G. Marañón, Las ideas biológicas del Padre F. (1934); M. Morayta, El Padre F. y sus obras (1913). R.M.N.

Feirberg, Mordechai Zeeb (*Novygrad-Volhynsk 20 IX 1874; †ibid. 2 III 1899), Hebrew short-story writer. The son of a fanatical Ḥassid, Feirberg's output, though small, is counted among the classics of Hebrew literature. His fame rests largely on le-On ('Whither?'). S.A.

Feitama, Sybrand (*Amsterdam 10 XII 1694; †13 VI 1758), Dutch translator and playwright in all too smooth verse.

Telemachus (1733, after Fénelon); Hendrik de Groote (1743, after Voltaire); Fabricius (1720); Tooneelpoëzij (2 vols, 1735); Nagelaten dichtwerken (1764).

M. J. Minderhout, La Henriade dans la littérature hollandaise (1927). J.W.W.

Feitelson, Menacḥem Mendel (*nr Melitopol 1 IX 1870; †Yekaterinoslav 18 V 1912), Hebrew critic and scholar. He published his first book, Mechkarim Betoldot Israel, at the age of 16. A man of culture and wide scholarship, he was troubled by his deformed, almost dwarfish physique, which finally drove him to suicide.

Ketabim, ed. F. Liachover (Warsaw, 1914). S.A.

Feith, Rhijnvis (*Zwolle 7 II 1753; ∞1792 Ockje Groeneveldt; †ibid. 8 II 1824), Dutch poet and prose writer; from 1787 burgomaster of Zwolle. His remarkable sentimental love stories (influenced by Werther, Baculard d'Arnaud and Miller) present the melancholy sentiment as the one thing of importance in this world: a presentiment of the bliss of the hereafter. Among his numerous lyrics some are exceptionally beautiful; he was one of the first to seek inspiration in individual feeling.

Novels: Julia (1783); Fanny (1783); Ferdinand en Constantia (1785).—Poetry: Vergankelijkheid van het heelal etc. (1777); Lofdichten op de Ruyter (1785); Het Graf (1792); Oden en gedichten (5 vols, 1796–1814); De Ouderdom (1802).—Prose: Brieven over verschillende onderwerpen (6 vols, 1784); Dagboek mijner goede werken (1785); Bijdragen (with J. Kantelaar, 3 vols, 1793–96).—Plays: Thirsa (1784); Lady Johanna Gray (1791); Ines de Castro (1793); C. Mucius Cordus (1795).—Dicht- en Prozaïsche werken (14 vols, 1824–25).

Gedenkzuil voor R. F. (1825); C. Busken Huet, 'Feith en Kinker', in Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, 24; J. Koopmans, 'R. F.', in De Beweging, 4 (1908); H. G. ten Bruggencate, R. F. (1911); A. Zijderveld, De Romance-poëzie in Noord-Nederl. (1915); De Inklaar, F.-Th. de Baculard d'Arnaud (1925); A. van Duinkerken, in Achter de Vuurlijn (1930). J.W.W.

Feliński, Alojzy (*Łuck 1771; †Krzemieniec 23 II 1820), Polish poet and playwright. His Barbara Radziwiłłówna is the best Polish pseudo-classical tragedy and he wrote, in 1816, after the British national anthem, his great hymn later known as Boże, cos Polskę.

Plays: Barbara Radziwiłłówna (1820; Fr. tr. A. Denis, 1823).—Dzieła (2 vols, 1840).

K. Kantecki, 'A. F.', in Dwaj Krzemieńczanie (2 vols, 1879); A. Bar, 'A. F.', in Pol. Słow. Biogr., VI (1948). S.S.

Feliú y Codina, José (*Barcelona 11 VI 1847; †Madrid 2 V 1897), Spanish playwright. He applied the neo-romantic technique of his model Echegaray to a peculiar form of rural, picturesque and regional naturalism. His most famous play is La Dolores (1892) a good, though over-passioned, portrait of a woman set against an Aragonese background. It has been used as a libretto for a zarzuela (q.v.) with music by Breton.

El buen callar (1891); Un lihro viejo (1891); Miel de la Alcarria (1893); María del Carmen (1896); Boca de Fraile (1897).

F. M. Tubino, Historia del renacimiento literario de Cataluña, Valencia y Baleares (1877); Elías de Molíns, Diccionario de escritores y artistas catalanes (1886). R.M.N.

Fellltham, Owen (*1602?; †London 1668), English essayist and poet whose father had property in Suffolk. Felltham visited the Low Countries (before 1627?), was friendly with the wits and served the earl of Thomond (before 1641).

Verse: Lusoria, or Occasional Pieces (appended to Resolves, 1661).—Prose: Resolves (before 1623; 1628, etc.; ed. O. Smeaton, 1904); A Brief Character of the Low Countries (pirated ed. 1648, 1652; authorized ed. 1652, etc.). B.L.J.

Feltre, Vittorino da: see Rambaldoni.

Fénelon, François de Salignac de La Mothe (*Fénelon, Périgord 6 VIII 1651; †Cambrai 7 I 1715), French theologian and writer. After fulfilling several important ecclesiastical missions, Fénelon wrote his first pedagogic work, the Traité de l'éducation des filles (1687), became friendly with Mme de Maintenon and was made tutor (1689–95) to the duc de Bourgogne, a potential heir to the throne. To instruct his pupil agreeably in Greek literature, he wrote his novel Télémaque, an imaginative continuation of Book IV of the Odyssey, which contained liberal ideas and implied criticism of Louis XIV. Published against his wishes in 1699, Télémaque accentuated the disfavour into which he had meanwhile fallen through defending the passively mystic doctrine of quietism in his Explication des maximes des saints sur la vie intérieure (1697; crit. ed. A. Chérel, 1911). He finished his days 'in exile' at Cambrai, of which he had been made archbishop in 1695.

Télémaque, ed A. Cahen (2 vols, 1920);—Œuvres complètes, ed. Gosselin and Caron (34 vols, 1820–30).

E. K. Sanders, F., his friends and enemies (1901); J. Lemaître, F. (1910); H. Bremond, Apologie pour F. (1911); E. Carcassonne, F. (1946). G.B.

Fenestella (*52 B.C. ?; †A.D. 19 ?), Roman historian, wrote among other works a history of Rome in at least 22 books, going down at least to 57 B.C. His authority was highly esteemed in antiquity but his work has perished.

H. Peter, Hist. Rom. Rel., 2 (1906).

L. Mercklin, De F. historico et poeta (1844); J. Poeth, De F. historiarum scriptore et carminum (1849); a different dating by F. Münzer, Beiträge zur Quellenkritik . . . des Plinius (1897). J.A.W.

Fêng MÊNG-LUNG (□Wu-hsien 1574 ?; †1645 ?), Chinese writer. Fêng was for long known only as a minor Confucian scholar; his editorship of colloquial fiction and of drama was performed under the pseudonym of Mo-han chai ('Ink-mad studio'). It is known that, of the plays he published, two were original works. In his collections of excellent stories also, the extent of his 'editing' appears to vary: some are probably his own work. The novels, Lieh-kuo chih and P'ing-yao chuan, were extensively rewritten by him. The famous Chin-ku ch'i-kuan anthology (1644) reproduced 29 stories from his collections.

STORY-COLLECTIONS: Ku-chin hsiao-shuo (pr. between 1621 and 1624; part with add. repr. shortly after as Yü-shih ming yen); Ching-shih t'ung-yen (1624; one story, Fan-Hy-Cheu tr. G. T. Staunton, 1815); Hsing-shih hêng-yen (1627; Four Cautionary Tales, tr. H. Acton and Lee Yi-hsieh, limited ed. 1941, repr. 1947).—NOVEL RE-EDITIONS: Tung-Chou lieh-kuo chih (partially tr. Ling Tsiu-sen, 'Die Phoenixmelodie', in Sinica V, 1930; see H. Cordier, Bibliotheca Sinica, 1904–07 for list of other partial trs); P'ing-yao chuan (c. 1620).—PLAYS: Mo-han chai ting-pên.

A. Waley, 'Notes on the History of Chinese Popular Literature', in T'oung Pao, 28 (1931); J. Průšek, 'Popular Novels in the Collection of Ch'ien Tseng', in Archiv Orientální, 10 (1938), 'Researches into the Beginnings of the Chinese Popular Novel', in Archiv Orientální, 11 (1939). A.R.D.

Fêng TAO (□Ching-ch'êng 882; †954), Chinese official. Fêng is the traditional inventor of block-printing; while this is in no way true, his printing of the Nine (Confucian) Classics (932–53) initiated the great development of that art during the Sung dynasty. His object was not publication but to establish official texts. He remained prime minister under seven emperors of four short-lived dynasties and thus ensured the work's completion.

T. F. Carter, The Invention of Printing in China and its Spread Westward (1925). A.R.D.

Fenton, ELIJAH (*Shelton 20 V 1683; †Easthampstead VIII 1730), English verse-writer and man of letters who wrote books 1, 4, 19 and 20 of Pope's Odyssey in perfect imitation of Pope's versification.

Poems on Several Occasions (1717); Mariamne, a Tragedy (with Southern; 1723).

S. Johnson, Lives of the Poets (1781). R.M.H.

Ferguson, ADAM (*Logierait 20 VI 1723; ∞1766 Katherine Black; †St Andrews 22 II 1816), Scottish philosopher and historian. He succeeded Hume as librarian of the Advocates' Library (1757) and was professor of natural philosophy (1759–64) and of moral philosophy (1764–85) at Edinburgh. His History was for long a standard work.

Essay on the History of Civil Society (1767); The History of the Progress and Termination of the Roman Republic (1783); Principles of Moral and Political Science (1792).

J. Small, A. F. (1864); H. Huth, Soziale und individualistische Auffassung . . . bei Adam Smith und A. F. (1907). J.K.

Ferguson, SIR SAMUEL (*Belfast 10 III 1810; ∞1848 Mary Catherine Guinness; †Howth, Co. Dublin 9 VIII 1886), Irish poet and antiquarian; knighted 1878. He used the material of early Irish literature in his epic poetry; also wrote notable translations from, and versions of, Irish poems. A precursor of the Irish literary revival, his poetry has a good general level but few great heights.

Lays of the Western Gael (1862); Congal (1872); Poems (1880).—F.'s Poems, ed. E. Boyd (1916). R.McH.

Fergusson, ROBERT (*Edinburgh 5 IX 1750; †ibid. 16 X 1774), Scottish poet. Educated at St Andrews University; employed as a clerk. Essentially a town poet, familiar with the conviviality and bustle of Edinburgh, Fergusson describes and satirizes the society in which he moved. He revived the Scots poetic tradition and passed on much, in spirit and in the vigorous use of the vernacular, to Burns. He died wretchedly in a bedlam.

Poetical contributions to Ruddiman's Weekly Magazine and Edinburgh Amusement (1771–72); Poems (1779, 1782); Poems, ed. B. Dickins (1925); Scots Poems, ed. A. Law (1947).

A. B. Grosart, R. F. (1898). J.K.

Ferienčík, Mikuláš Štefan (*30 VII 1825; †3 III 1881), Slovak novelist. One of the first authors to write novels in Slovak on contemporary social themes, he shows in his later work the influence of the Russian realists.

Irma (1860); Jedl'ovský učitel' (1862); Šefranik (1880). R.A.

Ferland, Jean Baptiste Antoine (*Montreal 25 XII 1805; †Quebec 11 I 1865), French-Canadian historian. Ordained priest in 1828, he became professor of philosophy in Nicolet College in 1841, and in 1855 professor of Canadian history at Laval University, Quebec. His great work on the history of Canada has never enjoyed so wide a popularity as that of his predecessor Garneau, but he excelled him in research and in understanding of the conditions of the colony before it came into British hands. The two historians were chiefly responsible for the strongly Quebec-nationalist trend of French literature in Canada during the subsequent period.

Cours d'Histoire du Canada (2 vols, 1861–65). H. d'Arles, Nos Historiens (1921). B.K.S.

Fernán Caballero : see Caballero.

Fernández, Lucas (*Salamanca 1474?; †ibid. 1542), Spanish dramatist. He was choir-master, priest and professor of music at Salamanca. His 6 plays (1514) resemble Encina's early works; three are profane, three religious. The Auto de la pasión is particularly moving.

Farsas y églogas, ed. M. Cañete (1868). E.M.W.

Fernandez de Avellaneda: see Avellaneda.

Fernández de Lizardi, José Joaquín, (*Mexico City 15 XI 1776; †1827), also known as El Pensador Mexicano, a pseudonym adopted from the title of a journal he founded in 1812. Chiefly remembered for his picaresque novel (so long after the peninsular vogue for the picaresque, except for Gil Blas, as to be almost a pastiche) El Periquillo Sarniento (1816), which gives a vivid but highly satirical picture of life in 18th-century Mexico. He was a firm believer in the reforming ideas current in his day and supported the movement for independence.

Verse: Fábulas (1817); Noches tristes (1818). —Prose: La Quijotita y su prima (1819); D. Catrín de la Fachenda (1832).
S. J. Rea, Life and Works (1931). E.Sa.

Fernández de Moratín, Leandro (*Madrid 1760; †Paris 1828), Spanish dramatist, son of Nicolás. He started life as a goldsmith's apprentice; protected by Jovellanos, he was for two years secretary of the embassy in Paris; as Godoy's protégé he travelled extensively. He collaborated with the Napoleonic invaders and was 'purified' in 1814 but, fearing the resurrected Inquisition, went into permanent exile. A man of refined, complex character, very shy, often cowardly, he wrote in excellent prose a damaging satire against bad writers (Derrota de los Pedantes, 1789) and a brilliant play (La Comedia Nueva, 1792), making fun of his fellow dramatists. With only four other original plays he stands far above them all. His other masterpiece, El sí de las niñas (1805), deals in an unsentimental way with the recurrent Moratín themes of youth versus maturity, and marriage by parental imposition. His plays are full of psychological interest. With their subtle, quick action, Moratín alone succeeded in writing good Spanish comedies in the French manner, but in some of them the coming romanticism is already felt. Molière was his model, and he translated superbly L'Ecole des maris and Le Médecin malgré lui. His critical notes to his good translation of Hamlet are also very interesting. As a poet he is inferior to his father.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 2; Teatro, ed. R. Morcuende, in Clás. Cast. (1924).—'The Baron', tr. F. Holcroft, in Theatr. Rev., 2 (1805); 'Selections', tr. J. Kennedy, in Modern Poets and Poetry of Spain (1852); 'Ode: The Day at Home', tr. T. Walsh, in Hisp. Anth. (1920); 'From an ode to Pedro Romero' and extracts from El viejo y la niña, tr. in H. W. Longfellow, Poets and Poetry of Europe (1845 and 1888); extracts from Comedia Nueva, Mogigata and El viejo y la niña, in Foreign Rev., 2 (1828) and in Foreign Quart. Rev., 2 (1828).
J. Pérez de Guzmán, 'La primera representación de El sí de las niñas', in Esp. Mod. (1902); J. Ortega y Rubio, 'Don L. F. de M.', in Rev. Contemp., 79 (1904); J. Sarrailh, 'Note sur le Café de M.', in Bull. Hisp., 36 (1934). R.M.N.

Fernández de Moratín, Nicolás (*Madrid 1737; ∞Isidora Cabo Conde; †ibid. 1780), Spanish poet and dramatist. He studied law at Valladolid. With Desengaños al teatro español (1763) he took a leading part in the great polemic around the Spanish theatre and contributed to the banning (1767) of the autos sacramentales (q.v.). His trilogy—Lucrecia (1763), Hermesinda (1777, the only one performed), Guzmán el Bueno (1777)—and his comedy La Petimetra (1762) are weak attempts at introducing the French rules into the Spanish stage. But in spite of Moratín's admiration for French models he was by temperament essentially Spanish. It is as a poet and when dealing with national themes in the Spanish style that he wrote his masterpieces Fiesta de toros en Madrid and Oda a Pedro Romero.

Poesías y comedias, ed. L. T. de Muhí, in Bibl. Autores Esp., 2; Poesías inéditas, ed. R. Foulché-Delbosc (1892).—'Apology for an Error', tr. E. E. Sherman, in Translations from Hispanic Poets (1938).

A. Fernández-Guerra, 'Lección poética sobre las célebres quintillas de D. N. F. de M.', in Rev. Hispanoamer. (1882); J. M. Cossío, 'La fiesta de toros en Madrid' and 'Oda a Pedro Romero', in Bol. M. Pelayo, 8 (1925). R.M.N.

Fernández de Velasco y Pimentel, BERNARDINO, DUQUE DE FRÍAS (*Madrid 1783; ∞Mariana de Silva, ∞María de la Piedad Roca de Togores; †ibid. 1851), Spanish poet. He fought against Napoleon, was persecuted by Ferdinand VII as a liberal, but was later ambassador in London and Paris. His poetry is of a neo-classical type. He wrote some good elegies (e.g. El Llanto conyugal), elegiac sonnets and a fine lament (Llanto del proscrito) written in exile.

Obras poéticas (1857). R.M.N.

Fernández y González, MANUEL (*Seville 1821; ∞Manuela Muñoz de Padilla; †Madrid 1888), Spanish novelist. Bohemian life, picturesque vanity and amazing fecundity gave him temporary renown. He wrote, or dictated, over 300 novels (some 500 volumes). A powerful fantasy and wealth of expression produced some good pages in a few books, but the bulk of his historico-legendary novels is very heavy going.

Men Rodríguez de Sanabria (1853); Historia de un murciélago (1857); El Cocinero de Su Majestad (1857); Los siete infantes de Lara (1853); Enrique IV (el impotente) o memorias de una reina (1854); Lucrecia Borgia (1864). R.M.N.

Ferrandes de Jerena, GARCÍA (late 14th century), Spanish poet. He is said to have abandoned Christian Spain and turned Moslem. His work shows the influence of the Galician-Portuguese Cancioneiros, both in language and style. His poems, relatively artless and simple, are in the Cancionero de Baena. (See BAENA, JUAN ALFONSO DE.) E.M.W.

Ferrara, IL CIECO DI: see BELLO, FRANCESCO.

Ferrari, GIUSEPPE (*Milan 7 III 1811; †Rome 2 VII 1876), Italian historian and political theorist. Believing Italian political unification unattainable, he supported republican federalism. His most important work, first published in French, is Storia delle Rivoluzioni d'Italia (Paris, 4 vols, 1856–58).

Lo spirito di G. D. Romagnosi (1835); Lo spirito di G. B. Vico (1835); Vico et l'Italie (Paris, 1839); Principi e limiti della filosofia della storia (1843); Filosofia della rivoluzione (Capolago, 1851); La federazione repubblicana (London, but really Capolago, 1851); Corso sugli scrittori politici italiani (1862; 2nd ed. 1929); Teoria dei periodi politici (1874).

A. Ferrari, G. F. (1914); A. Momigliano, 'Il primo periodo della politica militante di G. F.', in Nuova Antologia (1921); A. Monti, G. F. e la politica interna della Destra (1925). B.R.

Ferreira, ANTÓNIO (*Lisbon 1528; ∞Maria Pimentel; †ibid. 1569), Portuguese poet and playwright. He studied at Coimbra under the humanist Diogo de Teive, later becoming a magistrate and a respected figure at the Portuguese court. Ferreira was a devoted follower of Sá de Miranda, who had introduced into Portugal the poetic genres of the Italian Renaissance. Disdaining the traditional peninsular metres Ferreira helped to acclimatize the new poetic style. A man of sound humanistic culture he exercised in Portugal an influence comparable with that of Du Bellay in France; he opposed the use of Spanish (at the time a current practice) by Portuguese poets, and urged the study and imitation of the writers of antiquity.

Though the general level of his lyrical poems is not very high, Ferreira excels in the verse epistle. His masterpiece is the tragedy Castro, written around 1558. This work, dealing with the fatal love of the later Pedro I of Portugal and Inês de Castro, is set in a classical mould. The psychological conflicts that emerge, notably that in the character of Pedro's father, king Afonso, are handled in a masterly fashion. A chorus provides a lyrical commentary on the action. Ferreira also left two comedies: Bristo and O Cioso, both written in prose.

Tragédia . . . de D. Inês de Castro (1587), ed. J. Mendes dos Remédios (1915), Eng. tr. C. Cockburne (1697); Comédias famosas portuguesas dos doctores F. de Sá de Miranda e A. F. (1622; contains Bristo and O Cioso); Poemas lusitanos, ed. M. Leite Ferreira (1598), ed. Marques Braga (2 vols, 1939–40).—Obras completas (2 vols, Paris, 1865).

T. Braga, 'O doutor A. F.', in História dos quinhentistas (1871); J. de Castilho, A. F., poeta quinhentista (study and anthology, 3 vols, 1875); J. P. W. Crawford, 'The influence of Seneca's tragedies on F.'s "Castro" and Bermúdez' "Nise Lastimosa"', in Mod. Philol., 12 (1914). T.P.W.

Ferrer del Río, Antonio (*Madrid 1814; †El Molar, Madrid 1872), Spanish critic. In his Galería de la literatura española (1846) he draws literary profiles of his contemporaries and gives an anthology of their works. Though prepared in haste it is not without interest. Among his other works he left a valuable Historia del reinado de Carlos III (4 vols, 1856) and a study-preface to the 1866 edition of La Araucana. R.M.N.

Ferrers, George (*St Albans 1500?; ∞25 III 1541 Elizabeth Bourchier, ∞1545/6 Jane 'Southrote', ∞1569 Margaret Prestone; †Flamstead? I 1578/9), English politician, poet and writer of masques, who served Henry VIII's children in these capacities. Ferrers wrote part of The Mirror for Magistrates (1559). Once 'master of the king's pastimes', he arranged pageants and masques, sharing in the entertainment at Kenilworth (1575). Puttenham and Meres mistakenly credited his verse to Edward Ferrers (†1564).

The Mirror for Magistrates (1559), ed. L. B. Campbell (1938). B.L.J.

Ferrier, Susan Edmonstone (*Edinburgh 7 IX 1782; †ibid. 5 XI 1854), Scottish novelist. Her tales, which were published anonymously and by some attributed to her friend Scott, are attractive representations of Scottish society, marked by close observation and lively comedy.

Marriage (1818); The Inheritance (1824); Destiny, or the Chief's Daughter (1831).—Works (6 vols, 1882), ed. Lady Margaret Sackville (4 vols, 1928).

Memoir and Correspondence of S. F., ed. J. A. Doyle (1898). J.K.

Festus, Sextus Pompeius (fl. c. A.D. 200), Roman lexicographer, epitomized Verrius Flaccus' De Significatu Verborum. The glossary of Festus survives in one badly mutilated manuscript and in an epitome made by Paulus Diaconus in the 8th century.

W. M. Lindsay, in Glossaria Latina, IV (1930). J.A.W.

Fet (Shenshin), Afanasy Afanasyevich (*near Mtsensk 23 XI 1820; †1892), Russian lyrical poet. His first poems (1840) had no success. In the 1860s he was silenced by the radical critics on account of his indifference to political and social problems. He reappeared some twenty years later in the full power of his talent which was duly appreciated by the symbolists, notably Blok. A landowner, he was endowed with a healthy epicurean love of life which was not impaired even by his interest in Schopenhauer (whom he translated). His best lyrics are about love and nature, expressed in concise, intensely musical and impressionistic verses. In his old age he wrote some exquisite philosophic poems, full of courage with regard to fate and death. He also translated from Latin (Horace) and German (Goethe), and left some interesting memoirs.

Polnoye sobranie stikhotvoreniy (collected verse, 3 vols, 1901–10; 2 vols, 1912; 1936); Moi vospominaniya (2 vols, 1890); N. Y. Stechkin, Pamyati A. A. Feta (1903); L. M. Sukhotin, Fet i Elena Lazich (1933); C. M. Bowra, A Book of Russian Verse (1943).

V. Pokrovsky, A. A. F. (1911); V. Fedina, A. A. F. (1915); D. Darsky, Radost' zemli (1916); V. Zhirmunsky, Kompozitsiya liricheskikh stikhov (1921). J.L.

Feuchtersleben, Ernst von (*Vienna 29 IV 1806; †ibid. 3 IX 1840), Austrian essayist, poet and early psychologist, a friend of Stifter's and Schubert's. His popular philosophical writings, with their quiet good sense, had wide educative influence.

Gedichte (1836); Diätetik der Seele (1838; The Hygiene of the Mind, tr. F. C. Sumner, 1933).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. F. Hebbel (7 vols, 1851–53); Aus Feuchterslebens Briefen 1826–32, ed. A. F. Seligmann (1909).

R. M. Meyer, 'E. v. F.', in Gestalten und Probleme (1905). H.A.P.

Feuillet, Octave (*Saint-Lô 11 VII 1821; †Paris 29 XII 1890), French novelist and dramatist. Feuillet's life was that of a hard-working man of letters. He became a member of the French Academy in 1862 and was appointed librarian at Fontainebleau by the empress Eugénie. His novels enjoyed enormous success with middle-class readers for whom he preached a somewhat conventional form of idealism (Le Roman d'un Jeune Homme Pauvre, 1857) and attacked the moral depravity of the aristocratic circles of his day (Monsieur de Camors, 1867). His plays, though varied and skilfully constructed, depend too largely on psychological tricks.

Novels: La Petite Comtesse (1857); Histoire de Sibylle (1862); Julia de Trécœur (1872).—Plays: La Crise (1848); Dalila (1857); Le Roman d'un Jeune Homme Pauvre (1858).

L. Deries, O. F. (1902); H. Bordeaux, La Jeunesse d'O. F. (1922). M.G.; J.P.R.

Féval, Paul Henri Corentin (*Rennes 28 XI 1817; †Paris 8 III 1887), French novelist. After his first success as a writer of serial adventure novels, Le Club des Phoques (1841), Féval was commissioned to write Les Mystères de Londres (1844), to compete with the popular success of Sue. With Balzac and Dumas père he contributed to the development of the detective novel by introducing into an urban setting the 'pathfinding' methods of Fenimore Cooper's Mohicans.

Les Couteaux d'or (1856); Les Habits noirs (1863).

C. Buet, F. (1883); A. Delaigue, Un homme de lettres, F. (1890); R. Messac, Le 'detective novel' et la pensée scientifique (1929). T.W.

Feydeau, Ernest Aimé (*Paris 16 III 1821; †ibid. 27 X 1873), French novelist. Feydeau's early novels, Fanny (1858) and Daniel (1859), are typical products of the struggle between realism and romanticism in mid-19th-century fiction. His reputation as a realist novelist of genius declined in his own lifetime.

Catherine Overmeire (1860); Sylvie (1861); Monsieur de Saint-Bertrand (1863); Le Mari de la Danseuse (1863); Le Secret du Bonheur (1867); La Comtesse de Chalis (1867).

E. Bouvier, La Bataille Réaliste (1913); R. Dumesnil, Le Réalisme (1936). T.W.

Fichet, Guillaume (c.* 1440; †end 15th century), French rhetorician, rector of the university of Paris from 1467. In 1469 he brought to Paris the printers Gering, Krantz and Friburger who established the first printing press in that city. His Rhetoricorum libri III was the first book to be printed in Paris (1470); his Epistolae appeared in 1471 at the same press.

Jules Phillippe, G. F., sa vie et ses œuvres (1892).

Ficino, Marsilio (*Figline 19 X 1433; †Florence 1 X 1499), Italian philosopher. His translations from Plato were commissioned by Cosimo de' Medici. His villa at Careggi was an influential centre of philosophic discussion. Several of his works attempt to reconcile philosophy with religion; he was accused of heresy in 1489. Among his pupils were Lorenzo il Magnifico, Poliziano and Pico della Mirandola.

Opera (Basle, 1561, incomplete; Paris, 2 vols, 1641); Supplementum ficinianum, ed. P. Kristeller (Florence, 2 vols, 1937); Epistolae familiares (1495).

G. Saitta, La filosofia di M. F. (1923); B. Kieszkowski, Studi sul platonismo del Rinascimento in Italia (1936); G. Anichini, L'umanesimo e il problema della salvezza in M. F. (1937). B.R.

Field, Eugene (*St Louis 2 IX 1850; ∞1873 Julia Comstock; †Chicago 4 XI 1895), American poet and journalist. He attended Williams College, travelled abroad, then created a whimsical column, 'Sharps and Flats', for the Chicago Morning News. A popular poetizer, he wrote in dialect verse.

A Little Book of Western Verse (1889); The Holy Cross and Other Tales (1893).—Sharps and Flats, collected and ed. S. Thompson (2 vols, 1900).

C. H. Dennis, E. F.'s Creative Years (1924). H.L.C.

Field, Nathan (*London X 1587; †ibid. VI ? VII ? VIII ? 1619), English actor-dramatist. His hand is conjectured in plays by Beaumont and Fletcher, Massinger's Fatal Dowry and The Distracted Emperor (anon.). His plays show an understanding of his theatre, its prose and blank verse.

The Plays of N. F., ed. W. Perry (1950).—Feild [sic] the Players Letter to Mr Sutton Preacher att St Mary Overs 1616 (Cal. S. Papers Domestic, James I, 89, No. 105; repr. J. O. Halliwell(-Phillipps) as The Remonstrance of N. F., 1865; and in Illustrations of Shakespeare, I, app. XXIII, 1874). B.L.J.

Fielding, Henry (*nr Glastonbury 22 IV 1707; ∞1734 Charlotte Craddock, ∞1747 Mary Daniel; †Lisbon 8 X 1754) English playwright, magistrate and pamphleteer who, acclimatizing the loosely knit narrative form of Cervantes and Marivaux to his own contemporary England and his own comic humane genius, established the novel form in England with his Joseph Andrews (2 vols, 1742), History of Tom Jones, a Foundling (6 vols, 1749) and Amelia (4 vols, 1752). After traditional education at Eton he served mixed apprenticeship to law and theatre, contributing one brilliant, lovable burlesque, The Tragedy of Tragedies: or, The Life and Death of Tom Thumb the Great (1730), some adaptations of Molière, and a number of farces and comedies. His political satire, Pasquin, hastened the Licensing Act (1735) which barred his way to further success in the theatre. Resuming the study of law he proved from 1748 a conscientious and humane magistrate, expounding social causes of crime and reducing the incidence of violence in London. Meanwhile, in Joseph Andrews, initially a burlesque of Pamela but rapidly outgrowing this purpose, and in Tom Jones had emerged that combination of farcical incident, omnivorous zest for real life, and sense of beauty and dignity of certain simple virtues which marks his 'comic epic poems in prose'. Amelia, lacking this ebullience, shows a more restricted canvas and sadder insight. In 1743 had appeared a masterpiece of irony, Mr Jonathan Wild the Great. His posthumously published Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon (1755) whither he had travelled broken in health, to die, still shows his abounding wit, wisdom and humanity unimpaired.

Plays: Love in Several Masques (1728); The Temple Beau (1730); Rape upon Rape, or the Justice Caught in his own Trap (1730); The Mock Doctor (from Molière, 1732); The Miser (from Molière, 1733).—Pamphlet: Enquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robbers (1751).—Collected Works, ed. A. Murphy (with life, 4 vols, 1762; ed. A. Chalmers, 1806; ed. L. Stephen with biog. essay, 10 vols, 1882; ed. G. Saintsbury with intro., 12 vols, 1893; ed. E. Gosse with intro., 12 vols, 1898–99); Collected Novels (with memoir by Sir Walter Scott, 1821).

W. M. Thackeray, The English Humourists of the 18th century (1835); A. Dobson, F. (1907); G. M. Goddon, F., a Memoir (containing previously unpub. material, and chron. list of works, 1910); W. L. Cross, The History of F. (1918); F. T. Blanchard, F. the Novelist (1926); B. M. Jones, F., Novelist and Magistrate (1933); F. H. Dudden, H. F., his Life, Works and Times (2 vols, 1952). R.M.H.

Fielding, Sarah (*East Stour 8 XI 1710; †Bath 1768), English novelist, sister of Henry Fielding, who contributed a preface to her first novel. Richardson extravagantly praised her knowledge of the human heart.

Adventures of David Simple in search of Faithful Friend (1744); The Governess (1749); David Simple (an additional volume, 1752); The Cry: a Dramatic Fable (with Miss Collier, 1754).
A. Dobson, Fielding (1907). R.M.H.

Figueiredo, Manuel de (*Lisbon 15 VII 1725; †27 VIII 1801), Portuguese playwright. A member of the Arcádia Lusitana, he sought to restore tragedy and comedy on neo-classic lines, writing plays that would be 'morally and dramatically correct'. Though he lacked any dramatic talent he wrote many such plays, no one of which ever seems to have been performed.

Teatro (14 vols, 1804–15).
T. Braga, 'M. de F.', in A baixa comédia (1871). T.P.W.

Figueroa, Francisco de (*Alcalá de Henares, before 1600; †ibid. ? c. 1620), Spanish poet. He served as a soldier in Italy, returned to Spain, married and settled in Alcalá. He was a friend of Cervantes and Antonio Pérez. His poetry is Italianate and elegant, and his technique owed much to Garcilaso. His poems were published posthumously in 1625.

Obras (1926; fac. ed., New York, 1903); Poesías, ed. A. González Palencia (1943).
A. González Palencia, Del 'Lazarillo' a Quevedo (1946). E.M.W.

Figueroa y Cordoba, José and Diego (*Seville 1625 and 1619), Spanish dramatists. They wrote plays of much the same kind and often collaborated with one another. Their merit is not of the highest; their action however is usually lively, and the endings tend to be happy.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 47.
E. Cotarelo y Mori, 'Los hermanos F. y C.', in Boletín de la Real Acad. Esp. (1919). E.M.W.

Filelfo, Francesco (*Tolentino 25 VII 1398; †Florence 31 VII 1481), Italian humanist, author of a commentary on Petrarch's canzoni and a life of Federico of Urbino. Quarrelsome and malevolent, he was a bitter enemy of Cosimo de' Medici and Bracciolini-Poggio.

G. Saitta, L'educazione dell'umanesimo in Italia (1928); G. Benadduci, in Atti e Mem. della R. Dep. di Storia per le Marche, 5 (1901); G. Zippel, in Giornale storico della lett. ital., 42 (1903). B.R.

Filicaia, Vincenzo (da) (*Florence 30 XII 1642; ∞Anna di Scipione Capponi; †ibid. 24 IX 1707), Italian poet. Famous during his life for his numerous lyric poems, he is only remembered now because his spirited sonnets on Italy made him a forerunner of Italian unity. His turgid rhetoric is the result of his attempt to raise his style to his lofty subjects; sonorous but empty lines came naturally to him.

Poesie Toscane (1707; a more complete ed., 2 vols, 1793).
L. Castellani, 'Il Seicento e V. da F.', in Scritti Letterari (1889); G. Caponi, V. da F. e le sue opere (1901). U.L.

Filimon, Neculai (*Bucharest 1819; †ibid. 1865), Rumanian novelist, was also an accomplished singer and flute-player. His second novel Ciocoii vechi şi noi (1863; 2nd ed. 1886) is vividly written and gives a very good picture of contemporary Rumanian society.

Excursiuni in Germania meridionala (1860); Oraşul Bergamo (1861); Slujnicarii sau Gentilomii de mahala (1861).
Ciocoii vechi şi noi, ed. G. Baiculescu (1931; best biog.); N. Iorga, 'F.', in Revista Noua, IV (1891). A.V.W.

Filinto Elysio: see Nascimento, F. M. do.

Finch, Anne (*Basingstoke ? IV 1661; ∞V 1684 Heneage Finch, later Earl of Winchelsea; †London 5 VIII 1720), English poet, a friend of Pope. The tone and imagery of some of her poems remarkably foreshadow romantic poetry, especially Wordsworth's.

Miscellany: Poems on Several Occasions (1713); Poems, ed. Myra Reynolds (Chicago, 1903); Minor Poets of the 18th Century, ed. Hugh I'A. Fausset (1930). G.F.S.

Firdowsi, ABU'L-QĀSIM (*Tabaran 941; †Tus 1019), author of Shah-Nameh, the national epic of Persia. He belonged to the dihqan class, the landed proprietors, among whom the old Persian traditions had been best kept. At the age of 35 he set out to write Shah-Nameh. His main source for this gigantic task, which absorbed 35 years of his life, was Khuday-Nameh ('book of the kings'), a prose work based on older sources, which contained the legendary and authentic history of Persia from prehistoric times till the fall of the Sassanian empire (A.D. 652). He was helped in the fulfilment of his task by moral and material support from some of his local friends. When the great epic was completed Firdowsi, old and broken by then, in the hope of receiving a liberal reward, dedicated the work of his life to Sultan Mahmud, the Qaznavid monarch, whose fame as the patron of poets was widespread. However, being misrepresented at the court by jealous intriguers, he was but meanly rewarded. In his indignation he composed the famous satire on Mahmud. After some years of wandering he found a princely patron in Tabaristan but later the longing for home drew him to Tus, where he died in despair.

Apart from Shah-Nameh a number of short lyric fragments by Firdowsi have been recorded by his biographers. The authenticity of the poetical romance, Yusif u Zulaykha, attributed to him has been seriously doubted. Shah-Nameh, the greatest monument of Persian language and one of the world's great epics, has established Firdowsi as the supreme master of epic poetry among the Persian poets. He combines a great power of description, a keen dramatic sense and a vigorous diction with a pure and dignified style, which never fails to rouse his compatriots. Although primarily a singer of ancient glories and heroic feats, his work is yet full of mature thinking and wise advice, enshrined in a thoughtful and contemplative mood.

For ed. and tr. see SHAH-NAMEH.

T. Nöldeke, 'Das iranische Nationalepos', in Grun. der iran. Phil. (1896–1904, the standard work on Shah-Nameh); C. J. Pickering, 'F.'s lyrical poetry', in Nat. Rev. (1890); W. Jackson, Early Persian Poetry (1920); H. Massé, Firdowsi et l'épopée nationale (1935); Z. Safa, Hamãse-ye Melli-ye Īran (1947). E.Y.

Firenzuola, AGNOLO (*Florence 1493; †Prato 27 VI 1543), Italian poet and playwright, author of a satire on court life, La prima veste dei discorsi degli animali (1493). He opposed Trissino's spelling reforms in Discacciamento delle nuove lettere aggiunte (1524). One of his comedies, La Trinuzia (1549), is modelled on Bibbiena's La Calandria.

DIALOGUES: Della perfetta bellezza d'una donna (1541); Delle Bellezze delle donne, o Celso (1548); I Ragionamenti d'amore (1548).—COMEDY: I Lucidi (1549).—VERSE: Liriche (1549).—Opere di A. F. (2 vols, 1848); Prose scelte di A. F., ed. S. Ferrari (new ed. 1915); Le più belle pagine di A. F., ed. A. Baldini (1925).

M. Oliveri, A. F. (1935); I. Sanesi, La Commedia, I (1911; 1944). B.R.

Firishta, MOHAMMED QAZIM (*1570; †1611), Persian historian and author of a History of India (tr. G. Briggs, 1829). He lived at the court of Ibrāhīm Adīl Shāh II, sultan of Bijāpur in the Deccan. H.G.R.

Firmicus Maternus, JULIUS (fl. c. A.D. 350), wrote on astrology in eight books entitled Mathesis, in which his doctrines differ markedly from those of Ptolemy. Later he became a Christian and wrote a fierce polemic against pagan errors.

Mathesis, ed. W. Kroll, F. Skutsch, K. Ziegler (1897–1913); De Errore Profanarum Religionum, ed. K. Ziegler (1907). J.A.W.

Fischart, JOHANN, called MENTZER (*Strasbourg 1546; †Forbach 1589/90), German satirist. Studied under Kaspar Scheidt, travelled widely and acquired a many-sided humanistic education, wrote most of his works at Strasbourg 1576–81. A firm Protestant, he bitterly attacked the Jesuits (Jesuiterhütlein, 1580). His best works are Der Flöhhaz (1573), a brilliant satire on women, Das glückhafft Schiff von Zürich (1576), a charming account of the voyage by river from Zürich to Strasbourg in 1576, and the Geschichtsklitterung (1575–90), a free adaptation of Book I of Rabelais' Gargantua, a lively though formless collection of tales told in an exuberant, witty, often chaotic German in which the 'German Rabelais' outdoes his master. A virtuoso of language, Fischart combines the satire of Brant and Murner with that of Rabelais, and, the greatest satirist of his age, is the epitome of German 16th-century literature.

Aller Praktik Grossmutter (1572), ed. A. Alsleben (1876); Eulenspiegel (1572); Der Flöhhaz, ed. C. Wendeler (1877); Das glückhafft Schiff von Zürich, ed. G. Baesecke (1901); Philosophisch Ehzuchtbüchlein (1578); Affentheurlich Naupengeheurliche Geschichtklitterung, ed. A. Alsleben (1887).—Dichtungen, ed. H. Kurz (3 vols, 1866–67); selections, ed. K. Goedeke (1880), ed. A. Hauffen (Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit., 3 vols, 1892–95); Schweizer Dichtungen, ed. A. Hauffen (1926).

A. Hauffen, J. F. (2 vols, 1921–22; full biblio.); A. Leitzmann, Fischartiana (1924); R. Zitzmann, Fischarts 'Geschichtsklitterung' in ihrem Verhältnis zu Rabelais (Diss. Frankfurt 1935). D.G.D.

Fischer, Johann Georg (*Gross Süssen 25 X 1816; ∞1848 Auguste Neubert; †Stuttgart 4 V 1897), one of the minor Swabian poets grouped round Uhland and Kerner. Some of his verse had political bearings, though its main virtue lay in his intimate feeling for nature. His plays derived from Schiller, but lacked dramatic impulse.

Gedichte (1838, 1841 and 1854); Neue Gedichte (1865); Den deutschen Frauen (1869); Aus frischer Luft (1872).—Plays: Saul (1862); Friedrich II von Hohenstaufen (1863); Florian Geyer (1866); Kaiser Maximilian von Mexico (1863).—Auswahl aus den Gedichten, ed. E. Lissauer (1923).

H. v. Fischer, Erinnerungen an J. G. F. (1897). H.A.P.

Fisher, John (*Beverley 1469; †London 22 VI 1535), bishop of Rochester; executed by Henry VIII for denying the royal supremacy (canonized 1935); wrote miscellaneous Latin and English works (the latter chiefly sermons).

Opera Omnia (Lat. works only; 1597); The English Works of F., ed. J. E. B. Mayor (1876).

T. E. Bridgett, Life of Blessed J. F. (2nd ed. 1890); E. A. Benians, J. F. (1935). R.W.B.

Fiske, John (*Hartford, Conn. 30 III 1842; ∞1864 Abby Brooks; †Gloucester, Mass. 4 VII 1901), American philosopher and historian. As an interpreter of American political ideas and a philosopher reconciling religion and the theory of evolution, he was one of America's intellectual leaders at the end of the 19th century.

Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy (1874); The Destiny of Man (1884); American Political Ideas (1885); The Discovery of America (1892).—The Writings of J. F. (24 vols, 1902).

T. S. Perry, J. F. (1906). H.L.C.

Fitch, Clyde (William) (*Elmira, N.Y. 2 V 1865; †Châlons-sur-Marne, France 4 IX 1909), American playwright. He wrote over 60 plays dealing with American subjects, including romantic social comedies, melodramas and period plays.

Beau Brummel (1890); The Climbers (1901); The Girl with the Green Eyes (1902); The Truth (1906); The City (1909).

Moses and Gerson, C. F. and His Letters (1924). H.L.C.

Fitz-Geffry, Charles (*Fowey; †St Dominick, Cornwall 24 II 1637/8), English poet and divine, represented in England's Parnassus (1600). He published Latin epigrams and epitaphs (1601) and sermons.

Complete Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (1881); Sir Francis Drake (1596), ed. Sir S. E. Brydges (1819); The Blessed Birthday Celebrated, etc. (1634; 1636; 1654). B.L.J.

Fitzgerald, Edward, born Purcell (*Bradfield, Suffolk 31 III 1809; ∞1856 Lucy Barton; †Merton Rectory, Norfolk 14 VI 1883), English poet and translator. His father assumed his father-in-law's name, Fitzgerald, in 1818. Educated at Bury St Edmunds and Cambridge, Fitzgerald spent most of his pleasant peaceful life at Woodbridge, Suffolk. His marriage failed, but his friends (including Tennyson and Carlyle) were many. His translations from Persian, Spanish and Greek were a poet's re-creations, and he is remembered for The Rubaiyát, exotic version of Victorian pessimism, and for the ease and wit of his letters.

The Rubaiyát of Omar Khayyam (1859); The Letters and Literary Remains of E. F., ed. W. Aldis Knight (7 vols, 1902–03).

T. Wright, The Life of E. F. (2 vols, 1904); A. C. Benson, E. F. (1905); M. Adams, Omar's Interpreter, a New Life of E. F. (1909); A. M. Perhune, The Life of E. F. (1947). B.H.

Fitzneal, Richard (*1130; †10 IX 1198), natural son of bishop Nigel of Ely, served Henry II as treasurer and became archdeacon of Ely, canon of St Paul's, archdeacon of Colchester and dean of Lincoln. His Dialogus de Scaccario, written in 1176–77, is a valuable account of the exchequer under Henry II.

Dialogus de Scaccario, ed. C. Johnson (1950).

R. L. Poole, The Exchequer in the Twelfth Century (1912). R.R.R.

Fitzstephen, William (†c. 1190), confidant and biographer of Thomas Becket.

J. C. Robertson, Materials for the History of Thomas Becket, III (1877) contains his 'Vita Sancti Thomae'. R.W.B.

Flacius Illyricus, Matthias; originally Vlačic (*Albona, Istria 3 III 1520; †Frankfurt-on-Main 11 III 1575), Protestant church historian, spent most of his adult life in Germany, where he organized a team of scholars at Magdeburg (1554 onwards). The 'Centuriators of Magdeburg' collected materials for the history of the Christian church and arranged it by centuries, providing Protestants with propaganda material and provoking the Catholic reply of Baronius.

Ecclesiastica Historia . . . secundum singulas centurias perspicuo ordine complectans (with the collaboration of Wigand, Judex, Faber, Corvinus and Holthuter, 13 vols, 1559–74); Catalogus Testium Veritatis (1556).

W. Preger, M. F. I. u. seine Zeit (2 vols, 1859–61); P. Polman, 'F. I. historien de l'église', in Rev. d'hist. ecclésiastique, 27 (1931). D.H.

Flaminio, Marco Antonio (*Serravalle, now Vittorio Veneto 1498; †Rome 17 II 1550), Italian humanist. Of his Latin poetry, the Lusus pastorales are the most admired. His letters (in Italian) reflect the influence of the Reformation.

Carmina (1743).

P. Rossi, M. A. F. (1931); B. Chiurlo, in Giornale storico della lett. ital., 104 (1934); G. F. Cortini, 'M. A. F. luterano', in La Romagna, XVII (1928); E. Carrara, La poesia pastorale (1909). B.R.

Flatman, Thomas (*London ? 21 II 1634/5; ∞26 IX 1672; †London 8 XII 1688), English poet and miniature painter. Educated at Winchester and New College, he was elected F.R.S. in 1668. He wrote good devotional poems, elegant lighter verse and competent pindarics.

Poems and Songs (1674 etc.), ed. G. Saintsbury, in Minor Poets of the Caroline Period, III (1921); The Life and Uncollected Poems, ed. F. A. Child (1921); P. Simpson, 'Poems of T. F.', in Bodleian Q.R., 8 (1937). B.L.J.

Flaubert, Gustave (*Rouen 12 XII 1821; †Croisset 8 V 1880), French novelist. The son of a surgeon, Flaubert studied law in Paris (1840–43), but his health prevented him from following an active professional career. In 1846 he settled with his widowed mother at Croisset, near Rouen. His acknowledged liaison with the poetess Louise Colet had less influence on his writing than his unconsummated passion for Elisa Schlesinger, the wife of a music publisher, recounted in L'Éducation sentimentale. A first draft of this novel was made, then discarded, in 1845, when Flaubert had already written some highly romantic juvenilia (Mémoires d'un Fou, Smarh, Novembre). When in 1849 his friends Maxime Ducamp and Louis Bouilhet expressed unqualified disapproval of his draft of La Tentation de Saint Antoine (begun in 1845), Flaubert abandoned the project. After five years' work, he published Madame Bovary in the Revue de Paris (1856–57), the love-story of a provincial doctor's wife in revolt against her bourgeois surroundings. Flaubert was acquitted of the legal charge of writing an immoral book. Salammbô (1862), set in ancient Carthage, was written after much documentary research and a visit (1858) to Tunisia. After six years of labour, Flaubert published his revised Éducation sentimentale (1869), a moral history of the men of his own generation. The final version of La Tentation de Saint Antoine (1874), was followed by Trois Contes (1877), three perfect examples of both Flaubert's subject-matter and his style. At his death he left unfinished his withering condemnation of human imbecility, Bouvard et Pécuchet (1881). Flaubert's aim as a novelist was to give, in impeccable prose, an impersonal, anatomist's rather than a moralist's, account of events and emotions, but the author's personality asserts itself in both his portrayal of contemporary bourgeois society and his accounts of the barbaric splendour of the remote past.

Plays: Le Candidat (1874); Le Château des Cœurs (1874).—Miscellaneous: Par les Champs et par les Grèves (1886); Correspondance (4 vols, 1887–93); Dictionnaire des idées reçues (1913); Premières œuvres (4 vols, 1914–20).—Œuvres complètes (22 vols, 1910–36), ed. R. Dumesnil (10 vols, 1945–48).

A. Thibaudet, G. F. (1922); R. Dumesnil, G. F., l'homme et l'œuvre (1932); F. Steegmuller, F. and Madame Bovary (1939 and 1947); P. Spencer, F., a biography (1952). T.W.

Fleck, Konrad (fl. 1220), Alemannic (or Alsatian) author of a courtly Floire unt Blantscheflur (French source), in the style of Hartmann von Aue. It owes nothing to a Rhenish 'minstrel' version, the so-called Trierer Floyris of c. 1170; later German versions, a novel of 1499 and a drama by Hans Sachs, are based on Boccaccio's Filocolo. His adaptation of (presumably) Chrétien's Cligés (Clîes) is lost.

Fl. u. Bl., ed. E. Sommer (1846); selections: J. Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit., IV; modernized by J. Ninck (1924). F.P.P.

Flecknoe, Richard (†1678 ?), English writer of plays, prose and verse, said to have been Irish and a Roman Catholic priest. He went abroad (1640), to Rome (1645), Constantinople (c. 1647), to Portugal and Brazil (1648). At Rome he was visited by Marvell, whose satirical Flecknoe (1645) suggested the title MacFlecknoe to Dryden. Flecknoe's Love's Kingdom (1664) and The Damoiselles a la mode (1667) were performed in public. His Enigmatical Characters are readable; he is best known for his Short Treatise of the English Stage.

Miscellanea: or Poems of all Sorts (1653).—PROSE: The Short Treatise of the English Stage (repr. J. E. Spingarn, in Critical Essays of the 17th Century, II, 1908).
A. Lohr, R. F. (1900). B.L.J.

Fleming, PAUL (*Hartenstein 5 X 1609; †Hamburg 2 IV 1640), German poet. He was the son of the court chaplain at Wechselburg, studied medicine from 1623 in Leipzig and there made the passing acquaintance of Opitz. This meeting seems to have encouraged him in his literary ambitions. At Leipzig he became acquainted with Adam Olearius, through whom he obtained a place on the staff of a trade mission sent by the duke of Holstein through Russia to Persia in 1633. In Reval he met Elsabe and Anna Niehusen, who inspired much of the love poetry upon which Fleming's reputation mainly rests. He returned from Persia in 1639, took a doctorate of medicine at Leyden with a view to practice in Hamburg, where he died. Fleming is one of the few German poets of his age whose work shows any inner development: the progress from Latin and German petrarchistic lyric in a social mode to individual poetic expression in German of emotions felt, culminating in his late odes. In this he foreshadows J. C. Günther. This development, doubtless facilitated by his long isolation abroad, marks him as one of the most considerable German poets of the time, superior in lyric power and sincerity of expression to his master Opitz. His hymn 'In allen meinen Taten' is popular in Germany and is found in some English hymnals.

Davids Busspsalme und Manasse Gebet (1631); Poetischer Gedichte Prodromus (1641); Teutsche Poemata (1642); Geist- und Weltliche Poemata (1651). Collected poems (Latin and German), ed. J. M. Lappenberg (3 vols, 1863–65, with biog.); selection ed. J. Tittmann (1870, with biog.).
S. Tropsch, Flemings Verhältnis zur römischen Dichtung (1895); H. Pyritz, Flemings deutsche Liebeslyrik (1932; fundamental); G. Ruegenberg, P. F. (1939); H. Maync's essay in his Deutsche Dichter (1927; best short characterization); J. Julian, Dictionary of Hymnology (1892; best Eng. account). L.W.F.

Flemmyng, ROBERT (†1483), dean of Lincoln, humanist and Latin poet. He left his library to Lincoln College, Oxford

Lucubraciunculae tiburtinae (Rome, 1477).—R. Weiss, Humanism in England (1941). S.J.L.

Fletcher, GILES, the elder (*Watford 1549?; ∞1580/1 Joan Sheaf; †London III 1610/1), English diplomat, lawyer and poet who visited Scotland (1568), Russia (1588) and Germany. He was imprisoned (Feb. 1600/1) for sympathy with Essex. His sonnets, while conventional, show individual poetic ability.

VERSE: Licia, or poems of love (1593; ed. E. Arber, An English Garner, VIII, 1896; ed. M. F. Crow, Elizabethan Sonnet Cycles, 1896; ed. Sir Sidney Lee, Elizabethan Sonnets, II, 1904).—PROSE: Of the Russe Common Wealthe (1591). B.L.J.

Fletcher, GILES (*London 1588?; ∞Anne?; †Alderton 1623), English clergyman and poet who was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, becoming reader in Greek (1615). In 1619 he exchanged a college living for Alderton, in Bacon's gift. Influenced by Spenser, Fletcher's stanza is nevertheless individual: he expresses himself with vigour and colour, often paradoxically.

Christ's Victorie and Triumph (1610; 1632, etc.).—The Poetical Works of Giles and Phineas Fletcher, ed. F. S. Boas (1908–09).
H. E. Cory, Spenser, the School of the Fletchers, and Milton (1912). B.L.J.

Fletcher, JOHN: see BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

Fletcher, PHINEAS (*Cranbrook 1582; ∞Wilne 23 VIII 1615 Elizabeth Vincent; †Hilgay 1650), English divine and poet, who was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, where he held a fellowship (1611–15). In 1615 Fletcher became chaplain to Sir Henry Willoughby who presented him with the living of Hilgay, Norfolk, where he lived for the rest of his life. Brittain's Ida (1628) was long thought to be the work of Spenser, who had an influence on Fletcher's style. The Purple Island may well have been suggested by Spenser's House of Alma (Faerie Queene, II, ix), but each is a poetic utilizing of conventional renaissance psychology, physiology and anatomy based on the conception of the microcosm.

DRAMA: Sicelides, A Piscatory (1631; anon.).—VERSE: The Purple Island: or the Isle of Man: together with Piscatorie Eclogs and other Poetical Miscellanies (1633).—The Poetical Works of Giles and Phineas Fletcher, ed. F. S. Boas (1908–09); Venus and Anchises, ed. from MS. E. Seaton (1926).
H. E. Cory, Spenser, the School of the Fletchers and Milton (1912); A. B. Langdale, P. F. (1937). B.L.J.

Florence of Worcester (†7 VII 1118), monk and chronicler in Latin of English history to 1117.

Chronicon ex chronicis, ed. B. Thorpe (2 vols, 1848–49; Eng. tr. T. Forester, 1854).
R.W.B.

Flores, Juan de (fl. late 15th century), Spanish novelist. His life is unknown. He wrote two novels: Grisel (or Aurelia) y Mirabella and Grimalte y Gradissa, which had wide influence. The first, retranslated from Italian into Spanish, French and English, was published as a polyglot. His plots were used by Lope de Vega, Scudéry and Fletcher.

B. Matulka, The Novels of J. de F. and their European Diffusion (N.Y., 1931); Polyglot tr.: Histoire de Aurelio et Isabelle: the historie of Aurelio and of Isabell (Antwerp, 1556; Brussels, 1608).
E.M.W.

Flórez de Setién y Huidobro, Enrique (*Villadiego, Burgos 1702; †ibid. 1773), Spanish historian. At 16 he entered the Augustinian order. He renounced his chair at Alcalá to travel throughout Spain investigating ecclesiastical documents. He initiated the España sagrada to which he contributed the first 29 volumes. It is even today an indispensable work of reference on account of the valuable documents it contains.

España sagrada. Theatro geográfico-histórico de la Iglesia de España (51 vols, 1747–1879); Clave historial con que se abre la puerta a la historia eclesiástica y política (1743).

A. González Palencia, Índice de la España Sagrada (1918); José María Salvador y Barrea, 'El P. F. y su España sagrada', in Disc. Ac. Esp. (1914); P. G. Antolín, 'Datos biográficos del P. F.', and P. C. Muiños, 'El P. Flórez, modelo de sabios cristianos', in Ciudad de Dios, 71 (1906).
R.M.N.

Florian, Jean-Pierre Claris de (*Château de Florian, Gard 6 III 1755; †Sceaux 13 IX 1794), French fabulist, novelist and dramatist. As an author of verse Fables (1792) he is the chief French successor of La Fontaine. His contemporaries prized his simple pastoral novels (Galatée, 1783; Estelle et Némorin, 1788) which contain idyllic pictures of peasant life in his native Cévennes. He wrote songs and sentimental comedies.

Comedies: Les Deux billets (1779); Le Bon ménage (1782); Le Bon père (1783); La Bonne mère (1785); Le Bon fils (1785).—Novels: Numa Pompilius (1786); Gonzalve de Cordoue (1791).—Autobiography: Mémoires d'un jeune Espagnol (1807), ed. Bossard (1924).—Œuvres complètes (16 vols, 1820); Œuvres inédites (4 vols, 1824).

L. Claretie, F. (1891); G. Saillard, F. (1912).
G.B.

Florio, John (*London 1553; ∞Rosa Daniel; †London VIII or IX 1625), Anglo-Italian translator and lexicographer. The son of an Italian Protestant refugee, Florio taught Italian to many distinguished pupils, including the earl of Southampton and queen Anne. His translation of Montaigne's Essays (1603) had a great influence on 17th-century English literature.

A world of Wordes, Italian and English (1598); The Essayes of Lord Michaell de Montayne, ed. J. I. M. Stewart (1931).

F. A. Yates, J. F. (1934).
J.B.B.

Florus, Lucius Annaeus (fl. c. a.d. 150), Roman historian, wrote Bellorum Romanorum Libri II tracing the rise and decline of Rome's military power. The work is based on Livy, but is eclectic in use of sources. The style is condensed and rhetorical. In the 17th and 18th centuries Florus was a standard school-book.

Ed. O. Rossbach (1896); C. A. Duker (2nd ed. 1744; with comm.); E. S. Forster (Loeb Libr. 1929).

O. Hirschfeld, Anlage und Abfassungszeit der Epitome des Florus (S. B. Berlin, 1899).
J.A.W.

Flugi (Fluoch) D'Aspermont, Conradin de (*St Moritz 22 IX 1787; †Chur 2 V 1874), Ræto-Romansch poet. Of distinguished Engadine family, after many years in commerce he entered the Neapolitan service. He returned to his home after the death of king Murat (1815) and founded the famous spa at St Moritz (San Murézzan). His lyrics are simple but discreetly expressive of his serenity and faith.

Verse: Alchünas rimas romauntschas (1845, 1861); Rimas (1894).—Memoirs: Einst und Jetzt (1868).

R. Ganzoni, 'C. de F.', in Annales da la Soc. Retorum, 16 (1902).
R.R.B.

Fockens, Melchior (*Groningen; †Amsterdam), 17th-century Dutch playwright and antiquary. In addition to a number of coarse farces he wrote a description of Amsterdam and one of Morocco.

Farces: Dronkken Hansje (1657); Verliefde Grysert (1659); Italiaansche Schoorsteenveger (1662).—Prose: Beschrijving van Amsterdam (2nd ed. 1662); Beschrijvinge van Marokko (1698).

W. Nijhoff, Bibliografie van N. Ned. plaatsbeschrijvingen (1894); J. v. Vloten, Het Nederlandsche Kluchtspel, III (2nd ed. 1877).
A.M.B.W.

Focquenbroch, Willem Godschalk van (*Amsterdam 1635; †St George del Mina 1675), Dutch poet and playwright; doctor of medicine. He is the first poet of the burlesque genre in Dutch, imitator of Scarron, from whom he adapted his Tiphon and his Aeneas in 't Zondagspak. He also wrote comedies after Spanish or French models. Although rather coarse, his works were successful, for the burlesque genre was fashionable.

Verse: Alle de Werken = Thalia of de geurige Zanggodin (1665).—Comedies: De verwarde Jalouzy (1663); De Min in het Lazarushuis (1663).

L. Baekelmans, Keur uit zijn werken (1911); J. A. Worp, 'W. v. F.', in De Gids, III (1881). A.M.B.W.

Fofanov, Konstantin Mikhailovich (*St Petersburg 18 V 1862; †ibid. 1911), Russian self-taught poet, whose verses aroused considerable hopes just before the wave of symbolism in the '90s. Endowed with a gift for song, he was yet uneven and addicted to facile improvisations.

Stikhotvoreniya (1896). J.L.

Fogazzaro, Antonio (*Vicenza 25 III 1842; †ibid. 7 III 1911), Italian novelist, poet and dramatist. The poet-priest, Giacomo Zanella, was his tutor. Fogazzaro, a pre-eminently Christian writer, was the last Catholic of the romantic school. In his first novel, Malombra (1881), he represents his own spiritual and sensual conflicts. He had passed through a period of estrangement from orthodoxy and had dabbled in Oriental mysticism and even occultism, but had re-acquired his original beliefs. His second novel, Daniele Cortis (1885), the story of a temptation, had a triumphant reception, Verga acclaiming the author not only as Italy's leading novelist, but among the greatest in Europe. By others, the work has since been severely criticized as disingenuous and subtly immoral. It was Fogazzaro's supreme desire, however, that his writings should be of moral worth, and his masterpiece, Piccolo Mondo Antico (1895), like Manzoni's I Promessi Sposi, was inspired by an endeavour to achieve a synthesis of truth, beauty and goodness. Il Santo (1905), a book of ideas, setting forth the possibility of revitalizing Catholic faith by science and charity, stirred public opinion throughout the Christian world. It was at first favourably received by many of high standing in the church, but was eventually condemned and placed on the Index. His last novel, Leila (1911), awaited as a possible retrenchment, was severely criticized, by the orthodox as the insidious work of a time-server, and by the modernists as the revelation of a weak and unstable character, unmanned by a sentence of condemnation. Neither criticism was just, as is shown by Fogazzaro's spiritual testament, La parola di Don Giuseppe Flores (1920).

Novels: Mistero del poeta (1888); Piccolo mondo moderno (1900–01); Eng. tr. of Il Santo by M. Prichard-Agnetti (2nd ed. 1906, with intro.).—Short Stories: Fedele ed altri racconti (1887); 'Pereat Rochus' and 'Un'idea di Ermes Torranza' (from Fedele, etc., ed. A. De Salvo, 1909; with intro. and notes); Idilli spezzati (1901).—Plays: Scene (2nd ed. 1903); El garofolo rosso (1901, in Venetian dialect); Il ritratto mascherato (1902).—Poems: Poesie (1908).—Tutte le opere, ed. P. Nardi (14 vols, 1931–41).

T. Gallarati-Scotti, La vita di A. F. (1920), Eng. tr. M. Prichard-Agnetti (1922); L. Portier, A. F. (Paris, 1937); P. Nardi, A. F. (1938). B.R.

Fokke Simonsz, Arend (*Amsterdam 3 VII 1755; ∞1782 Catherina Brinkman; †ibid. 15 XI 1812), Dutch poet, writer of burlesque prose and bookseller.

Verse: Dichtlievende mengelingen (1783).—Prose: Catechismus der Wetenschappen etc. (1804, unfinished); De moderne Helicon (1792); Het toekomende jaar 3000 (1793); Boertige Reis door Europa (7 vols, 1794–1806, unfinished).

H. Frijlink, A. F. S. (1884). J.W.W.

Folengo, Teofilo (*Mantua 8 XI 1496?; †Campese, Bassano del Grappa 9 XII 1544), Italian poet. His most important work, La Macaronea or Il Baldus (defin. ed. 1552) is a parody, in Latin macaronics, of the romantic epic, burlesqued also in his Orlandino (1525–26). Contemporary love-poetry is satirized in his Zanitonella. Il Chaos del Triperuno (1525–26) is an allegory of his life.

Maccheroniche, crit. ed. A. Luzio (2 vols, 1927–28); Opere italiane, crit. ed. U. Renda (3 vols, 1914).

Umberto Renda, F. (1936); G. Billanovich, 'Per una revisione della biografia di T. F.', in Atti del R. Ist. Veneto, 96, 2 (1937), Un nuovo F., conclusione del mito di Merlino (1938). B.R.

Folgore da San Gimignano (c. 1270; †c. 1330), Italian poet: he wrote a sequence of 14 sonnets on the months of the year, another of 8 on the days of the week, and a few more on knightly customs and political themes. He describes the gay life of well-to-do Tuscan youth with much zest, in an easy polished style. The only serious note is a regret at the passing away of 'courtesy'.

I sonetti di Folgore, ed. F. Neri (1925); Sonetti burleschi e realistici dei primi due secoli, ed. A. Massèra, rev. L. Russo (1940).

L. Santucci, F. da S. G. (1943); G. B. De Sanctis, Il Duecento (1949). K.F.

Follen, Karl Theodor Christian (*Romrod, Hesse 4 IX 1796; ∞1827 Eliza Cabot; †in a steamship accident in Long Island Sound 13 I 1840), German-American poet and educationist. Political persecutions forced him to emigrate to America in 1824. First professor of German at Harvard University, he was in 1835 suspended because of his abolitionist views. A friend of the New England transcendentalists he became a Unitarian minister. His idealistic poems typify German liberalism before 1848.

Adolf Follen, Freye Stimmen frischer Jugend (1919; poems); 'Die Gründung einer deutsch-amerikanischen Universität', ed. H. Haupt, in Jahrbuch dt.-amerik. hist. Ges. Illinois, 22, 23 (1922–23); Works, ed. E. C. Follen (5 vols, 1842).

G. W. Spindler, 'K. F.', in Jahrbuch dt.-amerik. hist. Ges. Illinois, 16 (1916); H. Haupt, 'Zum Gedächtnis Karl Follens', ibid., 22, 23 (1922–23). E.R.

Folquet de Marseille (c. 1160–1231), Provençal troubadour. The son of a rich Genoese merchant and himself a merchant, he must have had a sound clerical training: his works are full of classical reminiscences and show considerable familiarity with scholastic thought. He appears as a troubadour from about 1180, first in Marseilles at the court of the famous patron of poets, Barral de Baux, whose wife, Azalanis, is the subject of his songs. He was later at the court of Guillaume of Montpellier where his songs were addressed to Eudoxia, the Byzantine princess married to Guillaume. Others are in honour of three ladies of Nîmes, of Alfonso II of Aragon, Raimond Bérenger of Barcelona and Richard Lionheart. After his return to Marseilles his patron died; he wrote a moving lament. With his wife and children he entered the Cistercian order in 1200, disclaimed his secular songs and as bishop of Toulouse persecuted the Albigensians mercilessly. Besides his planh on the death of Barral, his cansos d'amor (which are almost baroque in their dialectical diction and metaphor), two crusader songs and a religious alba are noteworthy.

S. Stronski, Le troubadour F. de M. (1910). R.R.B.

Folz, Hans (*Worms; in Nuremberg from 1479; †before 1515), surgeon, mastersinger etc. A prolific and vigorous writer in many genres and aggressive reformer of Meistergesang. His Schwänke and Fastnachtspiele are usually stated to be 'coarser' than Rosenplüt's and made to serve as a foil for Hans Sachs. Recent criticism is more lenient.

Meisterlieder, ed. A. L. Mayer (1908); H. F. Keller, Fastnachtspiele, III (1853 seq.); H. Maschek, Lyrik d. späten MAs (Dt. Lit. in Entw.-Reihen, 1939).

W. Stammler, Von d. Mystik z. Barock (2nd ed. 1950; for a vindication); H. Oppenheim in W. Stammler, Die dt. Lit. des MAs, Verfasserlex., I (1933) seems to include everything. F.P.P.

Fonblanque, Albany William (*London 1793; ∞1820 Miss Keane; †ibid. 13 X 1872), English journalist, editor of The Examiner. Fonblanque's good prose and political vigour made a distinctive contribution to English journalism.

England under Seven Administrations (1837; repr. leaders); How We Are Governed (1858); The Life and Labours of A. F., ed. E. B. Fonblanque (1874; with memoir). B.H.

Fonseca, Cristóbal de (*Santa Olalla, Toledo 1550?; †1621), Spanish religious writer. He was an Augustinian and a famous preacher. He wrote treatises on the love of God and the life of Christ. He seems to have been influenced by Leone Ebreo, and he prided himself on writing well.

Tratado del amor de Dios (1592); La vida de Cristo nuestro Señor (1596), Devout contemplations, tr. J. Mabbe (1629). E.M.W.

Fontaine, Charles (*Paris 13 VII 1514; †c. 1565), French poet. A disciple of Marot, he was hostile to the innovations of the Pléiade, but the Quintil Horatian, attacking Pléiade doctrines, was not his (see B. Aneau). In his poem La Contr'amye de court (1543) he upheld the platonic conception of love, siding with Héroët in the Querelle des femmes.

La Fontaine d'amour (1546); Les Ruisseaux de Fontaine (1555).

R. L. Hawkins, Maistre C. F. Parisien (Cambridge, Mass., 1916). G.B.

Fontane, Theodor (*Neu-Ruppin 30 XII 1819; ∞1850 Emilie Rouannet-Kummer; †Berlin 20 IX 1898), German novelist, of Huguenot stock. He at first followed his father as a dispensing chemist, coming to Berlin in 1840, where he joined the literary club 'Tunnel über der Spree', 1844. From 1849 he lived by writing, spending two periods in England, 1855–59 as a newspaper correspondent. On the staff of the conservative Kreuzzeitung 1859–70, he acted as war correspondent in '66 and '70, and was taken prisoner by the French. 1870–89, as dramatic critic for the Vossische Zeitung, he showed his receptivity for new developments by defending Ibsen and Hauptmann. He was a ballad-writer of distinction, and his discursive travel books have their charm. But the most remarkable fact about Fontane is that he was approaching sixty when his first, Scott-like, historical novel was published, and seventy when he achieved his special contribution to literature: the modern Berlin novel. Der Stechlin, written when almost eighty, is a rich and subtle conversation-piece, though the outlines tend to be swamped in the conversation: whereas, in the earlier novels, he used conversation, for which he had an impeccable ear, to draw character and shape plot. In the tradition of the great French realists, though in his chosen limitation of subject-matter more akin to Schnitzler, Fontane has a cool dry wit and ironical detachment peculiarly his own.

Von der schönen Rosamunde (1850); Gedichte (1851); Ein Sommer in London (1854); Wanderungen durch die Mark Brandenburg (4 vols, 1862–82); Kriegsgefangen (1871); Vor dem Sturm (1878); Grete Minde (1880); L'Adultera (1882); Schach von Wuthenow (1883); Graf Petöfy (1884); Irrungen, Wirrungen (Trials and Tribulations, tr. K. Royce, 1917); Unwiederbringlich (1891); Frau Jenny Treibel (1893); Meine Kinderjahre (1894); Effi Briest (1895, tr. W. A. Cooper, 1913); Der Stechlin (1898); Von Zwanzig bis Dreissig (1898); Causerien über das Theater, ed. P. Schlenther (1905).—Gesammelte Werke und Briefe (22 vols, 1905–11).

K. Hayens, T. F.: a critical study (1920); Th. Mann, in Rede und Antwort (1922); F. Behrend, Aufsätze über F. (1933); G. Radbruch, F. oder Skepsis und Glaube (1945); R. Park, 'F.'s Unheroic heroes', in Germ. Rev., 14 (1939); A. L. Davis, 'F. as a Political Thinker', in Germ. Rev., 8 (1933); R. R. Knudsen, Der Theaterkritiker F. (1942).
H.A.P.

Fontanes, Louis, Marquis de (*Niort 6 III 1757; †Paris 17 III 1821), French poet. Exiled during the Revolution, he became the friend in London of Chateaubriand, whom he was able to help on his return to France. Under Napoleon and Louis XVIII he occupied high official posts, including that of Grand Maître de l'Université. His poetry has a conventional elegance.

Fragment d'un poème sur la Nature et sur l'Homme (1777); Essai sur l'Astronomie (1788); Essai sur l'Homme (1783, tr. of Pope).—Œuvres, ed. C. A. Sainte-Beuve (2 vols, 1839); Correspondance de F. et de Joubert, 1785–1819, ed. R. Tessonneau (1943).

A. Wilson, F. (1928). G.B.

Fontenelle, Bernard Le Bovier de (*Rouen 11 II 1657; †Paris 9 I 1757), French writer. A nephew of Pierre Corneille, he began by writing verse, tragedies and opera libretti with limited success. His Dialogue des morts (1683) announced a new vein of lightly written philosophy. His following works of scientific popularization and ingenious religious scepticism established him as the first of the 18th-century philosophes and a forerunner of the encyclopédistes. An acute literary critic, he upheld the doctrine of progress in his Digression (1688) on the Quarrel of the Ancients and the Moderns. Honoured by several learned bodies, he was the permanent secretary (1699–1739) of the Académie des Sciences, whose history he wrote.

Verse: Poésies pastorales (1688).—Operas: Psyché (1678, with T. Corneille); Bellérophon (1679, with T. Corneille): Thétis et Pélée (1689); Enée et Lavinie (1690).—Tragedy: Aspar (1680).—Prose: Entretiens sur la pluralité des mondes (1686); Histoire des oracles (1687), crit. ed. L. Maigron (1908); De l'origine des fables (1689), crit. ed. J. R. Carré (1932); Vie de P. Corneille (1742).—Œuvres complètes (8 vols, 1790); E. Faguet, Textes choisis (1913).

L. Maigron, F. (1906); J. R. Carré, La Philosophie de F. (1932); F. Grégoire, F. (1947). G.B.

Fonteyn, Bernard (*Amsterdam 1603; †ibid. before 1649), Dutch playwright; surgeon. He wrote a musical comedy after an English jig, 'The black man', and a number of plays after the chapbook of Fortunatus.

Sulleman's Soete Vryagie (1633); Fortunatus Beurs en Wenschhoed (1643); Fortunatus Soonen (1643).

J. Bolte, Die Singspiele der Englischen Komödianten (1893); J. A. Worp, 'Dr B. F.' (and his brothers), in Oud-Holland, II (1884).
A.M.B.W.

Fonteyn, Nicolaas (*Amsterdam 1600; †after 1644), Dutch writer and playwright; surgeon, brother of Bernard. He wrote in addition to medical works a few rather old-fashioned plays; he was a member of the Chamber 'Egelantier' and of Krul's musical society.

Triumphs Trompet speelsgewys uitgebeelt (1629); Casta ofte Spieghel der Kuysheyd (1637); Esther ofte 't Beeldt der ghehoorsaamheid (1638); Aristobulus (1638). A.M.B.W.

Fonvizin (also Fon-Vizin), Denis Ivanovich (*Moscow 3 IV 1745; †1792), Russian playwright. His Molièresque comedy of manners, Brigadir (1768), was a partial adaptation of Holberg's Jean de France, but in a thoroughly Russian setting. Even better is his Nédorosl', first produced in 1782. Fonvizin's last years were full of tribulations which made it impossible for him to continue his dramatic work. He left some interesting letters and diaries.

Pervoye polnoye sobranie sochineniy Fonvizina (1888); Sochineniya (1893); Izbrannye sochineniya i pis'ma (1946); in English: The Choice of a Tutor, in Five Russian Plays, tr. C. E. Beechhofer (1916); The Young Hopeful, in Masterpieces of the Russian Drama, tr. G. Z. Patrick and G. R. Noyes (1933).

Monographs by P. A. Vyazemsky (1848), S. Brilliant (1892), A. Gruzinsky (1895), V. I. Pokrovsky (1905), A. Veselovsky (1914), D. I. Blagoy (1945), A. Shtein (1945). J.L.

Foote, Samuel (*Truro c. I 1720; †Dover 21 X 1777), English actor and dramatist. His talent for histrionic caricature brought Foote both success and trouble.

Taste (1752); The Minor (1760); The Lyar (1764); The Lame Lover (1770).—The Works of Samuel Foote, Esq. (4 vols, 1786); The Works of Samuel Foote. With Remarks on each Play and an essay on the Life, Genius and Writings of the Author, by Jon Bee Esq. (John Badcock, 3 vols, 1830).

W. Cooke, Memoirs of S. F. (3 vols, 1805); P. Fitzgerald, S. F. (1910); M. M. Belden, The Dramatic Work of S. F. (1929). B.H.

Ford, John (*Islington, Devon IV 1586; †c. 1640), English poet and dramatist, who was entered at the Middle Temple (16 IX 1602), expelled for debt, and readmitted in 1608, with a 40-shilling fine. Ford wrote elegies and verse and prose pamphlets before turning to the theatre. Collaborating first with Dekker, Rowley and Webster, he later wrote plays on different aspects of melancholy and a well-constructed chronicle play Perkin Warbeck. He has a dramatist's power of thinking in situations, writing lucidly vigorous blank verse. B.L.J.

'Tis Pitty Shees a Whore (1633), ed. S. P. Sherman (1915); The Dramatic Works, ed. W. Gifford (2 vols, 1827), rev. A. Dyce (3 vols, 1869), rev. A. H. Bullen (3 vols, 1895), ed. W. Bang and H. de Vocht, in 'Bang' (1908, 1927).

A. C. Swinburne, 'J. F.', in Essays and Studies (1888); T. S. Eliot, Elizabethan Essays (1934); U. M. Ellis-Fermor, The Jacobean Drama (1936); G. F. Sensabaugh, The tragic Muse of J. F. (1944); F. S. Boas, An Introduction to Stuart Drama (1946). J.R.B.

Ford, Richard (*London 1796; ∞1824 daughter of the Earl of Essex, ∞1838 Hon. Eliza Cranstoun, ∞1851 Mary Molesworth; †Heavitree 1 IX 1858), English journalist, critic and traveller.

Handbook for Travellers in Spain (2 vols, 1845); Gatherings from Spain (1846; repr. 1906). B.H.

Fordun, John of (†c. 1384), Scottish chronicler. Presumed to have been a secular priest. His Scotichronicon stops at 1153; but he left material bringing the history down to 1384. It was enlarged and continued to 1437 by Walter Bower and is a primary authority for early Scots history.

Ed. W. F. Skene (with Eng. tr. 1871–72). J.K.

Forner, Juan Pablo (*Mérida 1754; ∞María del Carmen Carrasco; †Madrid 1797), Spanish writer. The son of a famous humanist, he won, when still a student at Salamanca, an academy prize with his Sátira contra los abusos introducidos en la lengua castellana (1782). He was such a virulent polemist that he was forbidden to publish without special royal consent. Besides these polemics he is mainly remembered by his Oración apologética (1786), a well-documented, patriotic answer to Masson's 'Has Spain done anything for Europe?', and even more by his Exequias de la lengua castellana, an interesting appraisal of Spanish literature and evolution written in an excellent, forceful style.

Obras, ed. L. Villanueva (1844); Bibl. Autores Esp., 53; Exequias, ed. Sáinz Rodríguez, in Clás. Cast. (1925); Antología de F., ed. N. González Ruiz (1941).

María Jiménez Salas, Vida y obras de J.P.F. (1944). R.M.N.

Forrest, William (fl. 1581), English Roman Catholic priest and poet, friend of Alexander Barclay and chaplain to queen Mary; left a collection of music still at Oxford.

A New Ballade of the Marigolde (1553), repr. T. Park, Harleian Miscellany, X (1813); The History of Griselde the Second, ed. W. D. Macray (1878); The Pleasaunt Poesie of Princelie Practise, extracts ed. Herrtage and Couper, Early Eng. Text Soc. (1878). B.L.J.

Forster, Johann George (*Nassenhuben nr Danzig 27 XI 1754; †Paris 10 I 1794), German travel writer. The son of a pastor who abandoned his living in order to travel, Forster visited Russia and England while still a boy. In 1772 he sailed with Captain Cook, afterwards publishing an account of the voyage which combines accurate observation with imaginative power. Forster, who became librarian in Mainz in 1788, sided with the revolutionary party.

A Voyage round the World (2 vols, 1777; Reise um die Welt, 2 vols, 1778–80); Ansichten vom Niederrhein (3 vols, 1791–94).—Sämtliche Schriften (9 vols, 1843).

A. Leitzmann, G. F. (1893); W. Langewiesche, G. F. (1923). H.B.G.

Forster, John (*Newcastle 2 IV 1812; ∞1856 Eliza Ann Crosbie; †London 2 II 1876), English historian, biographer and journalist. Forster was chief dramatic critic of The Examiner and his many literary friendships included those with Lamb and Hunt.

Statesmen of the Commonwealth (5 vols, 1840); The Life and Adventures of Oliver Goldsmith (2 vols, 1854; enlarged ed.); The Life of Charles Dickens (3 vols, 1872–74); The Life of Jonathan Swift (1876; unfinished).—Dramatic Essays by John Forster and G. H. Lewes, ed. W. Archer and R. W. Lowe (1896).

R. Renton, J. F. and his Friendships (1912); M. Elwin, Victorian Wallflowers (1934).

B.H.

Fortescue, Sir John (c.* 1394; ∞c. 1436 daughter of John Jamyss; †Ebrington, Glos c. 1476), chief justice, Lancastrian, captured at Tewkesbury, later pardoned after recognizing Edward IV. His De Laudibus Legum Angliae (in Latin) and The Governance of England (in English) discuss the constitutional limits of the monarchy.

Works, ed. T. Fortescue, Lord Clermont (2 vols, 1869); The Governance of England, ed. C. Plummer (with valuable intro., 1885); De Laudibus Legum Angliae, Eng. tr. S. B. Chrimes (1942).

C. A. J. Skeel, 'The Influence of the Writings of Sir J. F.', in R. Hist. Soc. Trans., 3rd Ser., 10 (1916); H. S. Bennett, Chaucer and the 15th Century (1947). R.W.B.

Fortini, Pietro (c.* 1500 †c. 1562), Italian writer. His collections of short stories, modelled on Boccaccio's Decameron, are important as a reflection of 16th-century social life.

Le giornate delle novelle dei Novizi; Le piacevoli ed amorose notti dei Novizi; ed. Orlando and Baccini, in Bibliotechina grassoccia (1889).

L. di Francia, Novellistica, I (1924).

B.R.

Fortunatus, Venantius Honorius Clementianus (*nr Treviso 540; †Poitiers c. 600), bishop of Poitiers (599). He studied at Ravenna, and, on a pilgrimage to Tours, visited Metz, where he composed an epithalamium for king Sigebert's marriage to Brunhildis. In 567 he finally settled at Poitiers, where he became the friend of St Radegund and the abbess Agnes of the nunnery of the Holy Cross. He addressed to them many of his occasional poems, and we get a glimpse of a cultivated society, in which learning, a measure of asceticism, and deep religious devotion were mingled. Among his longer poems are a life of St Martin, the De excidio Thoringiae and the De Virginitate.

But Fortunatus is famous for his hymns, Vexilla regis and Pange, lingua, gloriosi proelium certaminis, composed for the reception of the relic of the Cross sent by the emperor Justin II. His verses de cruce Domini and ad Felicem Episcopum de Pascha, both in elegiacs, are dominated by a similar intensity.

Works, ed. F. Leo and B. Krusch, Mon. German. Hist., Auctores Antiquissimi, IV (1881).

R. Köbner, Venantius Fortunatus (1915); D. Tardi, Fortunat (1927). F.J.E.R.

Foscolo, Ugo, originally Niccolò (*Xanthe, Ionian Isles 6 II 1778; †Turnham Green 10 IX 1827), Italian poet. The son of a Greek mother and a Venetian father, Foscolo was educated in Spalato and Padua. At first supporting French revolutionary ideals (he adopted the name Ugo in memory of Hugues Bassville) he hailed Napoleon as a liberator in his Ode a Bonaparte (1797). Disillusioned by the treaty of Campoformio, by which Napoleon ceded Venetia to Austria, Foscolo transferred to Milan, Bologna and Florence, writing and studying, fiercely disdainful of Italian political and social conditions. Much of his disillusionment and disdain is expressed in the novel, Jacopo Ortis. In the war against Austria and Russia (1799) he enlisted in the Cisalpine legion and fought in the defence of Genoa (1800). From 1804 to 1806 he served in France in an Italian division in the Napoleonic army awaiting the invasion of England.

In 1806 he composed his famous ode, De' Sepolcri (pub. 1807), inspired originally by a Napoleonic decree that the dead should be buried only in cemeteries and that these should be some distance beyond communal habitation. Though it echoes the indignation which the decree aroused it goes beyond individual or local implications of burial laws. The influence on the continent of the English school of graveyard poetry is relevant, but the sources of Foscolo's philosophy of life and death are indigenous, going back to Vico and Lucretius. Le Ultime Lettere di Jacopo Ortis (1802; 1814), closely modelled on Goethe's Werther, anticipated certain concepts of the poem, notably the theme of reverence for the dead; but, whereas Ortis is a negative work of despair, ending in a suicide, the fundamental message of De' Sepolcri, Foscolo's masterpiece, emerges as an affirmation of faith in man.

In 1814, on the return of the Austrians, Foscolo refused to take the oath of allegiance and went into exile, first to Switzerland and later to England, where he gained many friends and patrons. His earnings as lecturer and critic, together with a windfall received through his illegitimate daughter, enabled him to live for a time in comparative ease; but he eventually died in poverty. His remains were transferred from Chiswick to Santa Croce, Florence, in 1871.

Dramas: Tieste (1797); Aiace (1811).—Verse: Ugo Foscolo, Poesie, Lettere e Prose letterarie (includes De' Sepolcri), ed. T. Casini (1941); E. R. Vincent, The Commemoration of the Dead (1936; De' Sepolcri, text and comm.); Le Grazie (unfin.), ed. G. Chiarini (1882, in Poesie di U.F.).—Prose: Le Ultime Lettere di Jacopo Ortis, ed. N. Vaccalluzzo (1927); Saggi critici, ed. E. Bottasso (1950); Scritti militari, ed. B. Berzero (1939); Prose varie d'arte, ed. M. Fubini (1951).—Edizione Nazionale (1933 ff.).

G. Chiarini, La vita di U. F. (2nd ed. by G. Mazzoni, 1927); E. Donadoni, U. F., pensatore, critico, poeta (2nd ed. 1929); M. Fubini, U. F. (1928); G. Citanna, La poesia di U. F. (2nd ed. 1932); M. Sterpa, Le Grazie di U. F. (1934); M. Fubini, Foscolo Minore (1949); Lettura dell'Ortis (1949); E. R. Vincent, Byron, Hobhouse and F. (1949) and U. F., an Italian in Regency England (1953). B.R.

Foster, John (*Halifax 17 IX 1770; ∞1808 Maria Snooke; †Stapledon 15 X 1843), English essayist and Baptist minister.

Essays in a Series of Letters to a Friend (2 vols, 1805); Contributions, Biographical, Literary and Philosophical to the Eclectic Review (2 vols, 1844); The Life and Correspondence of J. F., ed. J. E. Ryland (2 vols, 1846). B.H.

Foulechat, Denis, 14th-century French translator. At the request of Charles V of France he translated the Polycraticus by John of Salisbury into French (1372).

L. Delisle, Recherches sur la librairie de Charles V (2 vols, 1905). A.H.D.

Fouqué, Friedrich Heinrich Karl de la Motte (*Brandenburg 12 II 1777; ∞1795, o|o, ∞1803 Karoline von Briest, romantic novelist, ∞1832 Albertine Tode, novelist; †Berlin 23 I 1843), German writer of aristocratic Huguenot descent. His imagination from his earliest years centred upon the age of chivalry. With his stream of medieval and nordic romances he was for a time the most popular romantic writer with the masses, but tastes changed till he could barely find a publisher and lived by lecturing at Halle. He fostered rising talents such as Chamisso and Eichendorff, who called him the 'Don Quixote of romanticism'. He is best remembered by his fairy-tale Undine.

Dramatische Spiele (1804; intro. A. W. Schlegel); Romanzen vom Thale Ronceval (1805); Der Held des Nordens (3 vols, 1810); Der Zauberring (3 vols, 1812; A Knightly Romance, tr. A. Platt, 1846); Undine (1811; tr. Edmund Gosse, 1932); Sintram und seine Gefährten (Sintram and his Companions, tr. J. Hare, 1820); Aslauga's Ritter (Aslauga's Knight, tr. T. Carlyle, 1827); Die Beiden Hauptleute (The Two Captains, tr. P. E. Matheson).—Ausgewählte Werke (12 vols, 1841).

L. Jeuthe, F. als Erzähler (1910); J. Haupt, Die Elementargeister bei F., Immermann und Hoffmann (1923). H.A.P.

Fourier, François-Marie-Charles (*Besançon 7 IV 1772; †Paris 8 X 1837), French social philosopher. Fourier was the son of a draper and himself traded as a grocer in Lyons until 1793 when his business was ruined by the revolution. He went to Paris where he became a junior clerk. The rest of his obscure existence was devoted to sociological theorizing of a utopian kind. In 1830 he founded a phalanstery, or communistic group, and in 1832 a periodical entitled Le Phalanstère (renamed La Phalange in 1836) which exercised a profound influence on the writers of the next generation.

Théorie des quatre mouvements (1808); Théorie de l'Unité universelle (1822); Le Nouveau Monde industriel (1829); La Fausse Industrie (1835–36); Publication des Manuscrits de C. F. (4 vols, 1851–58).

R. Maublanc, C. F. (1930); F. Armand, Les Fouriéristes et les luttes révolutionnaires (1948). M.G.; J.P.R.

Fox, Charles James (*London 24 I 1749; ∞1795 Mrs Armistead; †Chiswick 13 IX 1806), English statesman, historian and member of Johnson's club. Great as an orator (as in his five-hour speech opening proceedings against Warren Hastings), in impromptu debate he was unsurpassed for quickness of wit and mastery of plain English.

Letters to Electors of Westminster (1793); History of Early Part of Reign of James II (1808); Speeches in House of Commons (6 vols, 1815).

Earl Russell, Memorials and Correspondence of C. J. F. (1853–57), Life and Times of C. J. F. (1859–66); Sir G. O. Trevelyan, Early History of C. J. F. (1880). R.M.H.

Foxe, John (*Boston, Lincs 1516; ∞1546 Charlecote, Agnes Randall; †London IV 1587), English protestant martyrologist who fled abroad (1554—returning 1559). His work is often inaccurate, but his imaginative vigour has made it a literary influence. A partisan in writing, he detested all persecution. Foxe edited the Anglo-Saxon Gospels (1571).

Actes and Monumentes (1563, etc.; ed. J. Pratt, with intro. by J. Stoughton, 1877).—W. Haller, 'J. F. and the Puritan Revolution', in The 17th Century (1951). B.L.J.

Fracastoro, Gerolamo (*Verona 1478; †ibid. 8 VIII 1553), Italian poet. His Latin epic, mythological and Virgilian, Syphilis sive de morbo gallico (1530), is the origin of the medical term.

De contagione et contagiosis morbis (1546); Opera omnia (1555, incompl.); Poemata omnia (1739); Syphilis (It. tr. G. Lentini, with biblio., 1930); Naugerius sive De Poetica (dialogue, crit. ed. with Eng. tr. by K. Kelso, intro. by M. W. Bundy, in Univ. of Illinois Studies, 1924).

J. A. Symonds, The Revival of Learning (1906); E. Di Leo, Scienza e umanesimo in G. F. (1937); A. Scolari, 'La poetica de G. F.', in Scritti di varia letterat. e di critica (1937); E. Carrara, La poesia pastorale (1909). B.R.

Fraet, Frans (†Antwerp 1558), Rederijker, executed as a heretic. In addition to a number of refrains a play, Een present van Godt loondt, grammerchijs besolosmanos, and a collection of emblems, Hondert morale figuren, are extant.

Refrains in MS. Sloane 1174 (Brit. Mus., London) and Jan Michiels (Royal Library, The Hague); the play in MS. ii, 367, Royal Library, Brussels; the allegories printed in Tpalays der gheleerder ingienen oft der constiger gheesten (1554, 1556, 1564).

V. A. de la Montagne, in Tijdschr. v. Boeken Bibliotheekwezen, i (1903); A. G. C. de Vries, De Nederlandsche Emblemata (1899). J.J.M.

Frances, Immanuel (*Livorno 11 VII 1618; †ibid. c. 1710), Italian Hebrew poet. Rabbi in Florence, Livorno and Algiers, he wrote poems in Hebrew (largely unpublished), and in Italian and Judaeo-Spanish (lost). He was also author of a Hebrew prosody (Metheq Sefathayim, ed. H. Brody, 1892). His brother Jacob Frances (1615–67) was also a poet of note.

Zevi Muddah (poems by I. and J.), ed. M. Mortara (1885); Divan, ed. S. Bernstein (1932). C.R.

Francesco da Barberino (*Barberino (Val d'Elsa) 1264; ∞1314 Barna Rinieri; †Florence 1348), Italian poet. Florentine notary; exiled (1304–13); at Avignon (1309–13) he assimilated the culture of Provence. He wrote a didactic poem describing the education and behaviour of women, and a monotonous doctrinal poem with a Latin commentary.

Del reggimento e costumi di donna, ed. Baudi di Vesme (1875); I Documenti d'Amore, crit. ed. Egidi (4 vols, 1905–27).

A. Thomas, F. da B. et la littérature provençale en Italie au moyen âge (1883); N. Sapegno, Il Trecento (with biblio., 1945). M.W.

Francis, Sir Philip (*Dublin 22 1740; †London 23 XII 1818), reputed author of the Letters of Junius. He was an official in the British War Office, an M.P. and K.C.B. who published many political pamphlets. The Letters (1769–72), directed against the government of George III, caused a political furore. The evidence for the authorship of Francis is almost conclusive.

Letter to Lord North (1793); Letters of Junius, ed. J. Wade (1850). R.McH.

Francis of Assisi, Saint (*Assisi 1182; †1226). This extraordinary man claims a place here because of his far-reaching, if mainly indirect, influence on literature, especially in Italy. Converted in his early twenties to an intense personal devotion to Christ, this son of a rich cloth-merchant adopted a life of extreme poverty and evangelical preaching. Companions came to him, and in 1210 Francis obtained from Pope Innocent III official approval of their way of life. The next 16 years saw this act confirmed by Honorius III, and the 'Franciscans' established as an order in the church. The 'final seal, from Christ', as Dante calls it (Par. XI, 106–08), came with the impression of the 'stigmata', on La Verna, in 1224. A year before he died Francis composed the famous 'Canticle of Brother Sun', the only certainly authentic surviving poem of this born poet. It is a song of gratitude to the Creator for the basic elements of human life on earth, not excluding its sorrows or 'Sister Death'. Francis had—the point is worth stressing—some literary culture; he was familiar with the French romances of chivalry; but the obvious literary source of his Canticle is the Bible—Daniel, iii, and the Psalter. The same is true on the whole of the rich flowering of religious verse, Latin and vernacular which the Franciscan movement produced in the course of the 13th century; much of it distinctively theological, the work of subtle minds (e.g. Jacopone da Todi); but on its formal side it has little to do with the poetic tradition that ran from the Provençals through the Sicilian School (q.v.) to Dante. It reflects the fact that St Francis had initiated a popular religious movement unparalleled since the beginnings of Christianity (see Franciscan Literature).

V. Branca, Il Cantico di Frate Sole. Studio delle fonti e testo critico, in Arch. Franc. Hist., 41 (1948; repr. 1950); A. Monteverdi, Testi volgar ital. dei primi tempi (2nd ed. 1948); C. Dionisotti and C. Grayson, Early Italian Texts (1949); H. Böhmer, Analekten zur Geschichte des F. von Assisi (1930).

J. R. H. Moorman, Sources for the Life of St F. (1940); Fr. Cuthbert, O.S.F.C., St F. of Assisi (1912); M. Casella, 'Il Cantico delle Creature', in Studi medievali, 16 (1950); L. F. Benedetto, Il cantico di frate Sole (1940); L. Russo, Studi sul due e trecento (1946). K.F.

Franck, SEBASTIAN (*Donauwörth 1499; †Basle 1542), German writer. Ordained priest, he became a Lutheran parson and finally evolved a personal faith in which God, working through history, resides in the hearts of all believers independent of confession. Franck, a lonely thinker in advance of his time, wrote important historical works, popular homilies and moral essays showing brilliance, integrity and a fearless quest for truth. He also made an important collection of German proverbs.

Vom Laster der Trunkenheit (1528); Türkenchronik (1530); Paradoxa (1534), ed. G. Lehmann (1909); Ger. tr. of Erasmus' Encomion Moriae (1534), ed. E. Götzinger (1884); Das Weltbuch (1534); Germaniae Chronicon (1538); Kriegsbüchlein des Friedens (1539), ed. H. Klink (1929); Die deutschen Sprichwörter (2 vols, 1541), ed. F. Latendorf (1876); Letters, in Alemannia, IV (1876).

F. Weinkauff, 'S. F.', in Alemannia, V–VII (1877–79); W. Glawe, S. Francks unkirchliches Christentum (1912); A. Reinmann, S. F. als Geschichtsphilosoph (1931); W. E. Peuckert, S. F. (1943); W. Stammler, Von der Mystik zum Barock (1950; with biblio.). D.G.D.

Franco, NICCOLÒ (*Benevento 13 IX 1515; †Rome 10 III 1570), Italian poet, secretary to Pietro Aretino, with whom he later quarrelled. His scurrilous Rime contro l'Aretino and his Priapea (ed. E. Sicardi, 1916) were widely circulated. In the Dialogo delle bellezze (1542; ed. E. Demichele, 1913) he owes much to Equicola.

C. Simiani, N. F.: la vita e le opere (1894); E. Demichele, 'La vita di N. F.', in Studi di lett. ital., XI (1915). B.R.

Franco, VERONICA (*Venice 1546; †ibid. 1591), Italian poet and courtesan. Her Terze rime (1575), though mainly Petrarchan in inspiration, have a certain originality and spontaneity. Her portrait was painted by Tintoretto.

Terze rime e Sonetti, ed. with pref. and biblio., G. Beccari (1912); Lettere di cortigiane, ed. L. A. Ferrari (1884).

A. Graf, 'Una cortigiana fra mille', in Attraverso il Cinquecento (1888; repr. in Opere critiche, IV, 1926); G. Tassini, V. F., celebre poetessa e cortigiana (1888). B.R.

François, MARIE LOUISE VON (*Herzberg an der Schwarzen Elster 27 VII 1817; †Weissenfels 25 IX 1893), German novelist. Loss of fortune and consequent broken engagement aroused in her an unembittered sympathy with social misery in all forms, which found its finest expression in Die letzte Reckenburgerin—with its firm unsentimental touch and well-rounded characters one of the enduring novels of its time.

Die letzte Reckenburgerin (1871; The last von Reckenburg, tr. J. M. Percival, 1887); Frau Erdmuthens Zwillingssöhne (1873); Stufenjahre eines Glücklichen (1877); Der Katzenjunker (1879); Phosphorus Hollunder. Zu Füssen des Monarchen (1881).—Gesammelte Werke (5 vols, 1918); Briefwechsel mit C. F. Meyer, ed. A. Bettelheim (1905).

H. Enz, L. v. F. (1918). H.A.P.

François de Sales, ST (*Château de Sales, Savoy 21 VIII 1567; †Lyons 28 XII 1622), French religious writer, bishop of Geneva, canonized 1665. In literature he is noted for his easy and unpedantic, though sometimes over-ornate, prose style which he wished to model on Montaigne and which greatly influenced French 17th-century theological prose. His Traité de l'amour de Dieu (1616) contains a subtle psychological treatment of sacred and profane love.

Introduction à la vie dévote (1608, 1619), ed. C. Florisoone (2 vols, 1930).—Œuvres complètes (26 vols, 1892–1935).

J. Merlant, De Montaigne à Vauvenargues (1914); F. Strowski, Saint F. de S. (rev. ed. 1928). G.B.

Franco-Mendes, DAVID (*Amsterdam 1713; †ibid. 1792), Hebrew dramatist, was educated in both the Jewish and European tradition. He wrote a verse-drama Gemul Athalia which is an altered version of Racine's Athalie. Its main interest is in the Hebrew style, but there is also some interest in the transformation of Racine's royal tragedy into a human tragedy in accordance with the Jewish conception of morality. Y.H.

Frankfurter, PHILIP (fl. c. 1400), Viennese poet, chronicler of the antics of the Pfarrer vom Kalenberg (2,180 lines, no MS., prints from c. 1500): they owe nothing to the Pfaffe Amîs tales (see DER STRICKER) though both 'heroes' are clerics and, with others like them (see below), forerunners of Till Eulenspiegel. His tales are dull, even when vulgar.

Collective title for tales of 'Der Pfarrer', his successor Peter Leu, and Neithart Fuchs, Bruder Rausch: Das Narrenbuch, ed. F. Bobertag in J. Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit., XI.

H. Maschek, 'Zu d. Schwänken vom Kalenb.', Zs. f. dt. Alt., 75 (1938). F.P.P.

Franklin, BENJAMIN (*Boston 17 I 1706; ∞1730 Deborah Read; †Philadelphia 17 IV 1790), American scientist, essayist, statesman. His Autobiography tells that he worked as an apprentice printer to his brother, but ran away and spent two years abroad. He set up his own press in Philadelphia and began to publish Poor Richard's Almanac (1732–64), which had great demand and is still read because of the humorous central character and the wide range of laconic wisdom. In The Way to Wealth (1757) were collected many of his prudential maxims. Franklin's scientific experiments with a kite proved the identity of lightning and electricity; he invented the lightning-rod, Franklin stove, bi-focal glasses. He became America's famous diplomat and 'first philosopher' at the British court (1757–75) and later in France as minister (1776–85). As a man of letters, Franklin produced his masterly Autobiography, as well as many political, scientific and witty casual pieces. His early strain for self-improvement was projected into his gospel for social betterment; his originality and audacity made him one of America's great practical men.

The Dogood Papers (1722); Articles of Belief and Acts of Religion (1728); Experiments and Observations on Electricity (1751–53); Observations Concerning the Increase of Mankind (1755); Journal of the Negotiations for Peace (1782); Autobiography (1st authentic ed. Bigelow, 1868).—The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, ed. A. H. Smyth (10 vols, 1905–07); numerous collections of letters.

C. Van Doren, B. F. (1938); P. L. Ford, The Many-Sided F. (1899); J. Parton, Life and Times of B. F. (2 vols, 1864). H.L.C.

Franzén, FRANZ MICHAEL (*Uleåborg, Finland 9 II 1772; †Västernorrland 14 VIII 1847), Swedish bishop and poet. He made his mark as a lyric poet in Stockholms-posten (1793) and soon became popular for his romantic and graceful verse. He hated French literary fashions and much admired Shakespeare and the English pre-romantics; his Sång öfver grefve Gustaf Philip Creutz (an elegy on the poet Creutz) helped on romanticism and the new humanism in later Swedish literature. After ordination in 1803 his literary bent changed, and he developed into one of Sweden's foremost hymn-writers, his works showing a happy blend of deep devotion and poetic feeling, often admixed with child-like piety.

Skaldestycken (1810; 7 vols, 1824–61); Skrifter i obunden stil (1835); Predikningar (5 vols, 1841–45); Strödda predikningar och smärre andliga skrifter (1852); Minnesteckningar (3 vols, 1848–60); Samlade dikter (1867–69).

C. D. af Wirsén, Minne af F. M. F. (1887); S. Ek, Franzéns Åbodiktning (1916). C.H.K.

Franzos, KARL EMIL (*Czortkow, Galicia 25 X 1848; ∞Ottilie Benedikt; †Berlin 28 I 1904), Austrian novelist and essayist. Preoccupied with sociological subjects, one main aspect being the assimilation of the Jews into a non-Jewish society. He was the first to realize the greatness of the dramatist Georg Büchner.

Ein Kampf ums Recht (2 vols, 1882), For the Right, tr. J. Sutter (1887); Der Präsident (1884), The Chief Justice, tr. M. Corbet (1890), dram. version (1892), The Judge: a Play in four acts, tr. T. J. Block (1915); Die Juden von Barnow (1877), The Jews of Barnow, tr. M. W. Macdowall (1882); Tragische Novellen (1886); Aus Halb-Asien (1876).

A. Klaar, 'K. E. F.', in Biogr. Jahrb., 10 (1907); L. Geiger, 'K. E. F.', in Jahrb. für jüd. Gesch. u. Lit., II (1908). R.W.L.

Frater Jocundus, pseud. for MÜLLER, WILHELM.

Frauenlob, HEINRICH VON MEISSEN called (†Mainz 1318), 'the first of the mastersingers'. After protracted schooling (at Meissen ?) and a public career as 'occasional' poet at the North and East German courts (1275–1312) he settled in Mainz. In his poetry art becomes craftsmanship and statement gives way to disquisition: 'baroque' virtuosity of allusion and metaphor led in the 19th century to the belief that he was mad. The descent to the mastersingers is steep but direct. His main works are three Leiche, one of them on the Virgin (hence 'Frauenlob'), a dozen lyrics and some 400 stanzas of Spruchdichtung.

Ed. L. Ettmüller (1843); Dt. Liederd., ed. K. Bartsch–W. Golther (1928); L. Pfannmüller, F.s Marienleich (1913); H. v. M. called Frlb., The lay of our Lady, tr. A. E. Kröger (1877).

Full account and vindication: G. Rosenhagen in W. Stammler, Die dt. Lit. des MAs, Verfasserlex., I (1933); M. O'C. Walshe, 'F. Profile', in Germ. Life and Letters, 5 (1952). F.P.P.

Fraunce, Abraham (*Shrewsbury c. 1558–60; †c. 1633–34), English lawyer, poet and critic, educated at Shrewsbury school and St John's College, Cambridge, where he acted in Legge's Ricardus Tertius. Fraunce later held a post in the court of the Marches of Wales. Long in the service of the Herberts at Wilton, he entered that of Sir John Egerton and may have written a masque for the marriage of Lady Magdalen Egerton. Fraunce belonged to the important literary group of the Sidneys. Little read today, his hexameters combine an understanding of medieval alliterative verse with classical strength and a renaissance music. His Arcadian Rhetoric (1588) shows the educated renaissance reader guiding taste with knowledge, and explains much in Shakespeare now ignored.

VERSE: The Countesse of Pembroke's Emanuel (1591), ed. A. B. Grosart (1871).—VERSE TRANSLATION: The Lamentations of Amintas (from Watson and Tasso; 1587; 1588; 1589; 1596); The Countesse of Pembroke's Ivychurch (from Watson, Tasso, Virgil and Heliodorus; 1591).—PROSE ROMANCE: The Third Part of The Countesse of Pembroke's Ivychurch: Aminta's Dale (1592).—PROSE: The Arcadian Rhetorike (1588), ed. E. Seaton (1950).—LATIN COMEDY: Victoria, ed. G. C. Moore Smith, in Bang, XIV (1906). B.L.J.

Fréchette, LOUIS HONORÉ (*Lévis, Que. 16 XI 1839; ∞1876 Emma Beaudry; †Montreal 31 V 1908), French-Canadian poet. He was called to the bar in 1865, but his literary interests prevented him seriously practising law. He worked on newspapers in Chicago and New Orleans, but returned to Canada in 1871 and entered politics. Candidate for the Commons in Lévis several times, he was elected once, in 1874. In 1889 he was appointed clerk of the legislative council of Quebec and held that post until his death. An apt disciple of Victor Hugo, he was the first poet of French Canada to receive the approval of critics in France, and his fifth volume of verse, published in Dijon, was crowned by the French Academy, as were several subsequent volumes. He published three dramas intended for the stage, but his rather rhetorical style was unsuited to that medium.

VERSE: Mes Loisirs (1863); La Voix d'un Exilé (1866); Les Oiseaux de Neige (1880); Les Fleurs Boréales (1881); La Légende d'un Peuple (1887); Les Feuilles Volantes (1891).—Poèmes (3 vols, 1908).—PROSE: Lettres à Basile (1872); Histoire Critique des Rois de France (1881); Originaux et Détraqués (1892); Christmas in French Canada (1899); Noël au Canada (1900).

H. d'Arles, L. F. (1925); M. Dugas, Un Romantique Canadien: L. F. (1934); W. Chapman, Le Lauréat, Critique des Œuvres de M. L. F. (1894); F. Rinfret, L. F. (1906); L. Serre, L. F.: Notes pour servir à la Biographie du Poète (1928). B.K.S.

Frederic, HAROLD (*Utica, N.Y. 19 VIII 1856; †Henley, England 19 X 1898), American novelist and short-story writer; London correspondent for the New York Times. His novels were concerned with social problems.

Seth's Brother's Wife (1887); The Damnation of Theron Ware (1896); Gloria Mundi (1898). H.L.C.

Frederick II, EMPEROR (*Jesi 26 XII 1194; †Fiorentino 13 XII 1250). Of mixed German and Norman blood, left an orphan in childhood and ward of Pope Innocent III, Frederick was proclaimed king of Sicily in 1198 at the latter's instance; and in 1220 was crowned emperor at Rome. After a few years of consolidating his power in Sicily and southern Italy, his desire to assert authority over the whole peninsula brought him into violent and eventually unsuccessful conflict with the papacy and the north Italian communes. His death was virtually the end of the imperial power in Italy. But he survived in another sphere through his magnificent patronage of learning and literature, which made Sicily for a while the centre of Italian culture. The bent of his own remarkable mind was to science rather than poetry, but there is no doubt that the Sicilian School (q.v.), the seed-plot of vernacular verse in Italy, owed a great deal to his patronage and example. Four surviving poems are sometimes ascribed to Frederick, though possibly only two of these were really his.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); A. Monteverdi, 'L'opera poetica di F. II imperatore', in Studi medievali, 17 (1951).

G. A. Cesareo, Le origini della poesia lirica . . . sotto gli Svevi (1924); V. De Bartholomaeis, Primordi della lirica d'arte in Italia (1943); S. Santangelo, in Studi medievali, 17 (1951). K.F.

Frederick II, KING OF PRUSSIA (*Berlin 24 I 1712; † Sanssouci 17 VIII 1786). Frederick, who leaned towards philosophy, letters and the arts, came early into conflict with his father, Frederick William I. He wrote almost exclusively in French, cultivated French literature and rationalistic thought. His Anti-Machiavel (written in 1740) contrasts with his Machiavellian policy after his accession in 1740. Frederick entertained Voltaire at Potsdam from 1750 to 1753. He ignored the revival of German literature during his reign, in his De la littérature allemande (1780) showing no understanding for Klopstock, Lessing or Goethe. He viewed Gellert with qualified approval. Notwithstanding his lack of interest in it, German literature drew inspiration from his vigorous national policy, seeing in him a symbol of revival.

Antimachiavel (1767); Le Miroir des Princes (1744); Histoire de mon temps (1740–45); Histoire de la guerre de sept ans (1763).—Œuvres de Frédéric le Grand (30 vols, 1846–57; Werke Friedrich des Grossen, 10 vols, 1912–14).

T. Carlyle, History of Frederick II of Prussia (6 vols, 1858–66); R. Koser, Geschichte Friedrich des Grossen (4 vols, 1893); G. P. Gooch, Frederick the Great (1947); G. Krause, Friedrich der Grosse und die deutsche Poesie (1884); A. E. Berger, Friedrich der Grosse und die deutsche Literatur (1890); C. Meissner, Der Dichter Friedrich der Grosse (1926); W. Dilthey, 'Friedrich der Grosse und die deutsche Aufklärung', in Gesammelte Schriften, vol. 8 (1931). H.B.G.

Fredro, ALEKSANDER, Count (*Suchorów 20 VI 1793; †Lwów 15 VII 1876), Polish poet and playwright. After returning (1815) from the Napoleonic wars he farmed. He became famous for his comedies (35), and though following French (mostly Molière) and other models he gave them purely Polish features. They are characterized by lively dialogue and a sense of infectious humour. They include comedies of manners (Pan Geldhab, Cudzoziemczyzna), of psychology (Mąż i żona), of character (Zemsta, Pan Benet) and a farce (Damy i huzary). The best (Śluby panieńskie, Pan Jowialski, Zemsta, Dożywocie) were written before 1835; after that, offended by an unjust review by S. Goszczyński, he wrote 15 more but did not show them to anybody.

PLAYS: Pan Geldhab (1826); Mąż i żona (1826); Cudzoziemczyzna (1826); Damy i huzary (1826; Ladies and Hussars, tr. F. Noyes and G. R. Noyes, 1925); Odludki i poeta (1826); Pan Jowialski (1834); Śluby panieńskie (1834; Un vœu de jeunes filles, tr. Ch. Morozowicz, 1836; Maidens' Vows, tr. A. P. and M. M. Coleman, 1940); Zemsta (1834; Die Rache, tr. A. Zipper, 1897); Dożywocie (1838); Dwie blizny (1880); Pan Benet (1880).—MEMOIRS: Trzy po trzy (1880), crit. ed. H. Mościcki (n.d.).—Komedie, crit. ed. E. Kucharski (6 vols, 1926–27).

I. Chrzanowski, O komediach A. F. (1917); T. Sinko, Genealogia kilku typów i figur F. (1918); W. Borowy, Ze studiów nad F. (1921); W. Folkierski, F. a Francja (1925); E. Kucharski, A. F. Życiorys literacki (1926); J. Krzyżanowski, 'A. F. and his comedies', in Polish romantic literature (1930); A. Stefanini, Pessimismo e ottimismo fredriano (1930); T. Żeleński, Obrachunki fredrowskie (1935). S.S.

Fredro, ANDRZEJ MAKSYMILIAN, Count (c.* 1621; †1679), Polish historian and moralist. Courtier, soldier and politician in turn he was an optimistic devotee of the Polish republican tradition. A writer of vast knowledge and wisdom, he was inclined to contradict himself.

Gestorum populi Poloni . . . libri (1652).—Przysłowia mów potocznych . . . (1652); Monita politico-moralia . . . (1664; Instructions morales et politiques; tr. 1700; Staats- und Sittenlehren . . ., tr. 1684, 1698); Scriptorum seu togae et belli notationum fragmenta . . . (1666).

S. Tarnowski, A. M. F. Charakterystyka literacka (1896); L. Kosiński, 'A. M. F. jako pisarz i moralista', in Księga ku uczczeniu S. Dobrzyckiego (1928). S.S.

Free (or Phreas), JOHN (†1465), English humanist, studied and taught medicine in Italy. Shortly before his death he was appointed bishop of Bath and Wells. Included among his works are epistles, verses, epigrams and translations.

Epistolae, ed. J. E. Spingarn (1903); Synesius Cyrensius de laudibus Calvitii, ed. J. Froben (Basle, 1519–21).

R. Weiss, Humanism in England (1941). R.R.R.

Freeman, EDWARD AUGUSTUS (*Harborne 2 VIII 1823; ∞1847 Eleanor Gutch; †Alicante 16 V 1892), English historian. His History of Norman Conquest (5 vols, 1867–79), contending that in essentials Norman Conquest left national life unchanged, is a monument of profound scholarship.

Growth of English Constitution (1872); Chief Periods of European History (1886).

W. R. W. Stephens, Life and Letters of E. A. F. (2 vols, 1895). R.M.H.

Freeman, SIR RALPH (fl. 1610–55), English politician, verse translator and dramatist. He was granted various monopolistic offices and seems to have been of great ability.

DRAMA: Imperiale, A Tragedie (1639, etc.).—TRANSLATION: Lucius Annaeus Seneca, . . . his booke of the Shortnesse of Life (1636; 1663).

C. C. Gumm, 'Sir R. F.'s Imperiale', in S. in Eng. Drama (Ser. I, ed. A. Gaw, 1917). B.L.J.

Freidank (fl. c. 1215–30), German moralist, itinerant poet; active in S.W. Germany; appears to have gone on the crusade of 1228–29. His Bescheidenheit (= discretio, sapientia) epitomizes the 13th-century educated burgher: the extent of his faith (as dogma), his verdict on pope and curia; his attitude towards the empire and the princes, social order, public and private morality. Freidank turns proverbs, quotations from German poets and (possibly) contemporary catch-phrases into pithy statements of generally one or two couplets. He was esteemed down to the renaissance.

Fridankes Bescheidenheit, ed. H. E. Bezzenberger (1872, with ample notes and trs); full selection in J. Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit. IX (notes useless).

Intro. with full biblio. G. Ehrismann, Gesch. d. dt. Lit. . . . des MAs (Schlussbd. 1935); see also S. Singer, Sprichwörter des MAs (1944–47). F.P.P.

Freiligrath, Hermann Ferdinand (*Detmold 17 VI 1810; ∞1840 Ida Melos [†London 1899]; †Canstatt 18 III 1876), German revolutionary poet, whose integrity of purpose wove his life and verse into an emotive symbol independent of literary merit. For the liberal cause he sacrificed a pension granted him by Friedrich Wilhelm IV and accepted exile. Arrested for promoting civil disturbance in 1848 and freed amid popular rejoicing, he spent 1851–67 in London working in a bank, till a subscription raised from all over Germany enabled him to return. He was influenced by Byron and Victor Hugo, whom he translated.

Gedichte (1838); Das malerische und romantische Westfalen (with L. Schücking, 1842); Mein Glaubensbekenntnis (1846); Ça Ira (1846).—Gesammelte Dichtungen (6 vols, 1877); tr. Poems, ed. by his daughter K. F. Kroeker (1872); Ausgewählte Gedichte, ed. R. Buchwald (1947); Poems, ed. M. F. Liddell (1949).

W. Buchner, F., ein Dichterleben in Briefen (2 vols, 1881–82); M. F. Liddell, F. and his times (1930); G. W. Spink, E.s Verbannungsjahre in London (1932); S. Liptzin, Lyric pioneers of modern Germany; studies in German social poetry (1928). H.A.P.

Fremery, Barend de (*Zutphen 25 III 1750; †Rijswijk 9 II 1811), Dutch poet and translator, wrote fluent lyric and erotic verse and prose fragments.

Mijne offeranden aan Apollo en Hymen (3 vols, 1786–90); Mijn letterhof (1798). J.W.W.

Freneau, Philip Morin (*New York 2 I 1752; ∞1789 Eleanor Forman; †New Jersey 19 XII 1832), American poet. Of Huguenot origin, he devoted his life to poetry, liberty and the sea. He held Jeffersonian democratic principles, became the most 'hellishly keen' satirist of the British and the 'Poet of the Revolution'. A newspaper editor and sea captain in the Atlantic coast trade, he wrote popular poems celebrating the American scene in robust American idiom. Most noted are 'The Indian Burying Ground' and 'The Wild Honey Suckle'.

A Poem on the Rising Glory of America (1772); The British Prison-Ship: A Poem (1781).—Poems of P. F., Poet of the American Revolution, ed. F. L. Patee (3 vols, 1902–07).

L. Leary, That Rascal F.: A Study in Literary Failure (1941); M. S. Austin, P. F. (1901). H.L.C.

Frere, John Hookham (*London 21 V 1769; ∞1812 Elizabeth, dowager countess of Erroll; †Pieta, Valetta 7 I 1846), English verse-writer, scholar and translator of Aristophanes. His early contribution to The Anti-Jacobin, Loves of the Triangles (1797–98), a parody of Darwin's Loves of the Plants, and his share in Canning's Knife-Grinder already show sparkling wit and powers of humorous versification which marks the translation of Aristophanes on which his fame rests. His joke, Prospectus and Specimens of an intended National Work, in ottava rima, suggested this stanza to Byron for Beppo.

Aristophanes: Frogs (1839), Acharnians, Knights, Birds (1840).—Works . . . in Verse and Prose (with memoir by Sir Bartle Frere, 3 vols, 1874).

G. Festing, J. H. F. and his Friends (1899). R.M.H.

Frescobaldi, Dino (*Florence c. 1270; †c. 1316), Italian poet. Member of a well-to-do and cultured Florentine family, he belongs to the stil novo group of poets, having a particular affinity to Cavalcanti. Six (probably) canzoni of his survive and a number of sonnets. His style has vigour as well as the conventional polish; his view of love has a bias to pessimism.

Rimatori del dolce stil novo, ed. L. Di Benedetto (1939).

F. Figurelli, Il dolce stil novo (1933); M. Appolonio, Uomini e forme della cultura ital. delle origini. Storia lett. del duecento (1943); G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930). K.F.

Frescobaldi, Leonardo (*Florence 14th century; †15th century?), Italian prose writer. An experienced soldier; the Florentine ambassador in Arezzo (1384); he visited the Holy Land (1384–85) to observe the customs of the people and note strategically on behalf of the king of Naples the nature of the terrain. He wrote a minutely observed account of his adventurous journey which is often considered superior to that of his companion Simone Sigoli.

Viaggi in Terra Santa di L. Frescobaldi e d'altri del sec. XIV, ed. Gargiolli (1862).

A. Gregorini, Le relazioni in lingua volgare dei viaggiatori italiani in Palestina nel secolo XIV (1896). M.W.

Frescobaldi, Matteo (*Florence 1297?; †ibid. 1348), Italian poet, son of Dino Frescobaldi; a 'great gamester' and a bachelor of unconventional habits. Strongly influenced by the dolce stil nuovo, he wrote mannered love sonnets, graceful ballate and three political canzoni lamenting the corruption of Florence and the passing of the old order.

Rime di Matteo e di Dino Frescobaldi, ed. Carducci (1866); Poeti minori del Trecento, ed. Sapegno and Apicella (1952).
S. Debenedetti, 'M. F. e la sua famiglia', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 49 (1907). M.W.

Frese, JACOB (*Viborg, Finland c. 1690; †Stockholm 31 VIII 1729), Swedish poet. He is best known and most important for his more subjective, sometimes pietistic verse, which had considerable influence on lyrical and devotional Swedish poets later in the century.

Valda skrifter, ed. A. Hultin (1902; with biog.).
G. Ljunggren, Minne af skalden J. F. (1867). C.H.K.

Freudenthal, brothers: FRIEDRICH (*Fallingbostel 9 V 1849; †Fintel, Soltau 9 III 1929) and AUGUST (*Fallingbostel 2 IX 1851; †Bremen 6 VIII 1898), literary discoverers of the Lüneburg Heath, later far surpassed by Löns. August, who wrote only High German sketches and poems, is worth mentioning as the founder of the periodical Niedersachsen. Friedrich wrote a number of Low German stories and lyrics.

In de Fierabendstied (1890); In Lust un Leed (1897); Lienhop (1904).—E. Budde and W. Marquardt, F. F. Eine Auswahl aus seinen Werken, I (1939).
G. Kuhlmann, Mitt. Quickborn, 7 (1914); F. Lindemann, Niedersachsen, 34 (1929). G.C.

Frey, JAKOB (*Strasbourg? before 1520; †Maursmünster 1562?), German satirist and dramatist. Famous for collection of tales Gartengesellschaft (1556) meant to pass away summer evenings. Written in Alemannic dialect and with much Alsatian and Swiss local colour, they are humorous, often coarse, and were widely popular.

Gartengesellschaft, ed. J. Bolte (1896).—PLAYS: Abraham; Von dem armen Lazaro; Von einem Krämer oder Triackersmann (all n.d.).
K. Amrain, Deutsche Schwankdichter (1907). D.G.D.

Freytag, GUSTAV (*Kreuzburg, Silesia 13 VI 1816; ∞1847 Emilie Gräfin Dyhrn, ∞1875 Marie Dietrich, ∞1891 Frau Anna Strakosch; †Wiesbaden 30 IV 1895), German dramatist and novelist. Studied Germanic philology at Breslau and Berlin. From 1848, which drew him into national-liberal politics, he edited Die Grenzboten with Julian Schmidt for twenty years. Of his plays only Die Journalisten (1854; tr. R. T. House, 1913) has worn well, but the form of Soll und Haben (1855; Debit and Credit, 1857), his Dickensian novel of commercial life, gained from his dramatic experience. His historical sketches and Technik des Dramas were found intellectually impressive.

PLAYS: Die Valentine (1847); Die Fabier (1859); Graf Waldemar (1850).—NOVELS: Die Verlorene Handschrift (1864; The Lost Manuscript, 1865); Die Ahnen (6 vols, 1872–80; tr. Ingo, 1873; Ingraban, 1873).—VARIOUS: Bilder aus der deutschen Vergangenheit (5 vols, 1859–67; Pictures of German Life); Technik des Dramas (1863; Technique of the Drama, tr. E. J. MacEwan, 1895).—Gesammelte Werke (22 vols, 1886–88); Briefwechsel mit H. von Treitschke, ed. A. Dove (1900), mit Ernst Herzog von Coburg, ed. E. Tempeltey (1904).
J. Hofmann, F. als Politiker, Journalist und Mensch (1922); E. Rothfuchs, Der selbstbiographische Gehalt in F.s Werken (1929); L. M. Price, The attitude of F. and Julian Schmidt towards English Lit. 1848–62 (Göttingen, 1915). H.A.P.

Frezzi, FEDERICO (*Foligno 1346?; †Constance V 1416), Italian poet. Dominican theologian; bishop of Foligno (1404). His Quadriregio (c. 1394–1403) is a heavy allegorical poem conceived in imitation of the Divina Commedia and influenced by Boccaccio's use of mythological imagery. The poem describes the journey of the author (guided by Minerva and St Paul) through the kingdoms of love, Satan, vice and virtue, until his final vision of God.

Il Quadriregio, ed. Filippini (1914).
G. Rotondi, F. F., la vita e le opere (1921); E. Filippini, Studi frezziani (1922). M.W.

Frías, DUQUE DE: see FERNÁNDEZ DE VELASCO.

Frída, EMIL: see VRCHLICKÝ, JAROSLAV.

Friedrich von Hausen (fl. 1170–90), Rhenish minnesinger, vir probus et nobilis in the service of emperor Frederick I; killed in Syria. His father had patronized gleemen (see SPERVOGEL); the son, a knightly amateur, was the first German to adopt the forms and conventions of the Provençal lyric. The careful composition and studied treatment of themes in most of his lyrics is offset in his crusader songs by a more personal note and deep religious feeling.

Minnesangs Frühling, ed. K. Lachmann–C. v. Kraus (1944); an appreciation with some trs in M. F. Richey, Essays on the Med. Germ. Love Lyric (1943).
H. Brinkmann, Fr. v. H. (1948). F.P.P.

Frischlin, Philipp Nicodemus (*Balingen 22 IX 1547; *Hohenurach 30 XI 1590), German neo-Latin dramatist. A brilliant humanist, Frischlin made enemies by his scurrilous satires, was imprisoned in the fortress of Hohenurach and died whilst trying to escape. The last representative of a dying humanism, he wrote Latin plays full of brilliant detail and Aristophanic wit satirizing national vices, poor scholarship and the failings of his colleagues, or, as in Phasma (1580), defending Lutheranism. He also wrote German biblical plays and much indifferent Latin verse.

Julius Caesar redivivus (1572–84), ed. with important intro. W. Janell and W. Hauff (1912); Priscianus vapulans (1578); Frau Wendelgard (1579), ed. A. Kuhn and E. Wiedmann (1908); Operum poeticorum pars scenica (1586); . . . pars elegiaca (1601); Deutsche Dichtungen, ed. D. F. Strauss (1857).

D. F. Strauss, N. F. (1856); E. Neumayer, F. als Dramatiker (Diss. Rostock 1924); G. Bebermeyer, Tübinger Dichterhumanisten (1927). D.G.D.

Frizzoni (Fritschun), Gian Battista (*Schlarigna c. 1725; †ibid. after 1787), Ræto-Romansch poet. Under the influence of the German pietist movement which found many adherents in the Engadine, Frizzoni, protestant pastor in Schlarigna, composed a large number of hymns, mainly translations from German. He collected and edited them; as Cudesch da Schlarigna they are still in use.

Hymns: Canzuns spirituelas (1765, 1840); Testimoniaunza da l'amur stupenda da Gesu Cristo (1787).—Theology: Alchünas domandas davart chiosas fundamentelas (1765, 1776).

H. Hatzfeld, 'F. u. die Entwicklung des rätorom. Kirchenliedes', in Arch. Romanicum, 18 (1933). R.R.B.

Fröding, Gustaf (*Alster 22 VIII 1860; †Gröndal, Djurgården 8 II 1911), Swedish poet and journalist. Descended from Värmland country gentry, who lost their money during his childhood, Fröding studied at Uppsala and was a member of the radical society Verdandi, but never took a degree. He had inherited a tendency to mental instability, which, like his gift for writing poetry, manifested itself early. In 1887 he started writing for Karlstadstidningen. In 1889 his mental condition enforced on him a sojourn at a home in Görlitz (Silesia), and there he matured as a poet, and his first published volume of poems, Guitarr och dragharmonika, appeared in 1891. It contained both sombre and humorous verse; Fröding frequently combines these strains, with his own individual gift of irony. The poems Värmländska låtar, especially, earned him popularity: but he continued diffident about his own powers until the end of his life. In 1891 he returned to the newspaper and remained on it until 1894, when his first serious attack of insanity broke out. Nya dikter (1894) and especially Stänk och flikar (1896) show his increasing mastery of form and matter. The latter contained the celebrated poem 'En morgondröm',which, with its outspoken but honest treatment of sexual love, led to Fröding being prosecuted for pornography. He was acquitted, but the case was a turning-point in his life: he finally broke down in 1898 and had to be confined at Uppsala asylum. Later on he made a partial recovery, was able to travel about with a nurse and died in a private nursing home. He continued writing, though more and more intermittently: the most important of his late work was Gralstänk (1898), a cycle of poems in which he attempted to express the philosophy of life to which he passionately clung, that is, the belief that everything in the world, even what is ugly or evil, has its divine function. Fröding is generally considered to be the greatest lyric poet whom Sweden has yet produced.

Nytt och gammalt (1897); Rägler och paschaser (1895–97); Efterskörd (1910); Reconvalescentia (1913).—Samlade skrifter, ed. R. G. Berg (16 vols, 1917–22).—Kusinbrev från Gustaf Fröding (1916).—For Eng. tr. see N. Afzelius, Books in English on Sweden (Stockholm, 1951).

R. G. Berg, G. F. (1910) and Frödingsstudier (1920); O. Holmberg, F.'s mystik (1921); M. Hellberg, Frödingminnen (1928); J. Landquist, G. F. (1916, repr. 1927); N. Svanberg, V. von Heidenstam och G. F. (1934); H. Olsson, Från Wallin till F. (1939) and F., ett dikterporträtt (1950); S. Sjöholm, Övermänniskotanken i F.'s diktning (1940). B.M.E.M.; A.H.J.K.

Froissart, Jean (*Valenciennes 1337 ?; †1405 ?), French chronicler and poet. He was secretary to Queen Philippa, wife of Edward III (1361–69), parish priest at Estinnes-au-Mont (Belgium), during which period his patron was Wenceslas, king of Bohemia and duke of Brabant (1373–83), and chaplain to Guy de Blois (1383–97). His verse includes a long romance in the Arthurian manner, entitled Meliador, and a large number of lyric poems which, though in the tradition of Machaut, often contain a strong personal element. He is chiefly remembered today by his chronicles, covering events in western Europe (mostly in France, England, Flanders and Spain) from 1325 to 1400. For the period up to Meliador, ed. A. Longnon (3 vols, 1895–99); Poésies, ed. A. Scheler (3 vols, 1869–72); Chroniques, ed. K. de Lettenhove (25 vols, 1867–77), Eng. tr. Lord Berners, ed. W. P. Ker (6 vols, 1901–03).

1356 he draws almost exclusively on Jean le Bel, but the remainder is an original work based on Froissart's own enquiries. Dazzled by the magnificence of the feudal nobility, he fails to note its decadence and the increasing importance of the bourgeoisie. But his imagination and craftmanship show him to be a great writer. While being faithful to such historical facts as he has obtained, he embroiders upon them, and is sometimes prepared to sacrifice chronological accuracy for the sake of a more dramatic narrative. His descriptive gifts are remarkable, whether he is painting battles and festivities on a vast canvas or sketching people with a few deft touches. His style is natural and he has the gift of choosing the right word.

M. Darmesteter, F. (1894); G. L. Kittredge, 'Chaucer and F.', in Eng. Studies, 26 (1899); F. C. Shears, F. chronicler and poet (1930, best study); M. Wilmotte, J. F. (1942); B. J. Whiting, 'F. as poet', in Med. Studies, 8 (1946).
A.H.D.

Fromentin, EUGÈNE (*La Rochelle 24 X 1820; †ibid. 27 VIII 1875), French writer. Fromentin was the son of a picture-loving doctor. He travelled widely, and was a sensitive painter of impressionistic studies of African landscapes before the days of impressionism. He became one of the finest art-critics of his century, and wrote remarkable travel books. But his best-known work is Dominique (1863), an analytical and autobiographical novel, in the tradition of Adolphe and the Princesse de Clèves, which tells, in a style of admirably restrained emotionalism, the story of a hopeless love.

Un été dans le Sahara (1854); Une année dans le Sahel (1858); Les Maîtres d'autrefois (1876); Voyage en Egypte, ed. J. M. Carré (1935).

E. Champion, Essai de bibliographie critique (1924); A. Thibaudet, Intérieurs (1924); C. Raynaud, La genèse de Dominique (1937); V. Giraud, F. (1945).
M.G.; J.P.R.

Frontinus, SEXTUS JULIUS (*c. 30; †c. 104), Roman administrator and engineer, was praetor urbanus in 70, consul suffectus in 75, governor of Britain probably 74–78. He wrote on land-surveying, military strategy, and urban water supply, with ample knowledge and in clear and unadorned Latin.

C. Thulin, Corpus Agrimensorum Romanorum, I (1913); Strategemata, ed. G. Gundermann (1888); De Aquis Urbis Romae, ed. F. Krohn (1922); C. Herschel (1899; with Eng. tr.); Strat. and Aqu., C. E. Bennett and M. B. McElwain (Loeb Libr. 1925).

T. Ashby, The Aqueducts of Ancient Rome (1935); G. Bendz, Die Echtheitsfrage . . . der Strategemata (1938).
J.A.W.

Fronto, MARCUS CORNELIUS (*c. 100; †c. 166), Roman orator, the instructor of Marcus Aurelius, was the leader of literary taste in his day. His favourite authors were Cato, Gracchus, Sallust, Cicero. His correspondence with Marcus Aurelius attests the artificiality of contemporary literary studies, but shows the genuine affection between master and pupil.

Ed. C. R. Haines (Loeb Libr., 2 vols, 1919–20).

M. D. Brock, Studies in Fronto and his Age (1911).
J.A.W.

Fróði, ARI: see ÞORGILSSON.

Froude, JAMES ANTHONY (*Dartington 23 IV 1818; ∞1849 Charlotte Grenfell, ∞1861 Henrietta Warre; †Salcombe 20 X 1894), English historian. Unchallenged among the great prose writers of the 19th century, combining persuasive charm with unrivalled powers of invective, Froude as historian was a storm-centre from the date of his publication of his warmly partisan History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada (12 vols, 1856–70). Passing from the influence of Newman to discipleship of Carlyle, he became the latter's literary executor and ruthless biographer.

England's Forgotten Worthies (paper which inspired Kingsley's Westward Ho, 1852); English Seamen in 16th Century (1895); Ed. Carlyle's Reminiscences (2 vols, 1881); Ed. Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle (1883); Carlyle: A History of the first forty years of his life (2 vols, 1882); Carlyle: A History of his life in London (2 vols, 1884).

H. Paul, Life of J. A. F. (1905); Sir L. Stephen, Studies of a Biographer, III (1902).
R.M.H.

Froumund OF TEGERNSEE (*c. 960; †c. 1008), monk in Tegernsee and in Cologne, author of letters and poems of charm and interest from their personal quality.

K. Strecker, Die Tegernseer Briefsammlung (1925).
F.J.E.R.

Frugoni, CARLO INNOCENZO (*Genoa 22 XI 1692; †Parma 20 XII 1768), Italian poet. Abate galante; Comante Eginetico in Arcadia; a master of versi sciolti and the 'verse that sounds and does not create'; poet laureate at the Farnese and Bourbon courts, Parma. With improvisatory facility Frugoni wrote eclogues, historical sonnets, heroic odes, solemn encomiums, operatic libretti and an abundance of occasional verse adorned with mythological imagery.

Opere poetiche, ed. C. I. Frugoni (10 vols, 1779; 15 vols, 1779–80); Poeti erotici del sec. XVIII, ed. Carducci (1878, selection).
E. Bertana, In Arcadia (1909); C. Calcaterra, Storia della poesia frugoniana (1920). M.W.

Fruytiers, Jan (†c. 1580), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition. As factor of the Chamber 'De Roode Angieren' at Rijnsburg he contributed to the competitions at Rotterdam (1561) and Brussels (1562). At Antwerp, in 1564, he edited an edition of Het Leenhof der Ghilden by Jan van den Berghe. His Ecclesiasticus in verse is proof that he had gone over to the new faith. After his flight to East Friesland he wrote Schriftmetige gebeden (1573) and other works, including a description of the siege of Leiden, of which he was an eye witness. Fruytiers was a skilful Rederijker, a man of lively interests and a sturdy Protestant in which latter quality he translated a number of anti-Catholic French writings and tried new ways in the spiritual song.

Ecclesiasticus, ed. D. F. Scheurleer (1898).
F. K. H. Kossmann in Nieuw Nederl. Biogr. Wdb., VI; W. A. P. Smit, Dichters der Reformatie (1939). J.J.M.

Füetrer, Ulrich (fl. 1450–1500), German poet and painter of Landshut, Bavaria. From about 1460 he compiled for duke Albrecht III a Buch der Abenteuer. It retells, in an approximation to the manner of Wolfram v. Eschenbach and in the 'Titurel stanza', the stories of the notable and some of the minor court romances—a genteel memorial to the age of chivalry.

No complete ed.; see biblio. under Albrecht v. Scharfenberg. A. Carlson, U. F. und sein Iban (1927, includes a text); J. Boyd, U. F.'s Parzival (1936). F.P.P.

Fujiwara Akihira (*989; †8 XI 1066), Japanese writer and scholar of Chinese learning.

Letters: Unshū shōsoku (date uncertain), Ger. tr., C. Scharschmidt, 'Die Briefsammlung des Unshū', in Ostasiatische Studien, XX (1917), XXI (1918).—Anthology: Honchō monzui (c. 1038–45). E.B.C.

Fujiwara no Ietaka (*1158; †Kyoto 5 V 1237), Japanese poet, one of the compilers of Shinkokinshū (q.v.).

A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Fujiwara no Kintō (*Kyoto 966; †ibid. 4 II 1041), Japanese poet and scholar. A member of the powerful Fujiwara family, he held a series of appointments in the imperial court: but he is best known for his poems, his collections of poems by contemporary poets and his critical and scholarly books on the technique of Japanese poetry.

Collections: Sanjūrokunin sen (date unknown); Wakan rōei shū (1013); Kingyokushū (date unknown).—Criticism: Waka kubon (date unknown).
O. Benl, 'Fujiwara Kintō', in Mon. Nipponica, IV (1941). E.B.C.

Fujiwara no Sadaie or Teika (*Kyoto 1162; †ibid. 26 IX 1241), Japanese poet and scholar. Son of Fujiwara no Toshinari, he outshone his father as a court poet. He was a prolific writer and was highly regarded as a scholar and critic of poetry: apart from being one of the compilers of the Shinkokinshū (q.v. 1201–06) he himself received in 1232 an imperial order to compile the Shin chokusenshū, another anthology. He is credited, perhaps wrongly, with the Hyakunin isshu, a short and over-rated collection of earlier poetry. His own poems are passionate, lighthearted and elaborate.

Shin chokusenshū (1232–34); Hyakunin isshu (date unknown), Eng. tr. W. N. Porter, A Hundred Verses from Old Japan, 1909; C. MacCauley, 'Single Songs of a Hundred Poets', in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, XXVII, 1899.
A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Fujiwara no Tadahira: see Engishiki (in Part I).

Fujiwara no Toshinari or Shunzei (*Kyoto 1114; †ibid. 22 XII 1204), Japanese poet and scholar. Besides compiling a poetical anthology, Senzaishū (1183–88), and a work of poetical criticism, Korai fūtaishō (1201), he was a poet well known for his tranquil, beautiful style.

A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Fujiwara no Yoshitsune (*1169; †Komatsudani, Yamashiro 16 IV 1206), Japanese tanka poet, scholar and diarist.

A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Fujiwara Seika, pseud. of Fujiwara Shuku (*Hosogawa, Harima 1561; †Ichihara, nr Kyoto 19 X 1619), Japanese philosopher, scholar and writer. Abandoning Buddhism, he expounded Confucianism as explained in the commentaries of Chu Hsi and other Chinese scholars of the Sung period (960–1279). He was patronized by the shogun Tokugawa Ieyasu.

Kana seiri (date of composition uncertain).
A. Lloyd, 'Historical Development of the Shushi (=Chu Hsi) Philosophy in Japan', in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, 34 (1907). E.B.C.

Fukuzawa Yukichi (*Osaka 29 I 1836; †Tokyo 3 II 1901), Japanese writer. He was the most prominent among several authors who, after the reopening of Japan in 1853, devoted themselves to spreading information about the learning, ethics, laws, customs, economics, politics and sciences of Europe and America.

Seiyō jijō (1866); Fukuō jiden (1899; Eng. tr., E. Kiyooka, The Autobiography of F. Y., 1934). E.B.C.

Fulbert of Chartres (*c. 975; †1029), of lowly birth, studied at Reims and had Robert of France as fellow pupil. He became chancellor and finally bishop at Chartres, where he made the cathedral school famous. Besides his medical studies he read the ancients and wrote rhythmical and quantitative verse, including a charming poem on the nightingale.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 141; Anal. Hymn., 50.
H. Johnstone, 'F., Bishop of Chartres', in Church Quart. Rev. (1926). F.J.E.R.

Fulcher of Chartres (*1059; †c. 1127), French chronicler. In 1095 he took the cross and went as a chaplain on the first crusade, being present at the storming of Jerusalem. He had been at first with Robert, duke of Normandy, but he attached himself to Baldwin, king of Jerusalem, with whom he remained. His Historia Iherosolymitana is an account of his own experiences and of the crusade generally, down to the reign of Baldwin II.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 155; Recueil des historiens des croisades, 3 (1866). F.J.E.R.

Fulgentius, Fabius Planciades (fl. c. 500), Christian author of Mythologiarum libri III (a collection of myths allegorically expounded), Expositio Sermonum Antiquorum (a glossary of obsolete expressions), Virgiliana Continentia (an allegorical exposition of Virgil's poems, particularly the Aeneid) and De Aetatibus Mundi et Hominis (an analogy between an individual human life and world history). He was highly esteemed in the middle ages, but his works are uniformly contemptible in thought, form and language.

Ed. R. Helm (1898); A. van Staveren, Mythographi Latini (Leiden 1742, with comm.).
O. Friebel, F. der Mythograph und Bischof (1911; identifies him with F., bishop of Ruspe c. 508). J.A.W.

Fuller, Sarah Margaret (*Cambridgeport, Mass. 23 V 1810; ∞1848 ? Marquis Ossoli; †New York harbour 19 VII 1850), American translator, editor, feminist. Member of the Transcendental Club, she edited The Dial, later became literary critic of the New York Tribune. On her trip abroad she wrote reports on social conditions; returning, she, her child and Italian husband were drowned in a shipwreck.

Summer on the Lakes, in 1843 (1844); Woman in the 19th Century (1845); Papers on Literature and Art (1846).—Translations: Eckermann's Conversations with Goethe (1839).—The Writings of M. F., ed. M. Wade (1941).
M. Wade, M. F.: Whetstone of Genius (1940); M. B. Stern, The Life of M. F. (1942). H.L.C.

Fulwell, Ulpian (fl. 1586; ∞Naunton 1572 Eleanor [?]), English poet from Somerset, a writer of prose and verse, best known for the interlude Like wil to Like (1568), and his Flower of Fame resembling the Mirror for Magistrates. B.L.J.

Funya no Yasuhide (*c. 830; †c. 890), Japanese poet often quoted in Kokinshū (q.v.).

A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Fūrai Sanjin: see Hiraga Gennai.

Furetière, Antoine (*Paris 28 XII 1619; †Paris 14 III 1688), French poet and novelist. His Roman Bourgeois (1666), one of the few realistic novels of the time, describes Parisian legal and middle-class characters. He wrote fables in imitation of La Fontaine. Of independent temperament, Furetière was expelled from the French Academy in 1684 for attempting to forestall the official dictionary with a (better) dictionary of his own, publication of which was delayed until after his death. He avenged himself by writing his Factums (1685), containing uncomplimentary portraits of Academicians.

Le Roman Bourgeois, ed. Fournier and Asselineau (1854); Fables morales et nouvelles (1671); Factums, ed. Asselineau (2 vols, 1859); Dictionnaire universel (Rotterdam, 1690).
G. Reynier, Le Roman réaliste au 17e siècle (1914); D. F. Dallas, Le Roman français de 1660 à 1680 (1932). G.B.

Furphy, Joseph: see Collins, Tom.

Furukawa Mokuami: see Mokuami.

Füssli, Johann Heinrich, anglicized Henry Fuseli (*Zurich 7 II 1741; †London 16 IV 1825), Swiss painter and writer.

Füssli fled for political reasons in 1763 and settled in London, becoming president of the Royal Academy. His pictures are counterparts of the gothic tale of horror; they include scenes from Shakespeare and Milton. He wrote vigorous verse and collaborated with Lavater in the Physiognomische Fragmente.

Oden (1760 and 1781); Lectures on Art (1801 ff.).—Sämtliche Werke (1807); Works (3 vols, 1831).
J. Knowles, Life of H. F. (1831); A. Federmann, J. H. F. (1927). H.B.G.

Fustel de Coulanges, NUMA DENIS (*Paris 18 III 1830; †Massy 12 IX 1889), French historian. Fustel de Coulanges taught at the university of Strasbourg and later at the Sorbonne. From 1880 to 1883 he was director of the École Normale. As an historian he chiefly studied the institutions of antiquity in their relationship to moral and religious beliefs. His most important book, La Cité Antique (1864), though its scholarship is now outdated, has survived by reason of its rigorous method and rare stylistic distinction.

Histoire des Institutions politiques de l'ancienne France (6 vols, 1875–92); Questions historiques (1893).
E. Champion, Les Idées politiques et religieuses de F. de C. (1903); J.-M. Tourneur-Aumont, F. de C. (1931). M.G.; J.P.R.

Futabatei SHIMEI, pseud. of HASEGAWA TATSUNOSUKE (*Edo (=Tokyo) 10 III 1864; †at sea 10 V 1909), Japanese novelist and writer. His first novel, Ukigumo (1888), written in colloquial language under the guidance of Tsubouchi Shōyō had much influence on his contemporaries. In spite of this success, he turned to the translation of Russian novels and between 1888 and 1904 produced masterly versions of books of Turgenev, Tolstoy, Gorky etc. In 1904 he joined a newspaper's editorial staff, and in 1906 returned to novel-writing with Sono omokage (about adoption in the Japanese family system). His third and last novel Heibon (1907) was virtually an autobiography. His novels depict his sensitive emotions, his philosophical doubts and inner struggles.

Sono omokage (An Adopted Son, tr. B. Mitsui and G. M. Sinclair, 1919); Heibon (Mediocrity, tr. G. W. Shaw, 1927). E.B.C.

Fuzulî, pseud. of MEHMED SON OF SULEYMAN (*Hilla, Iraq 1494; †Bagdad 1555), Turkish poet, the greatest representative of the classical school. In 1534 Suleyman the Magnificent conquered Iraq, and Fuzulî, an already recognized poet, presented a panegyric to the sultan. However, this did not make much difference to his life and fortune, which was very different from that of the Istanbul court poets who enjoyed the favours of sultans and pashas and received high rank. He seems to have led a humble and unhappy life, never leaving his home-land. He died in a plague. His unhappy life seems to match his extremely sensitive and melancholy mood which always dwells on sorrow and suffering.

Apart from his book of lyrics and various other poems and treatises, his masterpiece is the romance of the unhappy love of Leyla and Mecnun—a theme common to Moslem literature—which contains some of his best lyrics. His lyrics, written in Azeri Turkish, flow straight from the heart, and despite the restrictive clichés of the conventional classic 'art poétique', he succeeds in communicating his deeply felt emotions in his own personal style.

Külliyat-i Fuzulî (with intro. M. F. Köprülü, 1925); Divan, ed. A. N. Tarlan (1950), selections in E. J. W. Gibb's History of Ottoman Poetry and in M. F. Köprülü's Divan Edebiyati Antolojisi (1934).
M. F. Köprülü, 'F.', in İslam Ansiklopedisi (with crit. biblio., 1947); A. Karahan, F. (1949). F.I.

Gabirol, OR IBN GABIROL, SOLOMON BEN JUDAH (*Malaga c. 1020; †Valencia c. 1057), Spanish Hebrew poet and Arabic philosopher, lived mostly at Saragossa, a protégé of, among others, Samuel ha-Nagid. He began writing poetry at the age of sixteen and at nineteen composed a Hebrew grammar in 400 verses, 'Anaq. Second only to Judah ha-Levi among medieval Hebrew poets, he was a fertile and deeply religious liturgical poet. His secular poetry is mainly concerned with his own cruel fate and his superiority over other poets. In this he followed Arab literary custom, as also in his descriptions of nature. His main philosophical work (Arabic) is fully preserved only in a Latin translation as Fons Vitae; it is in the form of a dialogue, neo-platonic with elements from Aristotle and Philo. It influenced Duns Scotus, the Franciscans, Spinoza and Schopenhauer. In Hebrew translation as Meqor Ḥayyim (only fragments extant) it influenced the Kabbalah. The work contains nothing Jewish; the identity of its author, 'Avicebron', with Gabirol was discovered in 1859 by S. Munk. Gabirol wrote also other ethical works in Arabic; in Hebrew his philosophy is expressed in the poem 'The Royal Crown'.

Poems: Diwan, ed. H. N. Bialik and Y. H. Rawnitzky (3 vols, 1924–29); Selected religious poems, ed. I. Davidson, tr. I. Zangwill (1923); A. Lucas, Songs of Zion (1894).—Philosophy: Fons Vitae, ed. C. Bäumker (2 vols, 1945); Istiṣlāḥ al-akhlāq (The Improvement of Moral Qualities, tr. S. Wise, 1901); Mivḥar ha-Peninim, ed. J. Cohen (1925; Choice of Pearls, tr. B. H. Ascher, 1859).

H. Adler, Ibn Gebirol and his influence upon scholastic philosophy (1865); K. Dreyer, Die religiöse Gedankenwelt des Salomon Ibn Gebirol (1930); J. M. Millás Vallicrosa, Šelomó ibn Gabirol como poeta y filósofo (1945). C.R.

Gaboriau, Emile (*Saujon 9 XI 1835; †Paris 28 IX 1873), French novelist. Gaboriau, who acted for a time as secretary to Paul Féval, is one of the early masters of the detective novel. His detective, Lecoq, with his keen powers of observation, is an ancestor of Sherlock Holmes.

L'Affaire Lerouge (1866); Le Dossier No. 133, Le Crime d'Orcival, Les Esclaves de Paris (1867); Monsieur Lecoq (1869).

M. Topin, Romanciers contemporains (1881); R. Messac, Le 'detective novel' et la pensée scientifique (1929); F. Fosca, Histoire technique du roman policier (1937). T.W.

Gabriel, Luci (*Flem 1597; †Glion 1663), Ræto-Romansch Reformer and writer, the son of Steffan Gabriel. Principally known for his excellent translation of the New Testament into the Romansch dialect of the Rhine valley ('surselvan'); also for his religious poems and writings. His son, Steffan the younger, collaborated with friends of his father to complete the translation of the Bible into the same dialect.

Ilg Niev Testament (1648); Ilg chiet d'ils Grischuns, quei eis treis canzuns, cun las qualas las treis Ligias vengian lavantadas si à defender lur libertad. . . . (1660); La S. Bibla quei ei tut la Soinchia Scartira . . . (with Steffan Gabriel; 1717–19). R.R.B.

Gabriel, Steffan (*Ftan c. 1565; †Glion 1638), Ræto-Romansch poet and Reformer. Of Engadine birth, he furthered the cause of the Reformation in the Rhine valley and played an important political role. Part of his pastoral endeavour was the publication of hymns, written in a vigorous and familiar idiom, and of devotional works.

Ilg vêr sulaz da pievel giuvan (1611); Uenna stadera de pasar quala seig la vera cardienscha (1649). R.R.B.

Gabriel y Galán, José María (*Frades de la Sierra, Salamanca 1870; †Guijo de Granadilla, Cáceres 1905), Spanish poet. Son of a land worker he was a school teacher at seventeen. He became suddenly famous with a poem, El ama (1901). He sang well what he knew well: the patriarchal, rural life of Castile. Soaked in traditional and classic rural poetry he is too sincere to be dismissed as a mere 'lyricist of realism'.

Obras completas (2 vols, 1905); 2 poems, 'The Lord' and 'To a Rich Man', tr. T. Walsh, in Hispanic Anthology (N.Y., 1920).

A. Revilla Marcos, J. M. G. y G., su vida y sus obras, with intro. by Unamuno (1923). R.M.N.

Gabryella: see Zmichowska, Narcyza.

Gace Brulé (†after 1212), French lyric poet. He seems to have been of aristocratic origin and at one time to have been associated with Geoffrey Plantagenet, duke of Brittany (†1186) and possibly also with Geoffrey's half-sister, Marie de Champagne. Thirty-two of his chansons d'amour and one jeu-parti are extant; 24 other poems are of doubtful attribution. He treats the conventional courtly themes along rather grave and serious lines.

G. Huet, Les Chansons de G. B. (1902). F.W.

Gaddesden, John of (c.* 1280; †1361), London physician; author of a famous treatise on medicine, Rosa Medicinae.

H. P. Cholmeley, J. of G. and the Rosa Medicinae (1912). S.J.L.

Gager, William (fl. 1580–1609), English divine, Student of Christ Church, Oxford, who wrote and staged tragedies in Greek in the university and defended the academic stage, notably against the Puritan, Rainoldes.

Meleager, Tragoedia nova (1592); Oedipus (repr. in Studies in Philol. 1949); MS. Letters: Corpus Christi MS. 352, 6 and *Univ. Coll. MS. J*18.

F. S. Boas, University Drama in the Tudor Age (1914). B.L.J.

Gaguin, Robert (c.* 1425; †1502), French statesman and author, general of the Trinitarians from 1473.

Compendium de origine et gestis Francorum (Paris, 1497; 2nd enlarged ed. 1500); Epistolae et orationes (Paris, 1498); Les grandes chroniques . . . des roys de France, a translation of the Compendium (1514), ed. L. Thuasne (1903).

Gaillard, Auger (*Rabastens, c. 1530; †1594), French artisan poet. A Protestant and friend of Du Bartas, he wrote rough and savoury verse in both the Languedocian dialect and in French.

Las Obros (1579); Lou Libre Gras (n.d.); Lou Banquet (1583); Les Amours prodigieuses d'A. G. (1592).—Poésies languedociennes et françaises d'A. G., pub. G. de Clausade (Albi, 1843).

L. Campistron, 'A. G.', in Mélanges Couture (1902); P. Jourda, 'A. G. et la Pléiade', in Rev. d'Hist. Litt. (1929). G.B.

Gaimar, GEOFFREY (fl. 1140 ?), Anglo-Norman writer of a verse chronicle of England from Arthur to William II (including the legendary Haveloc).

Lestorie des Engles solum la translacion maistre Geffrei Gaimar, ed. T. D. Hardy and C. T. Martin (2 vols, 1888–89); Le Lai d'Haveloc, and G.'s Haveloc Episode, ed. A. Bell (1925).

A. Bell, 'Maistre Geffrei Gaimar', in Medium Aevum, 7 (1938); J. S. P. Tatlock, The Legendary History of Great Britain (1950). R.W.B.

Gainsford, THOMAS (†c. 1624), English miscellaneous writer who served in Ireland against the Spaniards at Kinsale (1601) and against Tyrone in Ulster. He undertook to occupy land in the Ulster plantation (1610). Possibly the author of The Rich Cabinet (1616) which attacks the stage, Gainsford wrote prose fiction, history and the journalistic History of the Earl of Tyrone (1619). He also wrote the topographical The Glory of England (1618; 1619; 1620). B.L.J.

The Rich Cabnit (1616), part repr. W. C. Hazlitt (1869); The Historie of Trebizond (1616). J.R.B.

Gaj, LJUDEVIT (*Krapina 8 VII 1809; †Zagreb 20 IV 1872), Croat philologist and writer. Early he developed an interest in Croat language and literature, publishing his first poem, Luna, in the local kajkavski dialect at the age of seventeen. Whilst studying at Graz and Budapest, he became influenced by the common aspirations of Slovenes, Serbs and Croats who formed the Illyrian club, and later by the poems, in štokavski, of Vuk Karadžić and the ideas of the Slav scholars Kolar and Kuharski, the latter of whom was attempting to work out an orthography suitable for use in all the Slav languages. In 1830 he published his first essay advocating adoption by Croat writers of reformed orthography based on the principle of one symbol for each phonetic sound, as in cyrillic; he later urged adoption of the nobler and more universal štokavski in place of the kajkavski dialect. On returning to Zagreb, he founded the newspaper Danica (1835–49, and in 1853 and 1863), as a mouthpiece for what became known as the Illyrian movement and he also visited Russia and Serbia to gain support for his ideas. Although he produced no outstanding literary work himself, his reforms made possible the flowering of an integrated Yugoslav literature.

Kratka osnova horvatsko-slavenskoga pravopisanja (1830).

V. Deželić, Dr L. G. (1910). S.C.

Galen (*Pergamum A.D. 129), Greek medical writer who came to be court physician of Marcus Aurelius. He was a philosopher as well as a doctor. He is especially important as an anatomist and as a physiologist, and in particular investigated the functions of the spinal cord.

Complete ed. by C. G. Kühn (1821, with Latin tr.); various books in the Corpus Medicorum and the Teubner Collection; the Historia Philosophica in H. Diels, Doxographi Graeci; Eng. tr. in A. J. Brock, On Natural Faculties (1916).

C. Singer, Greek Biology and Greek Medicine (1922). T.B.L.W.

Galeota, FRANCESCO (†1497), Italian poet. A Neapolitan nobleman, he travelled widely as diplomat and pilgrim, and wrote artificial strambotti in imitation of Petrarch and Ovid. His most successful compositions are his 'canzoni di canto' (ballate).

Barzellette napoletane del Quattrocento, ed. E. Pèrcopo (1893).

F. Flamini, 'F. G. e il suo inedito canzoniere', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 20 (1892). P.McN.

Galiani, FERDINANDO (*Chieti 2 XII 1728; †Naples 30 X 1787), Italian writer. Abate; economist; an admirer of Vico; secretary to the Neapolitan ambassador, Paris (1759–69); a friend and critic of Diderot and the encyclopaedists. Galiani wrote Della moneta (1750)—an economic treatise anticipating modern theories of value—and 8 dialogues in French on the corn trade, demonstrating the necessity of adapting political economy to local conditions. Other works include translations from Locke, philological treatises, a valuable correspondence with Mme d'Épinay, and Socrate immaginario (1775), a masterpiece of Neapolitan opera buffa written in collaboration with G. B. Lorenzi (music by Paisiello).

Della moneta, ed. Nicolini (1916); Dialogues sur le commerce des blés (London, 1770); Correspondence, ed. Perey and Maugras (2 vols, Paris, 1881); Socrate immaginario, ed. Scherillo (1886); Del dialetto napoletano, ed. Nicolini

(1923).—Le più belle pagine di F. G., ed. Flora (1927).

F. Nicolini, Il pensiero dell'abate G. (with biblio., 1909). M.W.

Galib, Şeyh, pseud. of Mehmed Esad (*Istanbul 1757; †ibid. 1798), Turkish poet. Educated by his father, who was a Mowlavi (dancing dervish), he joined the order. Protected by sultan Selim III, who admired his work, he became the shaik of the Galata monastery. He is the last of the five great poets of the classical school. His poems, despite conventional form and technique, are original and fresh and his allegorical romance Hüsn ü Aşk ('Beauty and Love') is a riot of colour and imagery.

M. F. Köprülü, Divan Edebiyati Antolojisi (1934). F.I.

Galilei, Galileo (*Pisa 15 II 1564; †Arcetri, Florence 8 I 1642), Italian scientist. His first discoveries date from 1583; his teaching career, from 1589. After Galileo returned to Tuscany he awakened the opposition of the Aristotelians; and when he proved that the Copernican system was well founded, they suggested that his conception of the universe ran contrary to Scripture, thus rousing the Inquisition. The Holy Office finally forced Galileo to abjure his theory and deprived him of his freedom for the rest of his life. Galileo has a great place in literature because of his elegant, spontaneous, crystal-clear, forceful prose style, unsurpassed in his century.

Sidereus Nuncius (1610; The Sidereal Messenger, tr. E. S. Carlos, 1880); Il Saggiatore (1623); Dialogo sopra i due massimi sistemi (1632; The Systeme of the World, tr. T. Salusbury, 1661); Dialoghi delle nuove scienze (1638; Mathematical discourses concerning two new sciences, tr. T. Weston, 1730).—Edizione Naz. delle Opere di G., ed. A. Favaro and I. Del Lungo (20 vols, 1890–1909).

K. von Gebler, G. G. e la Curia Romana (tr. from Ger., 2 vols, 1879); A. Favaro, G. G. e lo Studio di Padova (2 vols, 1883); F. R. Wegg-Prosser, G. and his Judges (1889); A. Carli and A. Favaro, Bibliografia Galileiana (1896); J. J. Fahie, G., his life and work (1903); N. Vaccaluzzo, G. G., Vita e Opere (1912); U. Bosco, 'G. G. Scrittore', in La Cultura (1932); G. Bertoni, 'La lingua di G.', in Lingua e Pensiero (1932); F. S. Taylor, G. and the Freedom of Thought (1938); N. Sapegno, 'G. Scrittore', in Atti e Memorie degli Arcdai, S. 3, I (1944). U.L.

Gallardo y Blanco, Bartolomé José (*Campanario 1776; †Alcoy 1852), Spanish writer and scholar. He studied medicine and took an active part in politics which, with his wit and outspokenness, sent him several times into exile. His posthumous work on rare books is a scholarly masterpiece. His biting satires are written in a pure and agile style. Also of considerable interest are his canciones and his erotic and burlesque poetry. His famous poem Blanca Flor (1828) is an excellent example of early romanticism.

Obras, ed. P. Sáinz Rodríguez, in Clásicos Olvidados, 1 and 2 (1928).

P. Sáinz Rodríguez, 'Estudio sobre la crítica literaria en España. Don B. J. G. y la crítica literaria de su tiempo', in Rev. Hisp. (1921); M. Marqués Merchán, Don B. J. G. (1921). R.M.N.

Gallego, Juan Nicasio (*Zamora 1777; †Madrid 1853), Spanish poet; a friend of Meléndez Valdés. He took religious orders at Salamanca. Persecuted as a liberal, he later held political and cultural posts. His best poems — romanticism bursting through a neo-classical form—are the vigorous though oratorical elegy Al dos de Mayo, the elegy on the death of the duchess of Frías and some fine sonnets.

Obras poéticas, ed. Ac. Esp. (1854); Poesías, in Bibl. Autores Esp., 67; The Second of May (Eng. tr. 1819).

M. Núñez Arenas, 'Miscelánea romántica', in Bol. M. Pelayo, 9 (1927). R.M.N.

Gallina, Giacinto (*Venice 1852; †ibid. 1897), Italian actor-manager and playwright, author of comedies in the Venetian dialect and regarded as the best of the imitators of Goldoni. Among his most characteristic are Una famegia in rovina, Zente refada, Mia fia and La famegia del santolo.

Teatro completo di G. G., ed. D. Varagnolo (18 vols, 1922–30).

B. Croce, La lett. della nuova Italia, 3 (1915); I. Sanesi, La Commedia, 2 (1935). B.R.

Gallus, Gaius Cornelius (c.* 69; †26 b.c.), Roman politician and poet. First prefect of Egypt under Augustus, he committed suicide after recall and banishment. Though he was of great literary importance for his development of the love-elegy and praised by Virgil, only one genuine line of his work is now extant.

W. Morel, Fragmenta Poetarum Latinorum (1927); J. del Maestro, De C. Corneli Galli scriptis (1913); F. Skutsch, Aus Vergils Frühzeit (1901) and Gallus und Vergil (1906). A.J.D.

Galt, John (*Irvine 2 V 1779; ∞1812 Elizabeth Tilloch; †Greenock 11 IV 1839), Scottish novelist. Galt travelled to London with an epic poem on the battle of Largs, which proved a fiasco; spent some time in the Levant; became secretary to the Canada Company in 1826, but returned ruined to England and took to literature. His best work is in the presentation of Scottish country and small town life; he has a rich humour, a ready sympathy, and a fine command of the Scots vernacular in all its shades.

The Ayrshire Legatees (1820); Annals of the Parish (1821); The Steamboat (1822); The Provost (1822); Sir Andrew Wylie (1822); The Entail (1823); The Gathering of the West (1823); The Omen (1825); The Last of the Lairds (1826); Lawrie Todd (1830); Life of Byron (1830).— Works, ed. D. S. Meldrum and W. Roughead (10 vols, 1936).

R. K. Gordon, G. (1920); G. Kitchin, 'J. G.', in Edinburgh Essays on Scots Literature (1933); J. W. Aberdein, J. G. (1936). J.K.

Galván, Manuel de Jesus (*Santo Domingo 1834; †1910), author of El Enriquillo (1892; written 1879), an historical novel on the earliest period of Spanish colonization in his native island, based to some extent on the writings of Bartolomé de las Casas. E.Sa.

Galvão, António (*1490 ?; †Lisbon 11 III 1557), Portuguese historian. His account of the Portuguese discoveries in the East, where he spent most of his life (governor of Moluccas, 1536–40), was one of the works that helped to divulge knowledge of the newly discovered territories in Europe.

Tratado . . . de todos os descobrimentos antigos e modernos, etc. (1563), ed. Visconde de Lagoa and E. Sanceau with mod. version by C. Pegado (1944); The discoveries of the world, etc., tr. R. Hakluyt (1601; new ed. with Port. text ed. C. D. R. Bethune, 1862). T.P.W.

Gálvez de Montalvo, Luis (*Guadalajara 1549 ?; †Palermo ? 1591 ?), Spanish novelist and poet. He lived in the household of the Mendozas. His elegant pastoral El pastor de Fílida is a roman à clef, which includes Ercilla and Figueroa as well as his patron. His charming octosyllabic lyrics show Castillejo's influence. He also translated Tansillo's Lacrime.

El pastor de Fílida, Nue. Bibl. Autores Esp., VII (1905–17); Las lágrimas de San Pedro, Bibl. Autores Esp., 35 (1849).

H. A. Rennert, The Pastoral Spanish Romances (1892). E.M.W.

Gama, Duarte da (fl. c. 1490), Portuguese poet. A courtier and a severe critic of contemporary manners, he is one of the best satiric poets in the Cancioneiro Geral (1516). (See Cancioneiros.)

Cancioneiro geral, III and IV, ed. Gonçalves Guimarães (1910–17). T.P.W.

Gama, José Basilio da (*1754; †Lisbon 1795), Brazilian poet of the Mineira school of the South. Educated in Portugal and Italy, his taste was formed by Italian neoclassicism. He wrote his masterpiece, O Uraguay, in Portugal. It is a narrative poem on the war waged by Spain and Portugal on the Indians of the Jesuit Reductions, and is very anti-Jesuit. An anonymous Reposta apologetica was published on behalf of the Jesuits in 1776, at Lugano. O Uraguay shows feeling for nature, a gentle melancholy anticipatory of romanticism, and an idealizing attitude to the Indians.

O Uraguay (subs. spelt Uruguay; Lisbon, 1769; Rio de Janeiro, 1811; Lisbon, 1822, 1845; Rio de Janeiro, 1895); Os campos Elyseos (Lisbon, 1776); Lenitivo da saudade (1788); Quitubia (1791). E.Sa.

Gambara, Veronica (*Pratalboino nr Brescia 30 VI 1485; ∞Gilbert X, lord of Correggio; †Correggio 13 VI 1550), Italian poet. A painstaking Petrarchist, she enjoyed considerable contemporary celebrity, but her verse is vitiated by cold, lifeless artificiality. Patriotism and love for her husband inspired the least insipid of her elegant imitations.

Rime e lettere di V. G., ed. P. M. Chiappetti (1879); Sonetti amorosi inediti o rari di V. G., ed. E. Costa (1890).

C. de Courten, V. G. (1935). P.McN.

Ganivet, Ángel (*Granada 1865; †Riga 1898), Spanish essayist and novelist. After failing to obtain a university chair he entered the consular service and held posts at Antwerp, Riga and Helsinki. He committed suicide. His famous work Idearium español (1897) is an attempt at a philosophical interpretation of Spanish history past and present. After analysing the psychological constitution of Spain and the errors of Spanish foreign policy, Ganivet diagnosed the present Spanish disease as abulia or lack of will-power. Though this short book—or long essay—lacks philosophical system and occasionally drops in tone, it is so provocative, rich in suggestion and true in many of its conclusions that it has exercised a decisive influence on all authors, Spanish or otherwise, writing about Spain. Ganivet's ideas on this subject and those of his friend Unamuno were expounded in an interesting correspondence El porvenir de España (1903). The success of the Idearium has unjustly overshadowed Ganivet's other works: his two intellectual semi-biographical novels La conquista del reino de Maya (1897) and Los trabajos del infatigable creador Pío Cid

(1898); his acute essays on the aesthetic of his native town, Granada la bella (1896); his ironic Cartas finlandesas (1898); his slightly Ibsenian drama El escultor de su alma (1916).

Obras completas (10 vols, 1928–30); Obras completas, ed. Fernández Almagro, with interesting intro. (2 vols, 1943); Spain: An Interpretation, tr. J. R. Carey (1946, with intro. by R. M. Nadal).

M. Fernández Almagro, Vida y obra de A. G. (1925); A. Espina, G., el hombre y la obra (Buenos Aires, 1942); H. Jeschke, 'A. G., seine Persönlichkeit und Hauptwerk', in Rev. Hisp., 72 (1928). R.M.N.

Gansfort, WESSEL (*Groningen c. 1419; †ibid. 4 X 1489), Dutch theologian, the first of the so-called 'biblical humanists'. Brought up and continually in contact with the Modern Devotion, he deviated from this movement as a result of his prolonged stay abroad, mainly at Paris, where, 1454–56 and 1458–74, he taught theology and philosophy, which earned him the sobriquet 'lux mundi'. He also visited Basle, Venice and Rome. From 1475 onwards he was again in the Netherlands where in different monasteries he found the necessary quiet for his studies and meditations. Gansfort's theology, based mainly on the Bible, is characteristic of late-medieval spirituality, sharing its pronounced anti-institutionalism. Luther found an affinity with his own convictions in Gansfort's works.

Opera (1614); E. W. Miller, W. G., life and writings (1917); M. v. Rhijn, W. G. (1917) and Studien over W. G. en zijn tijd (1933); H. J. J. Wachters, W. G. (1940). J.J.M.

Gaon OF WILNA: see WILNA, ELIJAH.

Garay, JÁNOS (*Szekszárd 10 X 1812; ∞1836 Márta Pap, ∞1837 Mária Babocsay; †Pest 5 XI 1853), Hungarian poet, playwright and journalist. Author of many long-forgotten heroic and epic poems, Garay was very popular in his day. He imitated Vörösmarty's ballad style. Háry János, the hero of his best-known verse (Az obsitos: 'The Discharged Soldier' 1843), became a national figure and the subject of Kodály's modern folk-opera.

G. J. összes munkái, ed. J. Ferenczi (1886).

E. Császár, 'G. J.', in Budapesti Szemle (1912). G.F.C.

Garção, PEDRO ANTÓNIO CORREIA (*Lisbon 29 IV 1724; †ibid. 10 XI 1772), Portuguese poet. He studied law at Coimbra and for a time held public office. A sensitive poet, his verse is classical both in inspiration and purity of style. He was one of the first and most distinguished members of the Arcádia Lusitana, founded in 1756.

Obras poéticas, ed. J. A. Correia Garção (1778); Obras poéticas e oratórias, ed. J. A. de Azevedo e Castro (Rome, 1888).

T. Braga, A arcádia lusitana (1898); H. Cidade, Lições de cultura e lit. port., II (1948). T.P.W.

García de la Huerta, VICENTE (*Zafra, Badajoz 1734; †Madrid 1787), Spanish dramatist and writer. He was a protégé of the duke of Alba. For his attack against count Aranda he was deported for 10 years to Orán. He wasted much energy and intelligence in the typical polemics of the period. His famous play Raquel (1778) won him prestige and popularity. Neo-classical in form yet within the 17th-century Spanish tradition, baroque in conception but pre-romantic in treatment, Huerta's tragedies are excellent in their portrayal of character, and written in powerful, inspired style; indeed he left us the only good Spanish tragedy of his century. His edition of Spanish plays is of some interest.

Raquel (Buenos Aires, 1930).—Obras poéticas (2 vols, 1778); 'Poesías', ed. L. A. de Cueto, in Bibl. Autores Esp., 61.

M. Menéndez y Pelayo, Historia de las ideas estéticas, 5 (1901); E. Cotarelo, Estudios sobre la hist. del arte escénico en España (3 vols, 1896–1902). R.M.N.

García de Quevedo, JOSÉ HERIBERTO (*Coro 1819; †Paris 6 VI 1871), Venezuelan poet whose taste was for the long meditative poem of noble aspirations, but whose talent was for the short lyric. He was original in seeking his models in Italy at a time when France dominated Hispanic taste, and he translated and imitated Manzoni with some success. He collaborated with Zorrilla.

Odas a Pío IX y a Italia (Madrid, 1848); El Proscripto (1852); Versos (1857); Leyendas (1857).—Obras poéticas y literarias (2 vols, Paris, 1863). E.Sa.

García Goyena y Gastelú, RAFAEL (*Guayaquil 1776; †Guatemala 1823), Guatemalan fabulist, influenced by Samaniego; though his purpose is moral, there is a complete absence of wounding satire.

Fábulas y poesías varias (1836, 1859, 1892; Madrid, 1894). E.Sa.

García Gutiérrez, ANTONIO (*Chiclana 1813; †Madrid 1884), Spanish dramatist. He interrupted his studies of medicine and ran away to become a soldier. He later served as consul in England, France and Genoa, became director of the archaeological museum and a member of the academy. Following in the wake of Rivas' romantic drama, García Gutiérrez scored his first success with El trovador (1836) when still a soldier. Based on a legendary medieval Aragonese theme, it became famous through Verdi's opera. With García Gutiérrez, Spanish romantic drama turned to historical themes, with liberal, political implications. The best examples are Juan Lorenzo (1865) and, even better, Venganza catalana (1864), based on the old chronicle of Muntaner, an example of restrained tragedy within a romantic pattern. García Gutiérrez combines prose and verse with great subtlety, the latter melodic, sonorous and free from oratory. He excels in his portrayal and understanding of feminine types.

Obras escogidas (1866); Teatro, ed., with intro., Lomba (1925).
N. B. Adams, The Romantic dramas of G. G. (1922). R.M.N.

García Tasara, GABRIEL (*Seville 1817; †Ávila 1875), Spanish poet; sometime ambassador in Washington. Late romanticism takes on, in him, a grandiloquent tone, although at times not lacking in beauty, as in his Himno al Mesías. The influence of his friend Donoso Cortés is perceptible in his treatment of political, social and European themes.

Poesías (1872).
M. Méndez Bejarano, T., nueva biografía crítica (1928). R.M.N.

Garcilaso de la Vega (*Toledo 1503; ∞1528? Elena de Zúñiga; †Nice 1536), Spanish poet. Both courtier and soldier, he was banished to an island in the Danube by Charles V because he connived at the secret marriage of a relative (1532). His best poems were written after this event in Naples. He took part in Charles V's expedition to Tunis. He was killed in an unimportant military engagement near Fréjus.

Garcilaso was an intimate friend of Boscán; he wrote a preface to the latter's translation of Castiglione's Il cortegiano and encouraged him to persevere in the adaptation of Italian metres to Spanish poetry. His own poems, published posthumously with Boscán's by Boscán's widow (1543), far excelled his friend's attempts. He wrote three eclogues, five odes, two elegies and a number of sonnets. His love for a Portuguese lady, Isabel Freyre, who married another man, provided much of his subject matter. He imitated Auzìàs March, Sannazzaro, Virgil and Horace, but his best works—the eclogues and elegies, the late odes and sonnets—are original re-creations in Spanish. His sureness in handling the new metres, the delicacy of his descriptions, his ability to depict the unhappiness of unrequited love, his integrity of expression and intelligent use of classical and Italian models provided the most profound influence on Spanish poetry up to the time of Góngora. He was soon recognized as the 'Prince of Castilian poets'; his reputation has never declined. Commentaries on his works were composed by Sánchez de las Brozas (1574) and Fernando de Herrera (1580).

Obras, ed. T. Navarro Tomás (1911, 1935); Works, ed. H. Keniston (New York, 1925, best ed.); Las obras de Boscán y algunas de Garcilaso de la Vega (facsimile of ed. of Barcelona, 1543; Madrid, 1936); The Works of G. de la V., tr. J. H. Wiffen (1823).
H. Keniston, G. de la V., a critical study of his life and works (New York, 1922); M. Arce Blanco, G. de la V. (1930); R. Lapesa, La trayectoria poética de G. (1948); D. Alonso, Poesía española (1950). E.M.W.

Garcilaso de la Vega, 'EL INCA' (*Cuzco c. 1540; †Cordova 1616?), Spanish historian; the son of a Spaniard and a Peruvian lady. He went to Spain in 1560. The first part of the Comentarios reales (1609) contains the history of Peru before the arrival of the Spaniards; the second (Historia general), the conquest and civil wars, of which his father had been a witness. Both books remain good source material, in spite of his natural bias in favour of his mother's people. His powers of narrative and description were excellent. He also translated Leone Ebreo's Dialoghi di amore into Spanish and wrote a work on the history of Florida.

Obras completas (8 vols, 1829); Comentarios reales, ed. H. H. Urteaga (Lima, 1918–21), ed. Rosemblat (1943–45); Diálogos de amor, Nue. Bibl. Autores Esp., 21; First Part of the Royal Commentaries of the Yncas, tr. C. R. Markham (2 vols, 1869–71); The Royal Commentaries of Peru, in two parts, tr. Sir P. Rycaut (1688).
J. Fitzmaurice Kelly, El Inca G. de la V. (Oxford, 1921); L. A. Sánchez, G. I. de la V. (1939). E.M.W.

Gardiner, SAMUEL RAWSON (*Ropley 4 III 1829; ∞1856 Isabella Irving, ∞1882 Bertha Cordery; †Sevenoaks 23 II 1902), English historian whose comprehensive History of England from 1603 to 1656 (10 vols, 1883–84), showing profound scholarship, impartiality and maturity of judgment, is recognized as authoritative.

Thirty Years War (1874); Cromwell's Place in History (1896).
R. G. Usher, Critical Study of historic method of S. R. G. (1902); H. B. Learned, S. R. G. (1902). R.M.H.

Gardizi, Abu Sa'id abd al-Hayy, 11th-century Persian historian, the author of Zayn al-Akhbār (c. 1050).

W. Barthold, Turkestan (1928). E.Y.

Garin, N. G., pseud. of Nikolay Grigoryevich Mikhaylovsky (*1852; †1906), Russian author, whose principal work—a tetralogy (1892–97)—is a transposed autobiography, portraying with much skill and warmth the development, up to their maturity, of a whole generation of intellectuals. He was also a keen traveller and wrote about his impressions of Korea, Manchuria etc.

Sobranie sochineniy (9 vols, 1906–10; 1916).
I. V. Vladislavlev, Russkie pisateli (1924); M. Gorky, 'Garin-Mikhaylovsky', in Krasnaya Nov', IV (1927). J.L.

Garland (de Garlandia), John (c.* 1180; †c. 1258), English grammarian and poet. He studied at Oxford and Paris, living in the Rue de Garlande. A rather pedantic defender of humane studies, he wrote, besides poems, handbooks for students, a Dictionnarius, a Compendium Grammaticae, Morale Scolarium, Exempla honestae Vitae (examples of various styles) and De Triumphis Ecclesiae (in elegiacs).

E. Faral, Les arts poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e siècle (1924); Morale Scolarium, ed. L. J. Paetow (1927); E. F. Wilson, The Stella Maris of J. of G. (1946) and 'The Georgica Spiritualia of J. of G.', in Speculum (1933). F.J.E.R.

Garneau, François Xavier (*Quebec 15 VI 1809; ∞1834 Esther Bilodeau; †ibid. 3 II 1866), French-Canadian historian. He was educated at the Quebec seminary, and practised as a notary public. He visited England and France in the early '30s and met many literary personages. In 1840 he decided to write a history of French Canada as a reply to the observation in the report of Lord Durham that the French Canadians were a people without history or literature. His work was facilitated by an appointment as translator to the Quebec legislative assembly. A powerful and persuasive style and a remarkably skilful use of the limited research techniques of his day have given his history a permanent hold on the affections of French-Canadian readers. The centenary of its first volume was marked by the publication of an 8th edition revised and augmented by his grandson Hector Garneau.

Histoire du Canada (4 vols, 1845–52), History of Canada, tr. A. Bell (1860).
P. J. O. Chauveau, F.-X. G., sa vie et ses œuvres (1883); H. d'Arles, Nos Historiens (1921); G. Lanctot, L'Œuvre historique de G. (1945) and G., Historien national (1946). B.K.S.

Garnett, Richard (*Lichfield 27 II 1835; ∞1863 Olivia Singleton; †London 13 IV 1906), English man of letters whose works include poems, translations, literary history and a collection of classically inspired fables of cynical flavour.

Primula: a Book of Lyrics (1858); Io in Egypt and other Poems (1859); History of Italian Literature (1897); Relics of Shelley (unpub. poems, 1862); Age of Dryden (1895); Twilight of the Gods (fables, 1903). R.M.H.

Garnier, Robert (*La Ferté-Bernard, nr Le Mans c. 1545; ∞1573 Françoise Hubert; †Le Mans 20 IX 1590), French dramatist and poet; the foremost French dramatic writer of the 16th century, author of 7 tragedies and 1 tragi-comedy (Bradamante). His plays have pathos, dignity and moving poetic qualities hardly found again until Corneille; these are most apparent in his biblical tragedy, Les Juives. Influenced by Seneca, his work appears predominantly literary and elegiac, but earlier opinion that it was not acted is contradicted by more recent research, which shows it in the repertory of travelling companies in 1594 and 1599. Garnier had a literary following in Elizabethan England. A barrister, then a judge, Garnier became Lieutenant criminel of his native province of Le Maine.

Porcie, épouse de Brutus (1568); Hippolyte, fils de Thésée (1573); Cornélie, épouse de Pompée (1574), Pompey the Great, tr. T. Kyd (1594); Marc-Antoine (1578), Antonius, tr. Countess of Pembroke (1592); La Troade ou la destruction de Troie (1579); Antigone (1580); Bradamante (1582); Sédécie, ou les Juives (1583), ed. Hervier (1945).—Œuvres, ed. L. Pinvert (2 vols, 1923); ed. R. Lebègue (1949 ff.).
E. Faguet, La Tragédie française au 16e siècle; R. Lebègue, La Tragédie française de la Renaissance (1944) and 'Le Répertoire d'une troupe française à la fin du 16e siècle', in Rev. d'Hist. du Théâtre, I, II (1948); A. M. Witherspoon, The Influence of R. G. on Elizabethan Drama (Yale, 1924). G.B.

Garrett, J. B. da Silva Leitão de Almeida: see Almeida Garrett.

Garrick, David (*Hereford 20 II 1717; ∞1749 Eva Maria Veigel; †London 20 I 1779), English actor and writer. Garrick's career began with that of Samuel Johnson, his tutor, when they left Lichfield for London together in 1737. His versatile acting soon brought him success. He collaborated with the elder Colman in The Clandestine Marriage (produced 1766). He was the last actor to be buried in Westminster Abbey.

The Dramatic Works of D. G., Esq. (3 vols, 1798, with life); The Private Correspondence of D. G., ed. J. Boaden (2 vols, 1831–32).

T. Davies, Memoirs of the Life of D. G., Esq. (2 vols, 1780); P. Fitzgerald, The Life of D. G. (2 vols, 1868); J. Knight, D. G. (1894); E. P. Stein, D. G., Dramatist (1938); M. Barton, G. (1948). B.H.

Garshin, VSEVOLOD MIKHAYLOVICH (*2 II 1855; †St Petersburg 24 III 1888), Russian writer of nouvelles who made his début with an excellently told narrative—Chetyre dnya (1877)—of the Russo-Turkish war in which he served as a volunteer. Most of his stories are permeated with a strong moral sensitiveness, pity, passion for justice, and with a wish to abolish all evil which he embodied in his Krasny Tsvetok. His favourite form is one of diary, confession, or letters. He committed suicide.

Sochineniya (1910, 1939); Stories from Garshin, tr. E. L. Voynich (1892); The Signal and other Stories, tr. R. Smith (1912, 1915).

M. V. Klevensky, V. M. G. (1925); E. Zelm, Studien über V. G. (1935); N. Belyayev, G. (1938). J.L.

Gart, THIEBOLD, German dramatist. A citizen of Schlettstadt, Gart, of whose life nothing is known, wrote a play Joseph (1540), one of the most important and influential German plays of the 16th century. It contains poetry, good characterization, a sense of the theatre and an attempt at psychological portrayal in advance of its time.

Joseph, ed. E. Schmidt (1880) and A. E. Berger, in Deut. Lit., Reihe Ref., 6 (1936).

M. Kleinvogel, Joseph, eine biblische Komödie von T. G. (Diss. Giessen 1932). D.G.D.

Garter, BERNARD ? or THOMAS ? (fl. 1565–79), English poet or poets. It is uncertain whether this is one man, or two brothers. Godly Susanna, ascribed to Thomas, shows dramatic skill and has interesting stage directions. A New Yeares Gifte (1579), in verse and prose, is ascribed to Bernard.

VERSE: The tragicall and true historie which happened between two English Lovers (1565; 1568).—DRAMA: The commodye of the most Vertuous and Godlye Susanna (1578; ed. B. I. Evans and W. W. Greg, Malone Soc., 1937); Masque (1578; with H. Goldingham; repr. J. Nicholl, Progresses of Queen Elizabeth, II, 1827). B.L.J.

Garth, SIR SAMUEL (*Bolam, Durham 1661; ∞Martha Beaufoy; †18 I 1718/9), English physician and poet, who achieved polished mastery of the couplet. After study at Cambridge and Leiden he became a fellow of the College of Physicians (1693) and gave the Gulstonian Lectures (1694). His scheme for a charitable dispensary was unsuccessful, but inspired his best known work The Dispensary (1699). A member of the Kit Kat Club, Garth's light verse includes an epilogue to Cato and a prologue to Rowe's Tamerlane. B.L.J.

The Dispensary (1699), ed. W. J. Leicht (1905); Collected Poems, in S. Johnson, Works of the English Poets, 20 (1779–81).

S. Johnson, Lives of the Poets, 2; R. P. Bond, English Burlesque Poetry 1700–50 (1932). J.R.B.

Garzoni, TOMMASO (*Bagnacavallo III 1549; †ibid. 8 VI 1589), Italian writer who rummaged amongst the bric-à-brac of civilization for curiosities of literature and manners, and wrote books which read like antiquarian miscellanies.

Opere (1605 and 1617); Piazza universale di tutte le professioni del mondo (1585); L'Hospidale de' pazzi incurabili (1586), crit. ed. F. Marchionni (1915), The Hospitall of incurable fooles, tr. E. Blount (1600); La Sinagoga de gl'ignoranti (1589).

C. della Corte, T. G., vita ed opere (1913; second-rate but useful). P.McN.

Gascoigne, GEORGE (*1539 ?; ∞London 23 XI 1561 Elizabeth Bacon Bretton; †Stamford 15 X 1577), English poet, playwright and prose-writer, who served in Holland (1572), writing an account anticipating modern war-correspondents. After Trinity College, Cambridge, and Gray's Inn he became M.P. for Bedford (1557–59), but his reputation for riotous living ended this career. Worldly failure brought reform with The Glasse of Government (1575) and The Steele Glas (1576). His theoretical and practical interest in versification is found in his Notes of Instruction (contained in The Posies, 1575). His translations, The Supposes and (with Kinwelmersh) Jocasta, exemplify 'regular' yet living drama.

Jocasta (Euripides based on Dolce), ed. J. W. Cunliffe (1906).—The Works of G. G., ed. J. W. Cunliffe (1907–10).

F. E. Schelling, The Life and Writings of G. G. (1893); C. T. Prouty, G. G. (1942). B.L.J.

Gascoigne, THOMAS (*Hunslet, nr Leeds 5 I 1403/4; †13 III 1457/8), theologian and chancellor of Oxford University. Though strongly anti-Wycliffite, he was himself an advocate of reform and throws much light on the state of Oxford and the English church.

Loci e libro veritatum, ed. J. E. T. Rogers (1881); W. A. Pronger, 'T. G.', in Eng. Hist. Rev., 53, 54 (1938–39). S.J.L.

Gaskell, ELIZABETH CLEGHORN, née Stevenson (*Chelsea, London 29 IX 1810; ∞1832 William Gaskell; †Alton, Hants 12 XI 1865), English novelist. Mrs Gaskell was brought up by her aunt at Knutsford, Cheshire, the village which provided her with scenes and stories for Cranford. She and her husband had a project for combining literary and humanitarian interests in writing annals of the poor of Manchester and, though only one sketch appeared, the interest in the life of industrial towns was to produce Mary Barton and North and South, two critical rather than didactic novels. Her most popular work is Cranford but the other novels, particularly the unfinished Wives and Daughters, are more sustained and imaginative expressions of her humour and penetration. She was a close friend of Charlotte Brontë and wrote a sympathetic biography.

Mary Barton, a Tale of Manchester Life (2 vols, 1848); Ruth: A Novel (3 vols, 1853); Cranford (1853; first serialized in Household Words); North and South (2 vols, 1855; first serialized in H. W.); Sylvia's Lovers (3 vols, 1863); Wives and Daughters (2 vols, 1866).—The Life of Charlotte Brontë (2 vols, 1857).

E. A. Chadwick, Mrs G. (2nd ed. 1913); E. Haldane, Mrs G. and her Friends (1930). B.H.

Gaspé, PHILIPPE AUBERT DE (*Quebec 30 X 1786; †ibid. 29 I 1871), French-Canadian novelist. Descendant of a French fur trader who came to Canada in 1655 and was ennobled by Louis XIV in 1693, he was brought up in the atmosphere and traditions of the old régime. After some years as high sheriff of the Quebec district he retired to his manor at St Jean Port-Joli, where at 76 he wrote, under the influence of the nationalist literary movement inspired by Garneau and Crémazie, a historical romance which has become the first classic of Canadian imaginative literature in French. A posthumous volume of sketches is less important.

Les Anciens Canadiens (1863), The Canadians of Old, tr. C. G. D. Roberts (1890); Mémoires (1866); Divers (1893). B.K.S.

Gassendi, PIERRE, real name Gassend (*Champtercier, nr Digne 22 I 1592; †Paris 24 X 1655), French philosopher. A priest at Digne, then professor at the Collège Royal in Paris, he professed a cautious epicureanism which the libertins of the century developed into a philosophy of pleasure, often atheistic.

Opera Omnia (6 vols, 1658, incl. his main work Syntagma philosophiae Epicuri); F. Bernier, Abrégé de la philosophie de G. (8 vols, 1678).

G. S. Brett, The Philosophy of G. (1908). G.B.

Gaston Phoebus, COUNT OF FOIX (*1331; †1391), French patron of letters and author of a treatise on hunting, influenced by Gace de la Bigne.

La Chasse de G. P., comte de Foix, ed. J. Lavallée (1854).

B. Nabonne, G. P. (1936). A.H.D.

Gatty, MARGARET, née Scott (*Burnham, Essex 3 VI 1809; ∞1839 Alfred Gatty; †Ecclesfield 4 X 1873), English writer of fairy-tales and educational books for children.

The Fairy Godmother and Other Tales (1851); Parables from Nature (5 series, 1855–71); Aunt Judy's Tales (1859); Aunt Judy's Magazine (May 1866–Oct. 1885, afterwards continued by H. K. F. Gatty). B.H.

Gaucelm Faidit (c. 1185–1220), Provençal troubadour, from Uzerche (Limousin). His songs are dedicated particularly to the wife of Eble V of Ventadorn. He was also at the courts of Raimon d'Agout, Hugo IX, count of Marche, and finally with margrave Bonifacio of Monferrat whom he followed to Greece on the fourth crusade. He is one of those representatives of the trobar ric who display ingenuity and finesse in variations on the traditional themes of the canso d'amor.

A. Tobler, 'Ein Minnesinger der Provence', in Vermischte Beiträge (1912); R. Meyer, Das Leben des Troubadours G. F. (1876). R.R.B.

Gautier, THÉOPHILE (*Tarbes 31 VIII 1811; †Neuilly-sur-Seine 23 XII 1872), French writer. Gautier first studied painting, but abandoned it for literature. He supported Hugo in the 'battle of Hernani', was a friend of Nerval and a frequenter of Romantic circles. From 1836 onwards he lived the harried existence of a literary journalist. He found distraction from his work in frequent travels. His last years were brightened by his love for Carlotta Grisi, the dancer.

His starting-point as a writer was a lyrical and macabre form of romanticism (as in Albertus, 1833), which, however, he was ready to parody (Les Jeune-France, 1833). He soon, however, elaborated a theory and founded a movement of 'art for art's sake', a theory which laid it down that beauty could be attained only by the worship of form, and that no considerations, moral, political or social, must be allowed to interfere with the pursuit of that ideal. His own gifts of pictorial evocation appear in his fiction, whether sensual (Mademoiselle de Maupin, 1835), historical (Le roman de la momie, 1858), picaresque (Le Capitaine Fracasse, 1863) or fantastic (Fortunio, 1837)—and in his poems which are always sharply wrought, and never lacking in technical mastery (Émaux et Camées, 1852). He also produced a considerable quantity of art criticism and literary criticism.

VERSE: Poésies (1830); La comédie de la mort (1838); España (1845; crit. ed. R. Jasinski, 1929); Émaux et Camées, crit. ed. J. Pommier and G. Matoré (1947).—NOVELS: Mlle de Maupin (1835; Eng. tr. P. Selver, 1948); Fortunio (1837; Eng. tr. 1915); Romans et contes (1857); Le roman de la momie (1858; The Mummy's Romance, tr. G. F. Monkshood, 1908); Le Capitaine Fracasse (1863; Eng. tr. A. R. Chisholm, 1933).—TRAVEL: Tra los montes (1843); Italia (1852); Constantinople (1853); Voyage en Russie (1867).—PLAYS: Théâtre de poche (1855); Théâtre (1872).—CRITICISM: Histoire de l'art dramatique depuis 25 ans (1858 and 1859); Rapport sur les progrès de la poésie en France (1868); Histoire du romantisme (1874).—La préface de Mlle de Maupin, crit. ed. G. Matoré (1946).

H. Potez, T. G. (1895); R. Jasinski, L'España de G. and Les années romantiques de G. (1929); H. van der Tuin, L'évolution psychologique, esthétique et littéraire de G. (1934); L. Larguier, T. G. (1948); J. Tild, G. et ses amis (1951).
M.G.; J.P.R.

Gautier d'Arras (*1135; †1198), French poet; a knight and, 1166–85, an official of Philip of Flanders (so Cowper). He composed romances, Eracle (1165 ?) and Ille et Galeron (1167 ?). Count Baudouin of Hainault, Count Thibaut V of Blois, Marie de Champagne and Beatrice of Burgundy, wife of Barbarossa, encouraged his writing. Courtly and rhetorical, it makes a noteworthy use of metaphor. Realism appears in allusions to country life and the wool trade. Conflicting emotion, particularly love, is described with some success, but his narrative style inclines to sententious verbosity. Gautier's literary relationship with writers like Chrétien de Troyes and Marie de France is a controversial question. There is no trace of his influence on foreign literature except for Otte's Middle High German adaptation, Eraclius (1203 ?).

Ille et Galeron and Eracle, ed. E. Löseth (2 vols, 1890).

E. Faral, 'D'un "passionaire" latin à un roman français', in Romania, XLVI (1920); E. Hoepffner, 'Le Roman d'Ille et Galeron et le lai d'Eliduc', in Studies presented to M. K. Pope (1939); M. Wilmotte, 'Problèmes de Chronologie Littéraire', in Moyen Âge, XI (1940); F. A. G. Cowper, 'More Data on G. d'A.', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 64 (1949).
M.F.L.

Gautier de Coinci (*Coinci (Aisne) or Coinci (Somme) or Conchy-les-Pots, nr Roye c. 1177; †Soissons 25 IX 1236), French ecclesiastic and poet; monk at S. Médard de Soissons (1193), prior of Vic-sur-Aisne (1214), grand prior of S. Médard (19 VI 1233). Thoroughly monastic in outlook, Gautier emphasises the contrast between divine and profane love. Thus, his Sermon de la Chastee as Nonnains (between 1223 and 1227) develops the traditional theological arguments in favour of virginity, while his lyrics, which employ the metrical forms and often the conventional openings of courtly poetry, are obviously an attempt to turn what was to him a thoroughly objectionable genre to purposes of pious edification and exaltation of the Virgin, the mirror of true chastity. A series of some sixty narrative poems, translated from Latin originals, recount miraculous interventions of the Virgin, either to help a repentant sinner or to admonish and correct the erring. Warm and whole-hearted, Gautier's devotion to the Virgin is of course entirely devoid of erotic features. Effusively devout, his piety is often naïve and even crass. He nevertheless writes in a richly idiomatic style, the vigour of which at times almost verges on the coarse.

Miracles de la sainte Vierge (1st book 1218, 2nd 1223–27); La Vie de sainte Christine (1218; ed. A. Ott, 1922); Sermon de la Chastee, ed. T. Nurmela (1937); Lyrics, ed. A. Långfors, Romania, 53 and 56 (including the 'Sainte Léocade lyrics' of 1222, inspired by a theft of her relics). Doubtfully attributed: Sermon de la Misere de l'homme and Dou Saint Dent Nostre Seigneur, ed. Långfors, Extraits (1937); La Nativité Nostre Dame and La Nativité et Enfances Jesus, ed. R. Reinsch, Herrigs Archiv, 67 (1882).—Miracles, ed. (badly) A. E. Poquet (1857); A. Långfors, Extraits du ms. de l'Ermitage (1937); A. P. Ducrot-Granderye, Études (1932); eds of separate miracles by E. Boman (1935), G. Lozinski (1938), E. von Kraemer (1950).

E. M. Szarota, Studien zu G. de C. (1934).
F.W.

Gautier de Dargies (fl. c. 1200), French lyric poet. He belonged to an aristocratic family of the Beauvaisis. Fifteen of his poems are extant, 12 more are doubtfully attributed to him. He treats the usual love themes along the usual conventional lines.

Ed. G. Huet (1912). F.W.

Gautier d'Épinal (fl. c. 1190), French lyric poet, an acquaintance of Philippe d'Alsace (†1191). 15 of his poems are extant, 8 more are of doubtful attribution. All are chansons d'amour, conventional in theme but written in a wide variety of metres.

Ed. U. Lindelöf and A. Wallensköld (1901). H. Petersen Dyggve, 'Personnages historiques figurant dans la poésie lyrique française', in Neuphil. Mitteil., 36 (1935). F.W.

Gautier le Leu, 13th-century French poet. A professional jongleur from north-eastern France, he is an acute, sometimes a brutal, satirist.

'Du Sot Chevalier', ed. A. de Montaiglon and G. Raynaud, Recueil des Fabliaux (1872); 'La Veuve', 'Dit des C.', ibid., 2 (1877); 'Connebert', ibid., 5 (1883); 4 other 'fabliaux' ed. Livingston, in Roman. Rev., 15 (1924). C. Livingston, Le Jongleur G. le L.: Etude sur les fabliaux (1951). M.F.L.

Gay, Delphine (*Aix-la-Chapelle 26 I 1804; ∞1831 Emile Girardin; †Paris 29 VI 1855), French writer. She was the adored and brilliant Egeria of the Romantic coteries. She collaborated with her journalist husband under the pen-name of Le Vicomte de Launay. Her large and varied output was marked by wit and intellectual agility. It includes poems, plays and novels (La Canne de M. de Balzac, 1836).

Verse: La confession d'Amélie (1827); Le dernier jour de Pompei (1827); Napoline (1833); Poésies complètes (1857).—Novels and Stories: Le lorgnon (1831); Le marquis de Pontanges (1835).—Plays: L'école des journalistes (1840); Judith (1843); Cléopâtre (1847).—Various: Lettres parisiennes (8 vols, 1856); Œuvres complètes (6 vols, 1860–61). H. Malo, Une muse et sa mère, D. G. (1924) and La gloire du vicomte de Launay (1925); F. de Bondy, Une femme d'esprit en 1830, Mme de Girardin (1928). M.G.; J.P.R.

Gay, John (*Barnstaple c. IX 1685; †London 4 XII 1732), English poet and dramatist. Although Gay was a prolific and successful dramatist his extravagance and financial misfortunes made him depend almost entirely on the generosities and vagaries of friends and patrons. Amongst these were William Pulteney, earl of Burlington, and the duke and duchess of Queensbury. The Beggar's Opera (1728) was his most popular work and its sequel, Polly (1729), was allegedly suppressed by Walpole's influence because of its satirical implications. Gay's striking literary abilities include lyrical power, wit and constructive skill.

Verse: Wine: a Poem (1708); The Shepherd's Week (1714); The Poetical Works of John Gay, ed. G. C. Faber (1926; includes biblio.).—Plays and Operas: Acis and Galatea (1732); Achilles (1733); The Distress'd Wife. A Comedy (1743); The Rehearsal at Goatham (1754). W. H. Irving, J. G. (1940). B.H.

Gayangos y Arce, Pascual (*Seville 1809; †London 1897), Spanish scholar, bibliophile and writer. Professor of Arabic at Madrid university. He lived for many years in London, where he prepared the catalogue of Spanish manuscripts at the British Museum. He published a fine, amplified translation of Tiknov's History of Spanish literature, and important original works such as Las Dinastías Musulmanas en España, and a study of Anglo-Spanish relations under James I and Henry VIII.

History of the Mohammedan Dynasties in Spain (2 vols, 1840–43): La Corte de Felipe III (1885). R.M.N.

Geel, Jacob (*Amsterdam 12 XI 1789; ∞1844 Caroline Reinwardt; †Scheveningen 11 XI 1862), Dutch writer and critic; librarian and professor at Leiden. He influenced Bakhuizen van den Brink, advocated simplicity and genuine inspiration, and translated Sterne's Sentimentele Reis (1837).

Het proza (1830); Gesprek op den Drachenfels (1835); Onderzoek en Phantasie (1838). C. Busken Huet, Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, 10; M. J. Hamaker, J. G. (1907, with biblio); A. G. Wientjes, De J. G. (1909); T. van Ham, in Elckerlyc (1938). J.W.W.

Geibel, Emanuel (*Lübeck 17 X 1815; †ibid. 6 IV 1884), German poet, who after travels in Greece achieved resounding initial success and a pension from Friedrich Wilhelm IV of Prussia. Called to Munich, he became head and typical representative of Maximilian II's poetic Round Table, whose members, in their concentration upon form rather than content, resembled the Parnassians. His virtuosity held his public, till his patriotic Heroldsrufe (1871) made him unofficial poet laureate of Germany.

Klassische Stunden (1840; with E. Curtius); Gedichte (1840, 132nd ed. 1908; tr. L. Hooper 1864); Zeitstimmen (1841); Volkslieder und Romanzen der Spanier deutsch (1843); König Roderich (1844); Zwölf Sonette für Schleswig-Holstein (1846); König Sigurds Brautfahrt (1846; The Wooing of King Sigurd, tr. E. Cook, 1864); Juniuslieder (1848); Neue Gedichte (1856); Brunhild (1857; tr. G. T. Dippold 1879); Heroldsrufe (1871).—Gesammelte Werke (8 vols, 1883–84); Auswahl, ed. W. Stammler

(1920); Ausgewählte Dramen, ed. F. Drexel (1915); Jugendbriefe, ed. M. Fehling (1909); Briefwechsel mit P. Heyse, ed. E. Petzet (1922).
K. T. Gaedertz, E. G., Ein Deutsches Dichterleben (1897); M. D. Pradels, E. G. und die französische Lyrik (1905); E. Curtius, Erinnerungen an E. G. (1915). H.A.P.

Geijer, ERIK GUSTAF (*Ransäter 12 I 1783; †Stockholm 23 IV 1847), Swedish historian, poet and composer. Geijer was an outstanding exponent of the gothic (in the original sense) revival in Swedish romanticism, particularly in his Viking poems. Social developments led him from Conservatism to Liberalism, and he has done much to develop the Swedish Liberal tradition. His most important historical works are Svenska folkets historia (3 vols, 1832–36), a history of Sweden up to 1654, and Svea Rikes Häfder (Pt I, 1825), planned to embody the entire history of Sweden, but never completed. Both stress the speculative and personal element, and aim at perspective rather than detailed and documented analysis. Geijer advocated temperate realism as opposed to the romantic fashion led by Atterbom. His poems have a high musical quality, and many of them were written to be sung to his own settings.

Samlade skrifter, ed. J. Landquist (13 vols, last ed. 1923–31); The history of the Swedes, tr. J. H. Turner (1845); Impressions of England 1809–10, tr. E. Sprigge and C. Napier (1932).
J. Landquist, E. G. G. (1924); E. Norberg, Geijers väg från romantik till realism (1944). C.H.K.

Geijerstam, GUSTAF AF (*Jönsarbo, Västmanland 5 I 1858; †Stockholm 6 III 1909), Swedish author. His first work was strongly coloured by the naturalism and radicalism of the '80s, but fin-de-siècle trends baffled him, and he temporarily abandoned letters for social studies. He subsequently adopted modern psychological methods, but was more successful for his sincere though often over-sentimental domestic novels, notably Boken om lille-bror (1900). His most finished work is in his tales of country life; he also wrote a number of popular dialect plays.

NOVELS AND TALES: Gråkallt (1882); Fattigt folk (1884); Erik Grane (1885); Pastor Hallin (1887); Medusas hufvud (1895); Kampen om kärlek (1896); Mina pojkar (1896; My boys, tr. A. Huebsch, 1933); Vilse i lifvet (1897); Kronofogdens berättelser (1890–1902); Det yttersta skäret (1898); Samlade allmogeberättelser (1898–99); Boken om lille-bror (1900; The book about little brother, tr. E. Björkman, 1921); Kvinnomakt (1901; Woman power, tr. E. Rapp, 1927).—ESSAYS: Ur samtiden (1883); Stridsfrågor för dagen (1888); Nya brytningar (1894.)—PLAYS: Svärfa (1888); Aldrig i lifvet (1891); Per Olsson och hans käring (1894).
M. Johnsson, En åttitalist (1934). C.H.K.

Geiler von Kaisersberg, JOHANN (*Schaffhausen 16 III 1445; †Strasbourg 10 III 1510), German preacher, famous for his sermons in the cathedral of Strasbourg attacking public and church abuses delivered in trenchant German relieved by much homely humour. Geiler, few of whose works are extant in their original form, stands halfway between Berthold of Regensburg and Abraham a Sancta Clara. In 1498 he gave a series of sermons on Brant's Narrenschiff, published in Latin (1511) and retranslated into German by Joh. Pauli (1520).

Aelteste Schriften, ed. L. Dacheux (2 vols, 1877–82); selected works ed. Ph. de Lorenzi (4 vols, 1881–83).
Beatus Rhenanus, Vita Geileri (1510); L. Dacheux, Un réformateur . . . Jean G. de K. (1876); E. Roeder von Diersburg, Komik und Humor bei G. v. K. (1921); T. M. Lindsay, History of the Reformation, I (1906). D.G.D.

Geldenhauer (Noviomagus), GERARDUS (*Nijmegen 1482; †Marburg ? 10 I 1542), Dutch theologian and historian. He studied at Louvain, made the acquaintance of various famous men, including Erasmus, and was crowned poet by the emperor Maximilian in 1517. For some time he was in the service of Philip of Burgundy, bishop of Utrecht, and after his death in 1524 of Maximilian of Burgundy, abbot of Middelburg. At this time he travelled to Wittenberg and went over to Protestantism. He lived at Strasbourg, Worms and Augsburg and from 1534 was professor at Marburg.

Epistola de situ Zelandiae (1514); Satyrae octo (1515); Pompa exequiarum Hispaniarum regis Ferdinandi (1516); Epistola de triumphali ingressu Phil. de Burgundia (1517); Lucubratiuncula de Batavorum insula (1520), Vita Phil. de Burgundia (1529); Epistolae aliquot de re evangelica et haereticorum poenis (1529); Historia Batavica (1530); Historia Germaniae Inferioris (1532); Institutio scholae christianae (1534); Germanicarum historiarum illustratio (1542).—Collectanea, ed. J. Prinsen, in Werken v. h. Hist. Genootschap te Utrecht, 3rd series, XVI (1901).
J. Prinsen, G. G. N. (1898) and in Nieuw Nederl. Biogr. Wdb., VI (1924); R. Stolzle, in Archiv f. Reformationsgesch., XIV (1917); H. Kampinga, De opvattingen over onze oudere vaderl. gesch. (1917). J.J.M.

Gellert, CHRISTIAN FÜRCHTEGOTT (*Hainichen 4 VII 1715; †Leipzig 13 XII 1769), German poet and moralist; professor at Leipzig university from 1751. He exercised great influence through the charm of his personality and the assiduity with which he replied to his enormous correspondence. A representative of the cultivated middle class he valued especially virtue and moderation. People from all walks of life sought his advice and he was highly esteemed by Frederick the Great. Gellert wrote comedies, a novel which condemns passion and extols self-control, and a number of fables, which put homely morals into neat and easy verse. He viewed himself as an educator and all his work is educational in aim.

VERSE: Lieder (1743); Fabeln und Erzählungen (1746); Geistliche Oden und Lieder (1757).—NOVEL: Leben der schwedischen Gräfin von G. (1748).—COMEDIES: Die Betschwester (1745); Die kranke Frau (1747).—VARIOUS: Betrachtungen über die Religion (1760); Moralische Vorlesungen (1770).—Sämtliche Schriften (10 vols, 1769–74); selection in Werke, ed. F. Behrend (1917); Briefe, ed. K. Blanck (1921).

M. Durach, C. F. G. (1938); H. Handwerk, Studien über Gellerts Fabelstil (1891); W. Haynel, Gellerts Lustspiele (1896); F. Brüggemann, Gellerts Schwedische Gräfin (1925).
H.B.G.

Gelli, GIAMBATTISTA (*Florence 12 VIII 1498; †ibid. 24 VII 1563), Italian writer. Shoemaker, champion of the vernacular and part-founder of the Florentine academy, he is justly remembered for I capricci di Giusto Bottaio, in which a cooper communes with his soul, and for La Circe, in which Ulysses reasons with eleven animals.

Opere di Giovan Battista Gelli, ed. I Sanesi (1952); The Fearfull Fansies of the Florentine Couper, tr. W. Barker (1568); Circe, tr. H. Layng (1744).

N. Tarantino, 'La Circe' e 'I Capricci del Bottaio' di G. B. G. (1917). P.McN.

Gellius, AULUS (c.* 123; †c. 165), Roman grammarian, wrote a miscellany entitled Noctes Atticae in 20 books on literary, grammatical, legal and antiquarian subjects. The work well illustrates the literary interests of the age, and is very valuable for the vast amount of ancient lore it contains, and for its citations from authors not now extant. Gellius was plundered by later grammarians, particularly Macrobius and Nonius, and was highly esteemed during the middle ages and Renaissance, when he was mistakenly known as 'Agellius'.

Ed. C. Hosius (1903); J. C. Rolfe (Loeb Libr. 1927–28).

Schanz-Hosius, Gesch. d. röm. Lit., III; H. Nettleship, Lectures and Essays, I (1885).
J.A.W.

Genest, l'abbé CHARLES-CLAUDE (*Paris 17 X 1639; †Paris 20 XI 1719), French writer. He was preceptor to Mlle de Blois, later the duchess of Orleans. Beginning with odes on topical patriotic themes, he turned to writing tragedies with some contemporary success.

Zélonide Princesse de Sparte (1682); Pénélope (1684); Joseph (1710).

H. C. Lancaster, History of French Dramatic Literature in the 17th Century, IV (1940).
G.B.

Genestet, PETRUS AUGUSTUS DE (*Amsterdam 21 XI 1829; ∞1852 Henriette Bienfait; †Rozendaal 2 VII 1861), Dutch poet and remonstrant minister whose homely and devout verse, influenced by Byron and Beets, became very popular; but it is the gentle melancholy, kind mockery and great sensibility, foreshadowing the tragic events in the last years of his short life, which render his melodious works interesting.

Fantasio (wr. 1847–48); De Sint-Nikolaasavond (wr. 1849); De Mailbrief (wr. 1858); Eerste Gedichten (1851, 2nd ed. 1860 with 1st ed. Sint Nikolaasavond); Leekedichtjes (1860); Laatste der Eerste (1861).—De dichtwerken van P. A. de G. (with life by C. P. Tiele, 2 vols, 1869).

J. ten Brink, Geschied. Noord-Ned. Letteren, 3 (1904, with biblio.); H. L. Oort, 'P. A. de G. naar zijn verzen en brieven', in De Gids (1905); A. van Duinkerken, in Achter de Vuurlijn (1930). J.W.W.

Gengenbach, PAMPHILUS (*Basle c. 1480; †Basle 1524–25), Swiss poet and dramatist. A printer at Basle, Gengenbach wrote mastersinger poems, popular epics, and moral and political tracts and satires supporting Luther, but is remembered for his Shrovetide plays, late medieval in tone, sincere and not without individual characterization.

PLAYS: Von den zehn Altern der Welt (1515); Die Gouchmatt der Baseler (1516); Der Nollhart (1517).—OTHER WORKS: Der welsch Fluss (1513); Der alt Eydgenoss (1514); Der Bundschuch (1514).—Collected works, ed. K. Goedeke (1856).

K. Lendi, Der Dichter P. G. (1926); W. Schein, Stilistische Untersuchungen zu den Werken des P. G. (Diss. Jena, 1927); R. Raillard, P. G. und die Reformation (1936).
D.G.D.

Gennadios Scholarios: see GEORGE SCHOLARIUS.

Gennep, JASPAR VON (*Cologne ? c. 1515; †ibid. 1580), German printer and dramatist, author of Der Sünden Lohn ist der Tod, based on Diestheim's Homulus and the English Everyman. Written in upper and lower Rhenish dialects, it gives a Roman Catholic twist to this popular Reformation theme and, though largely derivative, has some artistic merit.

Der Sünden Lohn ist der Tod (perf. 1539, pub. 1540), ed. P. Norremberg (1873), repr. Das alte Kölner Spiel von Jedermann (1922).

K. Goedeke, Everyman, Homulus und Hekastus (1857); N. Paulus, in Der Katholik, 75 (1895). D.G.D.

Geoffrey of Monmouth (c.* 1100; †1155), bishop of St Asaph, chronicler; his Historia Regum Britanniae purports to be based on a Breton liber vetustissimus, but is probably an imaginative work using Nennius, Gildas etc.; it is the main source of the Arthurian legend (q.v.).

Vita Merlini, ed. J. J. Parry (1925); Historia Regum Britanniae, ed. A. Griscom (1929; Eng. tr. S. Evans, 1912); E. Faral, La Légende arthurienne: Études et documents (3 vols, 1929); J. S. P. Tatlock, The Legendary History of Britain: G. de M.'s Historia Regum Britanniae and its early vernacular versions (1950). R.W.B.

Geoffrey of Vendôme (c.* 1070; †26 III 1132), educated at Angers, became abbot of the monastery of the Trinity at Vendôme and cardinal. Besides letters, sermons, a commentary on the Psalms and some theological treatises he composed some hymns in rhyme.

Anal. Hymn., 50.—Letters, etc., ed. J. Sirmond, Opera, III (1696).

L. Compain, Étude sur G. de V. (1891); E. Sackur, 'Zur Chronologie der Streitschriften des G. v. V.', in Neues Archiv, 17 (1892), 'Die Briefe G.'s v. V., ibid., 18 (1893). F.J.E.R.

Geoffrey of Vinsauf (fl. 1210), English author of the Poetria nova, a popular handbook on the art of poetry. It is really a treatise on rhetoric as applied to poetry.

E. Faral, Les Arts poétiques du XIIe et du XIIIe siècle (1924). F.J.E.R.

George Acropolites (*Constantinople 1217; †1282), Byzantine scholar. He was brought up at the Byzantine court of Nicaea and became tutor to the emperor John III Vatatzes' son (later Theodore II Lascaris). His valuable history, continuing that of Nicetas Choniates, deals with 1203–61 during the Latin occupation of Constantinople and is an objective and lively account based on first-hand knowledge. He also reflects the many-sided activity of Byzantine educated circles in his poetry and his rhetorical and theological works.

Ed. A. Heisenberg (1903); I. Bekker (1836, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 140 (with Latin tr.).

N. Iorga, 'Médaillons . . . 21. Georges l'Acropolite', in Byzantion, 2 (1925). J.M.H.

George Cedrenus (fl. late 11th century), Byzantine historian. He wrote a Synopsis historiarum from the creation to 1057, based on older works, some of which are no longer extant; from 811 to 1057 he reproduces John Scylitzes almost verbatim.

Synopsis historiarum, ed. I. Bekker (2 vols, 1838–39, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 121–122 (with Latin tr.). J.M.H.

George Codinus Curopalates, Byzantine official to whom is wrongly assigned an important treatise on ceremonial and officials of church and state in Constantinople, probably from the mid-14th century.

Codini Curopalatae De officialibus palatii Cpolitani et de officiis magnae ecclesiae liber, ed. I. Bekker (1839, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 157 (with Latin tr.). J.M.H.

George Gemistus Plethon (c.* 1355; †1452), Byzantine philosopher and humanist. He was at the court of the Palaeologi at Mistra, then after taking part in the councils of Ferrara and Florence and lecturing on neo-Platonism, he returned to the Peloponnese. His life and writings reflect the full revival of interest in classical philosophy and the strong links between intellectuals in the Greek and Latin worlds.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 160 (with Latin tr.); Geographical Treatise, ed. A. Diller in Isis, 27 (1937).

M. V. Anastos, 'Pletho's Calendar and Liturgy', in Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 4 (1948). J.M.H.

George Monachus, sometimes called Hamartolus, the Sinner, 9th-century Byzantine historian. Nothing appears to be known of his life. His important Chronicle stretching from Adam to 842 is unfinished and was written in Michael III's reign (842–67). The earlier part is based on sources some of which are no longer extant; the iconoclastic controversy, based to some extent on first-hand knowledge, tends to oust secular events. The later continuation of the Chronicle is known as Georgius Continuatus. This treats the years 842–948, though the Continuator shows knowledge of events after this date and was markedly hostile to Constantine VII and the Macedonians. This continuation exists in two redactions and was much used by other writers; in one MS. it is attributed to 'a Logothete', and attempts have been made to identify him with Symeon Magistros.

George the Monk: Chronicon, ed. C. de Boor (2 vols, 1904); Migne, Patr. Gr., 110 (with Latin tr.).—Georgius Continuatus, Chronicon, ed. I. Bekker (1838, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 109 and 110 (with Latin tr.).

N. Iorga, 'Médaillons . . . 9. Les continuateurs de Théophane', in Byzantion, 2 (1925). J.M.H.

George of Trebizond (*1395; †1484), Greek humanist. He spent much of his life teaching in Italy and supported Rome in the question of the reunion of the Greek and Latin churches. He wrote theological and philosophical works and translated Aristotle into Latin.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 161 (with Latin tr.); Acta Sanctorum (Andrew of Chios, 7th May, in Latin only); Letters, ed. E. Leroux (1892).

Fabricius, Bibliotheca graeca, 12; G. Voigt, Die Wiederbelebung des klass. Altertums (1893). J.M.H.

George Pachymeres (*Nicaea 1242; †Constantinople c. 1310), Byzantine scholar, holding high offices of church and state. He left poems, letters, rhetorical, philosophical and educational writings as well as a history of the years 1261–1308 with an introduction covering 1255–61, thus continuing George Acropolites.

De Michaele et Andronico Palaeologis libri XIII, ed. I. Bekker (2 vols, 1835, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 143–144 (with Latin tr.); On the Quadrivium, ed. P. Tannery (Studi e Testi, 94, 1940).

N. Iorga, 'Médaillons . . . 24. Georges Pachymère', in Byzantion, 5 (1929–30). J.M.H.

George Phrantzes (*1401; †end 15th century), Byzantine historian and diplomat. His Chronicle, written in 1478 for the Korfiotes, covers the years 1258–1477; for his own period he draws on accurate first-hand knowledge, being primarily concerned with the courts of the Palaeologi in Constantinople and in Mistra and showing a lively hatred of both Latin and Ottoman. A shorter revision (Minus) exists and opinion is divided as to whether it formed notes for the original, or was a later abbreviation.

Ed. J. B. Papadopulos (1935), ed. I. Bekker (1838; with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 156 (with Latin tr.).

N. Iorga, 'Medaillons . . . 28. Georges Phrantzès', in Byzantion, 2 (1925); W. Miller, 'The Historians Doukas and Phrantzes', in Journ. Hell. Stud., 46 (1926). J.M.H.

George Pisides, 7th-century Byzantine poet from Pisidia in Asia Minor, deacon and chartophylax of S. Sophia in Heraclius' reign (610–41). His main poems describe the Persian campaigns of Heraclius and the siege of Constantinople by the Avars in 625.

Expeditio Persica, Bellum Avaricum et Heraclias, ed. I. Bekker (1836, with Latin tr.); Migne, Patr. Gr., 92 (with Latin tr.); The Greek Anthology, ed. B. W. Paton (Loeb Libr. with Eng. tr.) contains two short poems.

N. H. Baynes, 'Some Notes on . . . George of Pisidia', in Class. Qu., 6 (1912); N. Iorga, 'Médaillons . . . 7. George le Pisidien', in Byzantion, 2 (1925). J.M.H.

George Scholarius, as monk and Patriarch known as Gennadius (†c. 1468), Byzantine scholar. He took part in the council of Florence 1438–39 as opponent of the union and after the capture of Constantinople by the Ottomans was recognized by them as patriarch of Constantinople. He wrote much in defence of the Greek church and was also interested in western scholasticism, translating some of Aquinas' writings.

Œuvres complètes . . ., ed. L. Petit, X. A. Siderides, M. Jugie (1930); Migne, Patr. Gr., 160 (with Latin tr.).

S. Salaville, 'Un thomiste à Byzance', in Échos d'Orient, 23 (1924). J.M.H.

George the Syncellus (fl. c. 750–810), Byzantine monk and chronicler. He wrote a world chronicle from the creation to Diocletian (284); it was continued by Theophanes the Confessor.

Chronographia, ed. G. Dindorf (1829; with Latin tr.). J.M.H.

Georgius Continuatus: see THEOPHANES CONTINUATUS.

Geraldini, ALESSANDRO (*Umbria 1455; †St Domingo 1525), Italian scholar and diplomatist. Religious instructor to the daughters of queen Isabella of Spain, he furthered Christopher Columbus's expedition and became the first bishop of St Domingo. His experiences and recollections as an explorer in north Africa and central America, as diplomatist and humanist, form the subject of his Itinerarium ad regiones sub aequinoctiali plaga constitutas (1631). P.T.

Gerbert de Montreuil, 13th-century French poet. He dedicated to Marie, Countess of Ponthieu, his elegant and sober Roman de la Violette (1227–29). Based on the same theme as Shakespeare's Cymbeline, it borrows largely from the anonymous Comte de Poitiers and from Jean Renart. There is a 15th-century prose version. A continuation of Chrétien's Perceval is attributed to this Picard writer.

Continuation de 'Perceval', ed. M. Williams (2 vols only, 1922, 1925); Roman de la Violette, ed. D. L. Buffum (1928); Gérard de Nevers, prose version of the Roman de la Violette, ed. L. F. H. Lowe (1928). M.F.L.

Gerbert of Aurillac, later pope Silvester II (*after 940; †12 V 1003), educated at Aurillac and in Spain, where he acquired a knowledge of mathematics from Arab sources. As archbishop of Reims and later as pope he was in the closest relations with Otto III. His letters are a historical source of great importance, and his mathematical writings belong to the history of science.

Letters, ed. J. Havet (1889); Opera mathematica, ed. Bubnov (1891).
F. J. Picavet, G. un pape philosophe (1897); R. Allen, 'G., Pope Sylvester II', in Eng. Hist. Rev., 7 (1892). F.J.E.R.

Gerhardt, Paul (*Gräfenhainichen 12 III 1607; †Lübben 27 V 1676), German poet, after Luther the greatest German protestant hymn-writer. After study at Wittenberg he went to Berlin in 1642, became pastor of Mittenwalde in 1651 and pastor of St Nicholas, Berlin in 1657, from which office he was removed in 1666 by the Elector. In 1668 he became archdeacon at Lübben. His hymns achieve a rare balance between the claims of the congregation and those of Gerhardt's own personal expression, which lends them a warmth and a common humanity rivalled only by Wesley. The purity and simplicity with which he expresses doctrine, the certainty of his faith and his joy in the external world are fused in Opitzian verse. Sixteen of his 120 hymns are in common use in England, and many others in non-German Lutheran communities. 'O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden' was set by J. S. Bach in the Matthew Passion; 'Nun ruhen alle Wälder' in Catherine Winkworth's translation (1855, 'Now all the woods are sleeping') is the best known in England.

Pauli Gerhardi Geistliche Andachten (10 vols, 1666–67); crit. ed. J. F. Bachmann (1866).
R. Eckardt, P. G.-Bibliographie (1908); H. Petrich, P. G. (1907, best monograph); E. Aellen, Quellen und Stil der Lieder Gerhardts (Diss. Basel, 1912); H. Türck, 'G. entwicklungsgeschichtlich', in Neophilologus, 28 (1942–43); T. B. Hewitt, G. as a Hymn-writer and his Influence on English Hymnology (1918); J. Julian, Dictionary of Hymnology (1907). L.W.F.

Gerhard von Minden, Low German compiler of a collection of fables. Either of two MSS may be the one attributed t Gerhard: both derive from the 'Romulus cycle but, whereas the 13th-century(? Wolfenbüttel MS. is rather insignificant the Magdeburg MS. of c. 1370 has bee written by a lively narrator of unmistakabl individuality.

A. Leitzmann, G. von M. (Wolfenbütte MS.; 1898); W. Seelmann, G. von M (Magdeburg MS.; 1878).
L. Wolff, Verf.-Lex. II, XXIII (1936); A. Leitzmann, Niederdt. Jahrb., 69/70 (1948). G.C.

Gerhoh of Reichersberg (*1093; †1169), provost of the house of Augustinian canons. He aimed at a reconciliation of empire and papacy and a reform of the church. His writings are mostly polemical expositions of his political and religious views. The De Investigatione Antichristi is the most famous.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 193; E. Sackur, Libelli de Lite, 3 (Mon. Germ. Hist., 1897). F.J.E.R.

Gérin-Lajoie, Antoine (*Yamachiche, Que. 4 VIII 1824; †Ottawa 4 VIII 1882), French-Canadian poet and novelist. Educated at the College of Nicolet, he wrote while still a student a poem on the Canadian exiles of the 1837 rebellion, beginning 'Un Canadien errant, banni de ses foyers', which has become one of the chief patriotic songs of French Canada. In 1852, after several years in journalism, he was appointed translator to the Quebec legislative assembly, and shortly after the establishment of the federal Parliament at Ottawa in 1867 he became its assistant librarian. His two novels represent the beginning of the naturalistic treatment of rural life in Quebec, but have a strong didactic tendency.

Novels: Jean Rivard le Défricheur (1874); Jean Rivard l'Économiste (1876).—History: Dix ans au Canada, 1840–50 (1888).
L. de Montigny, A. G.-L. (1926). B.K.S.

Germanus: see Bachur, Elijah.

Germez, Adam C. van (*Amsterdam 1610; †1667), Dutch playwright and actor, barber and bookseller. He recited in the theatre the funeral oration on Hooft, which G. Brandt had adapted from du Perron's oration on Ronsard. He also translated Vervolgde Laura (1645) and De Klagende Klaezjenor en doolende Doristee (1647), both after Rotrou.

A. van Halmael, jr., Bijdragen tot de geschiedenis v. h. tooneel (1840). A.M.B.W.

Gerok, Friedrich Karl von (*Vaihingen 30 I 1815; †Stuttgart 14 I 1890), German religious poet, celebrated preacher and court-chaplain, whose Palmblätter were much translated, and whose melodious verse ranges edifyingly over historical, patriotic and biblical subjects and the beauties of nature.

Evangeliumpredigten (1856); Palmblätter (1857, 131st ed. 1902; tr. J. E. A. Brown, Palm Leaves, 1869); Pfingstrosen (1864); Pilgerbrod (1866); Blumen und Sterne (1868); Deutsche Ostern (1871); Von Bethlehem bis Golgatha (1881); Ausgewählte Dichtungen (1907).
F. Braun, Erinnerungen an K. G. (1891); G. Gerok, K. G., ein Lebensbild (1892).
H.A.P.

Gerov, NAYDEN (*Koprivshtitsa 3 IX 1823; †Plovdiv 7 VIII 1900), Bulgarian poet and philologist. Educated in Russia, he was for a time Russian consul in Bulgaria. After 1850 he turned to literature and greatly influenced modern Bulgarian language and literature. His poem Stoyan i Rada (Odessa, 1845) is the first major poetical work in contemporary Bulgarian literature. He published many books on Bulgarian folk-lore, language and education. His major work, Rechnik na Balgarskiya Ezik (5 vols, 1895–1904, in Bulgarian and Russian), was the first modern Bulgarian dictionary.

Balgarski Ezik i Obrazovanie (Istanbul, 1852); Pravilo ot Pravopissanie (Vienna, 1872).
T. Panchev, N. G. (1923); M. Poprujenko, Iz Arhivata na G. (1931).
M.P.

Gershom ben Judah, 'ME'OR HAGGOLAH' (*Metz c. 960; †Mainz 1028), German Hebrew liturgical poet. He is the first Hebrew writer in Germany and through his teaching and ordinances greatly influenced the later development of German Jewry. His poems, in simple language, some of them relating to current persecutions, found many imitators.

Seliḥoth u-fizmonim, ed. A. M. Habermann (1944).
A. Marx, Essays in Jewish Biography (1947).
C.R.

Gerson, JEAN; or JEAN LE CHARLIER (*Gerson, nr Rethel 14 XII 1363; †Lyons 12 VII 1428), French ecclesiastic and author. Chancellor of the University of Paris from 1395, his public activity was directed towards ending the schism and reforming the church. He played a great part at Constance (1415–18), where he was the leading exponent of the doctrine of the supremacy of a general council. In Vienna 1418–19, he returned to France after the murder of Jean Sans Peur (10 IX 1419) and spent his last years in Lyons. Most of Gerson's immense output in Latin and French (on morals, education, theology and philosophy) was evoked by the needs of the contemporary situation; his mystical and devotional treatises, however, have enduring value. A devout contemplative and a man of balanced wisdom, he attacked the excesses of rational theology and the intellectualism of the schools while at the same time rejecting the emotional extravagance and pantheistic tendencies of much contemporary mysticism.

Opera omnia, ed. E. Du Pin (Antwerp, 1706; only the Latin works); Le Traité contre le Roman de la Rose, ed. E. Langlois in Romania, 45 (1918–19); La Montagne de Contemplation and La Mendicité spirituelle, ed. M. J. Pinet (1927) and P. Pascal (1945); Ad Deum vadit (sermon), ed. G. Frénaud (1948).
J. B. Schwab, Johannes G. (1856); J. L. Connolly, John G. (1928); J. Stelzenberger, Die Mystik des J. G. (1928); A. Combes, J. G. commentateur dionysien (1940); E. Gilson, La Philosophie au moyen-âge (1944).
F.W.

Gersonides, LEVI BEN GERSON, known as RALBAG (*1288; †Bagnols 1344), Provençal Hebrew philosopher and scientific writer; inventor of the 'Jacob's Staff' and other astronomical instruments. He wrote commentaries to several books of the Bible. His chief work, Milḥamoth Adonai ('Wars of God'), develops the theme of revelation versus philosophy with constant reference to the system of Averroes.

Milḥamoth Adonai (1st ed. Riva di Trento, 1560), Die Kämpfe Gottes, tr. B. Kellermann (1914).
I. Weil, Philosophie religieuse de Lévi b. Gerson (1868); N. Adlerblum, A study of G. in his proper perspective (1926); I. Husik, History of Medieval Jewish Philosophy (1946); J. Carlebach, Levi b. Gerson als Mathematiker (1910).
C.R.

Gerstäcker, FRIEDRICH (*Hamburg 10 V 1816; †Brunswick 31 V 1872), German novelist. He roamed over America as a jack of all trades from 1837 to 1852. He subsequently travelled to Central and South America, Australia and the Dutch East Indies, Egypt and Abyssinia. In the Franco-German war he was war correspondent for the Gartenlaube. Of his 44 volumes, written in an old-fashioned involved style, his American novels are still readable on account of their keen observation and their confident admiration of the democratic way of life.

Die Regulatoren in Arkansas (1845; The Feathered Arrow, or, The Forest Rangers, tr. 1851); Die Flusspiraten des Mississippi (1848; The Pirates of the Mississippi, tr. 1856); Germelshausen (1862; The Strange Village, and The Burgomaster's Daughter, tr. 1878).—Streif- und Jagdzüge durch die Vereinigten Staaten Nordamerikas (1844; Wild Sports in the Far West, tr. 1854); Mississippi-Bilder (1847; Western Lands and Western Waters, tr. 1864).

G. H. R. O'Donnell, 'G. in America', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Ass. of America, 42 (1927); E. Seyforth, F. G. (1930); A. J. Prahl, G. und die Probleme seiner Zeit (1938) and 'America in the Works of G.', in Mod. Lang. Quart., IV (1943). E.R.

Gerstenberg, Heinrich Wilhelm von (*Tondern, Schleswig 3 I 1737; †Altona 1 XI 1823), German dramatist. In youth Gerstenberg met Gellert in Leipzig. The son of an officer, he saw war service in the Danish army but entered the civil administration in 1768. He retired in 1812. Gerstenberg's literary activity was chiefly concentrated in the late 1760s, when he published his Briefe über die Merkwürdigkeiten der Literatur (also called Schleswigsche Literaturbriefe) and the stark tragedy of hunger Ugolino, based on Dante. These two works exercised a powerful influence on 'Sturm und Drang'.

Verse: Tändeleien (1759); Kriegslieder (1764).—Plays: Ugolino (1768); Minona (1785).—Criticism: Briefe über Merkwürdigkeiten der Literatur (3 vols, 1766–67; ed. A. v. Weilen, 1888).—Vermischte Schriften (3 vols, 1815).

M. Jacobs, Gerstenbergs Ugolino (1898); A. M. Wagner, G. und der Sturm und Drang (2 vols, 1920–24); J. W. Eaton, G. and Lessing (1938). H.B.G.

Gervase of Canterbury (*Maidstone c. 1141; †c. 1210), English chronicler, became a monk of Christ Church, Canterbury in 1163. He played an active part in the disputes of the monastery. His chief works are a chronicle from 1100 to 1199 and a history of the archbishops of Canterbury.

Historical Works, ed. W. Stubbs (1879–80). R.R.R.

Gervase of Tilbury (*Tilbury c. 1150; †c. 1235), English historian and lecturer on canon law at Bologna, was appointed marshal of the kingdom of Arles by emperor Otto IV. His chief work, the Otia Imperialia, was written about 1212 for the entertainment of Otto. It is a geographical and historical compendium with a collection of strange tales. A book of anecdotes prepared for Henry III, called the Liber Facetiarum, is not extant.

Otia Imperialia, ed. G. G. Leibnitz, Scriptores Rerum Brunsvicensium (1707); Radulphi de Coggeshall Chronicon, ed. J. Stevenson (1875). R.R.R.

Gessner, Salomon (*Zurich 1 I 1730; †ibid. 2 III 1788), Swiss writer. The son of a bookseller, Gessner, after a period in Berlin, became a landscape painter and engraver in Zurich. He wrote prose idylls which he illustrated himself. His work expresses the desire of the age for the simple and natural, remaining, however, bound by the rationalistic conventions. In consequence it enjoyed great popularity.

Die Nacht (1753); Daphnis (1754); Idyllen (1756); Idyllen (5 vols, 1772).—Schriften (4 vols, 1762); Sämtliche Schriften (2 vols, 1777).

H. Wölfflin, S. G. (1889); F. Bergemann, S. G. (1913); P. Leeman, S. G. (1929). H.B.G.

Geyter, Julius de (*Lede 25 V 1830; †Antwerp 18 II 1905), Flemish poet, writer of cantatas (set to music by Peter Benoit), political poems (Geuzenlied, 1872) and epic poems. He adapted Reinaert (1874) in the Middle Dutch accent verse.

De Rubenscantate (1877); De wereld in (1878); De Muze der geschiedenis (1880); De Rijn (1882); Th. van Rijswijckcantate (1884).—Drie mensen van in de wieg tot in het graf (1861 and 1864); Keizer Karel en het rijk der Nederlanden (1888).—Volledige Werken (7 vols, 1908).

M. Rooses, Letterkundige Studiën (1894). R.F.L.

Gezelle, Guido (*Bruges 1 V 1830; †ibid 27 XI 1899), Flemish poet, one of the masters of modern lyricism, was educated at the seminary at Roeselare where, after being ordained priest in 1854, he became a teacher and exercised a strong moral and literary influence on various pupils, among whom were Hugo and Gustaf Verriest and E. van Oye. In Bruges, after failing as headmaster of the Seminarium Anglo-Belgicum, he embarked on polemic journalism (in his own anti-liberal weekly 't Jaer 30 and elsewhere). On the verge of neurasthenia he left Bruges in 1872 and became a curate at Courtrai. The poetical harvest of this first period (c. 1850–70) is one of the highlights of romanticism. Already expressive of a refined sensuousness, his lyricism, inspired by nature, friendship with pupils, his love of his native country and God, is an often passionate outpouring of a very sensitive personality endowed with a wide range of sentiment. Almost from the start Gezelle displayed originality in diction and imagery, rhythm, rhyme and harmony, fashioned from popular speech into an instrument as sensitively refined as it is spontaneous and personal.

After years of silence, of physical recovery and gradual reconciliation with the outer world he inaugurated a new period of poetical production which was to continue from c. 1877 until his death. After publishing his excellent translation of Longfellow's Hiawatha (1886), he devoted himself to philological and literary work, becoming director of the English Canonesses at Bruges, where he died. In Gezelle's mature poetry the outpouring of feeling gave way to more self-contained lyrical compositions. A considerable part of his work consists of nature poems of such intense sensuous perception and in language evocative of such almost physical presence as to constitute one of the summits of impressionism. But in this same period Gezelle wrote hymns of the most mystical profundity, spiritual poetry about time, death and eternity in the Christian cycle, nature, man, God.

Although essentially a true original poet Gezelle also has great merit as a writer on philology and folk-lore. Moreover he was the great moving force behind the Flemish cultural renaissance at the end of the 19th century.

Verse: Kerkhofblommen (1858); Dichtoefeningen (1858); Kleengedichtjes (1860); Gedichten, gezangen en gebeden (1862); Liederen, leerdichten et reliqua (1880); Tijdkrans (1893); Rijmsnoer (1897); Laatste verzen (1901).—Prose: Uitstap in de Warande (1882); De ring om 't kerkelijk jaar (1908).—Jubileumuitgave van G. Gezelle's Volledige Werken (18 vols, 1930–39); Gezelle's Werken, ed. F. Baur (4 vols, 1949).—Poèmes choisis (tr. E. Cammaerts and Ch. van den Borren, 1908); Les beaux poèmes (tr. M. Christiaens and P. Groult, 1930); Lyra Belgica, I (Eng. tr. C. and F. Stillman, 1950).—Gedichte (tr. R. A. Schröder, 1917); Ausgewählte Gedichte (tr. J. Decroos, 1938); Im Kranz der Gezeiten (tr. H. Graef, 1950).

H. Verriest, Twintig Vlaamsche Koppen, II (1901); G. L. van Roosbroeck, G. G. The mystic poet of Flanders (1919); A. Walgrave, Het leven van G. G. (2 vols, 1923–24); U. van den Voorde, G. G. (1926); B. Verhoeven, G. G. (1930); A. Verwey, 'G. G.', in Leiding, I (1930); F. Baur, Uit G.'s Leven en Werk (1930); H. Roland Holst, G. G. (1931); R. F. Lissens, Het impressionisme in de Vlaamsche letterkunde (1934); R. Guarnieri, G. G., vita del poeta e saggio delle sue poesie (1941); W. Willems, G. G. (1944); A. Vermeylen, De Vlaamse Letteren van G. tot heden (1949). R.F.L.

Gha'ani: see Qa'ani.

Ghālib, Asadullah Khān (*Agra 1796; †Delhi 1869), one of the leading literary figures at the court of Bahādur Shāh, last Mogul emperor of Delhi. He was the author of many innovations in Urdu prose and poetry. He was the first to use Urdu instead of Persian as the medium of correspondence with his friends, and he is looked on as the founder of standard Urdu literary prose. He felt the necessity of finding a wider sphere than the ghazal as a form of poetry, and paved the way for his distinguished pupil Altāf Husain Hāli of Pānipat. H.G.R.

Ghazāli, Muhammad: see Qazāli.

Gherardi, Giovanni, known as Giovanni da Prato (*Prato c. 1367; †Florence 1442/46), Italian poet; Lector Dantis in Florence from 1417 to 1425. His writings, of which Il Paradiso degli Alberti is the most interesting, abound in echoes of Dante, Petrarch and Boccaccio.

Il Paradiso degli Alberti, ed. A. Wesselofsky (1867).

F. Novati, 'G. G. da Prato', in Misc. fiorent. di erudiz. e stor., 1 (1866). P.McN.

Gherardi del Testa, Tommaso (*Terricciola di Pisa 1818; †Pistoia 1881), Italian novelist and playwright. Remembered chiefly for his comedies, some of which are still acted, Gherardi succumbed to the influence of French drama and left little that was original, except perhaps La carità pelosa, Le coscienze elastiche (1861) and Il vero blasone (1862).

Teatro comico dell'avvocato T. G. del T. (4 vols, 1856–83).

I. Sanesi, La Commedia, 2 (1935). B.R.

Ghica, Ion, Bey of Samos (*Bucharest 16 VIII 1816; ∞1847 Sasha Mavros; †Ghergani 1897), Rumanian scholar and politician, wrote many scientific and political works but it is his Scrisorile către Alecsandri (1884) which entitle him to a place in Rumanian literature. His aim was to show in a literary garb the historical truths of the period between 1821 and the union of the principalities (1859).

Coup d'œil sur l'état actuel de la Valachie (1835); Poids de la Moldo-Valachie dans la question d'Orient (1835); Dernière occupation des principautés (1853); Convorbiri economice (5 pts, 1866); Scrisorile către Alecsandri (1884; 2nd ed. 1887; 3rd ed. 4 vols, 1905); Aminţire din pribegie după 1848 (1890).

C. I. Istrati, Activitatea stiinţifica a lui I. G. (1902); P. V. Hanes, Studii de Literatura romăna, I (1910); N. Georgescu-Tistu, I. G. scriitorul (1935). A.V.W.

Ghistele, Cornelis van, alias Talpa or de Mol (*Antwerp c. 1520?; †after 1570), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition, a weaver by trade. As factor of the Chamber of Rhetoric 'De Goudsbloem' he wrote several dramas (Van Eneas en Dido, Van Hero en Leander etc.); the classical subjects and even more their realism and eroticism bear witness to the renaissance spirit. He also wrote poems in Latin and translated from Ovid, Terence, Virgil, Sophocles (Antigone, ed. J. Grietens, 1922) and Horace.

J. A. Worp, in Tijdschr. Nederl. T. en Lett., 20 (1900); W. van Eeghem, in Versl. Med. Vlaamse Ac. (1941). J.J.M.

Giacometti, PAOLO (*Novi Ligure 19 III 1816; †Gazzuolo 31 VIII 1882), Italian playwright of prolific output. His work, mainly romantic historical and social drama, though popular in his own day, is that of a professional rather than an artist. His best known plays are Elizabetta, Regina D'Inghilterra (1853) and Il Poeta e la Ballerina (1841).

Teatro scelto (4 vols, 1857–63).
G. Costetti, La Compagnia Reale Sarda e il teatro dal 1821 al 1855 (1893); G. Grimaldi Grosso, P. G. nella vita e nelle opere (1916). N.K.W.

Giacomino da Verona (fl. mid-13th century), north Italian religious poet. A Franciscan friar, Giacomino wrote two poems, the one on the 'Heavenly Jerusalem', the other on the 'Infernal Babylon', of 280 and 340 lines respectively. The monorhymed quatrains run fluently; but are not otherwise remarkable.

E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); C. Dionisotti and C. Grayson, Early Italian Texts (1949).
G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930); L. Russo, Ritratti e disegni storici, III (1951). K.F.

Giacomino Pugliese (fl. c. 1200–50), Italian poet of the Sicilian School (q.v.). Nothing is known of his life. The 8 love-poems ascribed to him are remarkably fresh and clear; he is perhaps the most genuine poet of the school. One may note his use, in one of the poems, of the 'popular' contrasto-form—a kind of amorous altercation.

Le Rime di G. P., ed. M. Santangelo (1937); E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); C. Dionisotti and C. Grayson, Early Italian Texts (1949).
V. De Bartholomaeis, Primordi della lirica d'arte in Italia (1943); G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930). K.F.

Giacosa, GIUSEPPE (*Colleretto Parella, now Pedanea, Aosta 21 X 1847; †1 IX 1906), Italian writer of versatile genius with a personal preference for the theatre. The friend of De Amicis and Boito his success began with plays in verse on pseudo-medieval subjects in the romantic style, e.g. Una partita a scacchi (1873); from these he was attracted to French naturalism, producing I Tristi Amori (1888), considered by many his best work, and finally to Ibsen. Though his work often lacks thought or passion, much of it is animated by a love of beautiful things far removed from reality. His Novelle e Paesi valdostani (1886) and other works are still read and he was part author of the librettos of Puccini's La Bohème, Tosca and Madam Butterfly.

Teatro in prosa e in versi di G. G., ed. Casanova (n.d.).
S. Sciuto, G. G. e la sua opera (1910); La Lettura, 10 (1906). N.K.W.

Giamboni, BONO (*c. 1230; †c. 1300), Florentine prose-writer. A lawyer by profession, he, with Brunetto Latini, was the chief Italian prose-translator of his century. He made versions of Orosius, of Latini's Trésor, of The Art of War of F. Vegetius and of minor medieval works of edification. He wrote also an original Introduction to the Virtues. His prose is admired for elegance and precision.

Delle Storie de P. Orosio, ed. F. Tassi (1849); Il Tesoro di B. L. volgarizzato da B. G., ed. Gaiter (1878–83); for other works see E. Proto, in Studi medievali, 3 (1908), and L. Mannucci, in Studi di filologia romanza, 9.
S. Debenedetti, 'B. G.', in Studi medievali, 4 (1913); G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930). K.F.

Giambullari, PIER FRANCESCO (*Florence 1495; †ibid. 24 VIII 1555), Italian historian and man of letters, wrote the first European history in Italian—a work of greater stylistic elegance than historical value—and a grammar of Florentine usage, which he championed in the contemporary language controversy.

Historia dell'Europa (from A.D. 887 to 947, unfinished), ed. C. Bartoli (1566), A. Mortara (1822), A. Gotti (1856), G. Marangoni (1910); Il Gello (1546); De la lingua che si parla e scrive in Firenze (1551).
G. Kirner, Sulla storia dell'Europa di P. F. G. (1889); C. Vallacca, La vita e le opere di P. F. G. (1898); G. L. Luzzato, L'Arte di P. G. (1934). P.McN.

Gianni dei Ricevuti, LAPO (*Florence c. 1270; †c. 1330), Italian poet. A notary by profession, he was a friend of Cavalcanti and Dante and is mentioned by the latter in a famous sonnet and in De Vulg. El. His own verse (16 poems, mostly canzoni and ballate) is average stilnovismo (q.v.) in style and diction; more light-hearted than Cavalcanti, less pensive, of course, than Dante—yet resembling the latter's Vita Nuova in its representation of the donna as 'beatific', more perhaps than the verse of any other member of the group.

Rime de L. G. e di Gianni Alfani, ed. E. Lamma, Lanciano, Carabba (1912); Rimatori del dolce stil novo, ed. L. Di Benedetto (1939).
F. Figurelli, Il dolce stil novo (1933); F. Biondolillo, Dante creatore del d. st. n. (1937).
K.F.

Giannone, PIETRO (*Ischitella 7 V 1676; †Turin 7 III 1748), Italian historian. Jurist; a follower of Vico; excommunicated (1723), he lived in exile (Vienna, Venice, Geneva) and died after 13 years in prison. Giannone wrote the Storia civile del Regno di Napoli (1723), a comprehensive survey of Neapolitan history, advocating secular government and opposing the political pretensions of the papacy. Other works include an autobiography and the Triregno, a critical examination of Catholic dogma.

Storia civile del Regno di Napoli (4 vols, 1723; 11 vols, 1823); Il Triregno, ed. Parente (3 vols, 1940); La Vita di P. G., ed. Nicolini (1905).
F. Nicolini, Gli scritti e la fortuna del G. (1913) and Le teorie politiche di P. G. (1915); L. Marini, P. G. e il giannonismo a Napoli nel Settecento (1950).
M.W.

Giannotti, DONATO (*Florence 27 XI 1492; †Rome 27 XII 1573), Italian writer. Secretary to republican, exile from Medicean, Florence, he advocated for his native city the governo misto of his admired Venice in political writings which display acute analysis if restricted vision.

Opere politiche e letterarie, ed. F. L. Polidori (2 vols, 1850).
I. Sanesi, La vita e l'opera di D. G. (1889); E. Zanoni, D. G. nella vita e negli scritti (1900).
P.McN.

Gibbon, EDWARD (*Putney 27 IV 1737; †London 16 I 1794), English historian. The greatest of historians, Gibbon is also, thanks to his Autobiography, the best known. It describes his removal to Lausanne after his conversion to Roman Catholicism at Oxford, and his abortive love-affair ('I sighed as a lover, I obeyed as a son'); his subsequent service with the Hampshire militia, which was 'not useless to the historian of the Roman Empire'; and his momentous visit to Rome in 1764. Gibbon's residence in Switzerland had given him a cosmopolitan outlook and he wrote with equal ease in French and English. Even more than the wide reading and exact scholarship by which he prepared himself for his life's work, his style has ensured his lasting fame. Its deliberation and formality are in keeping with the massiveness of his theme, while his innuendo and irony, with the urbanity of the 18th century, play especially upon religious subjects, 'sapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer'.

Essai sur l'Étude de la Littérature (1761; Eng. tr. 1764); Critical Observations on the Sixth Book of the Aeneid (1770); The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (I, 1776; II and III, 1781; IV, V, VI, 1788; ed. J. B. Bury, 7 vols, 1896–1900).—Miscellaneous Works, ed. Lord Sheffield (2 vols, 1796), ed. J. B. Bury (1907); The Autobiographies of E. G., ed. J. Murray (1896); The Memoirs of the Life of E. G., ed. G. Birkbeck Hill (1900, standard ed.); Letters, ed. R. E. Prothero (2 vols, 1896); Journal, ed. D. M. Low (1929).
J. C. Morison, G. (1878); G. M. Young, E. G. (1932); E. Blunden, E. G. and his Age (Arthur Skemp Memorial Lecture, 1935); R. B. Mowat, G. (1936); D. M. Low, E. G. (1937); J. E. Norton, A Bibliography of the Works of E. G. (1940).
R.F.

Giese, FRANZ (*Münster 21 XII 1845; †Neuss 9 XI 1901), Low German collector and writer of anecdotes centred round one Franz Essink, a citizen of Münster in Westphalia; they were later continued by Landois.

Franz Essink, sin Liäwen un Driven äs aolt Mönstersk Kind (1874).
G.C.

Giesler-Anneke, MATHILDE FRANZISKA (*Lerchenhausen, Westphalia 3 IV 1817; ∞3 VI 1847 Fritz Anneke; †Milwaukee, Wisc. 25 XI 1884), German-American suffragist and author. Originally a pious Roman Catholic she became a freethinker and a pioneer of feminism. After the Baden revolution of 1848 the Annekes had to flee to the United States where she continued her work for women's suffrage.

Das Weib im Konflikt mit den sozialen Verhältnissen (1846); 'Memoiren einer Frau aus dem Badisch-Pfälzischen Feldzug', ed. A. B. Faust, in Americana Germanica, 20 (1918).
G. H. Genzmer, in Dict. Am. Biog., VII (1931).
E.R.

Gifford, HUMFREY (fl. 1580), English poet and translator, possibly schoolmaster at Barnstaple, and probably second son of Anthony Gifford of Halsbury. His felicitous verse and readable prose may have been known to Shakespeare. He is reminiscent of Chaucer, the Italians and the Mirror for Magistrates.

A Posie of Gilloflowers (1580); Complete Poems and Translations in Prose, ed. A. B. Grosart (1875), ed. F. J. Harvey Darton (1933).
B.L.J.

Gifford, WILLIAM (*IV 1756; †London 31 XII 1826), English man of letters, editor of Quarterly Review from its inception by anti-radicals, 1809. An adherent of the old school in literature, he bitterly criticized rising writers, published an attack on Keats's Endymion in 1819 and earned the hatred of Hazlitt.

Baviad and Maeviad (satires pub. tog. 1797); Epistle to Peter Pindar (1800); Perseus (1821, verse tr.).

R. B. Clark, Life (1931); C. C. Southey, Life and Correspondence of Robert Southey (6 vols, 1849–50; for light on Gifford as editor); Hazlitt, Spirit of the Age (for bitter attack on Gifford, 1825). R.M.H.

Gigli, GIROLAMO (*Siena 14 X 1660; †Rome 4 I 1722), Italian dramatist. Academician; professor of Tuscan letters, Siena; exiled (1717); a precursor of Goldoni in theatrical reform. Radically opposed to all hypocrisy, Gigli composed satirical comedies in the French classical style, notably Don Pilone (1711), in imitation of Molière's Tartuffe, and the farcical Sorellina di Don Pilone (1712). Other works include miscellaneous verse, satirical prose and the Vocabolario cateriniano (1707, 1717), a dictionary defiantly asserting the superiority of Sienese over the Florentine dialect.

Scritti satirici in prosa e in verso, ed. Bianchi (1865); Il Gazzettino, ed. Allodoli (1913); Vocabolario cateriniano, ed. Fanfani (1866).—Opere (3 vols, 1797–98, incomplete).

F. Favillo, G. G. senese nella vita e nelle opere (1907). M.W.

Gilani, 'ABD AL QADIR (*Nif (Gilan) 1077 ?; †Baghdad 1166 ?), founder of the first great Moslem mystic brotherhood. He went to Baghdad in 1095 where he studied law and philology. In 1127 he started preaching and by 1134 was so popular that a convent was built for him by private subscription. Other convents soon recognized his authority, which after his death (sometimes through only loosely connected congregations) spread over the entire Moslem world.

His works consist mainly of sermons (some of the best in Islamic literature), prayers and treatises on ritual and ethics—notably his famous Sufi manual Al Ghunya. The style is usually free of technicalities and the spirit one of toleration and philanthropy. The Qadiri order was generally progressive and unfanatical.

Al Ghunya Li-tālibi Tariq al Haqq (1871); Al Fath al Rabbani (1884); Hizb Basha'ir al Khairāt (1886); Al Fuyudat al Rabbaniya (1886).

L. Rinn, Marabouts et Khouan (1884); A. Le Chatelier, Confréries Musulmanes du Hejaz (1887); O. Depont and X. Coppolani, Confréries Religieuses Musulmanes (1897); D. S. Margoliouth, 'Abd al Qadir al Djili', in Ency. of Islam, I (1913); H. A. Rose, The Darvishes (1927). W.A.el K.

Gilbert, GABRIEL (*c. 1610; †c. 1680), French dramatist and poet. Among his patrons were Richelieu and queen Christina of Sweden, who appointed him her resident in Paris (1657). He used his moderate talent in composing light verse and a series of romantic tragedies and tragi-comedies.

Téléphonte (1641); Hypolite ou Le Garçon insensible (1647); Sémiramis (1647); La Mort d'Arrie et de Pétus (1659); Théagène (1662); Les Amours d'Ovide (1663); Héro et Léandre (1667).

E. J. Pellet, A Forgotten French Dramatist, G. G. (Paris, 1931). G.B.

Gilbert, SIR HUMFREY (*Compton, nr Dartmouth; ∞1578/79 ? daughter of John Aucher; †off the Azores 9 IX 1583), English soldier, statesman, seaman, pioneer-colonist, famed for his efforts to find the north-west passage, whose tract Queen Elizabeth's Academy (1572) suggests much that was obtained by Bodley and, later, London University.

Queene Elizabethes Achademy, repr. Early Eng. Text Soc., Ex. Ser. (1869); A Discourse of Discoverie for a new Passage to Cataia (1576), ed. C. Slafter (1903). B.L.J.

Gilbert, NICOLAS-JOSEPH LAURENT (*Fontenay-le-Château, Vosges 1751; †Paris 12 XI 1780), French poet. The pathos of his elegiac verse caused him to be claimed as a forerunner of the romantics. His hatred of the anti-religious rationalism of his century breaks out in his satirical poems Le Dix-huitième siècle (1775) and Mon Apologie (1778). His early death was caused by a riding accident.

Œuvres complètes (1823); Œuvres choisies, ed. P. Perret (1882).

A. de Vigny, Stello (1832, his life romanticized); E. Laffay, Le poète G. (1898). G.B.

Gilbert, SIR WILLIAM SCHWENCK (*London 18 XI 1836; ∞Lucy Agnes Turner; †Harrow Weald 29 V 1911), English dramatist and humorous verse writer. Having achieved success with his skittish verses (The Bab Ballads, 1869) and several comedies and burlesques, he entered into the famous partnership with (Sir) Arthur Sullivan the musician, writing the witty, satirical, delightfully absurd librettos for the most popular light operas of the century.

H.M.S. Pinafore (prod. 1878); The Pirates of Penzance (1879); Patience (1881); The Mikado (1885); The Gondoliers (1889).
W. Archer, English Dramatists of Today (1882); E. A. Browne, W. S. G. (1907); L. Baily, The Gilbert and Sullivan Book (1952).
R.A.S.-J.

Gildas (*c. 500; †570), Romano-British historian, author of the De Excidio et Conquestu Britanniae (c. 547), a primary but unreliable document for early English history.

Ed. T. Mommsen in Mon. Germ. hist., auct. antiq., 13 (1898); Migne, Patr. Lat., 69.
F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (2nd ed. 1947).
R.W.B.

Gildon, Charles (*Gillingham, Dorset 1665 ?; ∞1688; †London ? 1724), English dramatist, critic, editor and writer of much miscellaneous prose and verse of varying quality and importance. A Roman Catholic and at Douay (1677), Gildon later became a deist. Conflict with Pope earned him a disparaging judgment with which he is still encumbered. If his original ability is weak, he shows strength in his understanding of the literary standards of his time, and his Life of Betterton (1710) says much worth saying on the contemporary theatre. His criticism of Shakespeare is not negligible, and he was associated with open praise of Milton, editing Miscellaneous Letters (1694).
B.L.J.

Letters and Essays (1694), 2 essays repr. in W. H. Durham, Critical Essays 1700–25 (1915); The Lives and characters of the English Dramatick Poets (1699); Complete Art of Poetry (2 vols, 1718) part repr. in W. H. Durham above; The Life . . . of Mr Daniel Defoe (1719), repr. P. Dottin (1923, with biog.).
J.R.B.

Giles of Rome (*Rome 1246/47; †Avignon 22 II 1316), philosopher, pupil of Thomas Aquinas; prior-general of the Augustinian Order (1292) and bishop of Bourges (1295). He wrote commentaries on Aristotle, Peter Lombard and Porphyry as well as political treatises which had a widespread influence.

G. Boffito, Saggio di bibliografia Egidiana (1911); U. Oxilia and G. Boffito, Un trattato inedito di E. Colonna (1908); U. Mariani, Scrittori Politici Agostiniani del sec. XIV (1927).
R.R.R.

Gilles de Paris (fl. 1200), author of a Latin poem, the Carolinus, on the virtues of Charlemagne, which he presented to prince Louis, son of Philip Augustus.

H. F. Delaborde, 'Note sur le Carolinus de G. de P.', in Mélanges Émile Chatelain (1910).
F.J.E.R.

Gilles le Vinier (†Arras 13 XI 1252), French lyric poet. Mentioned in 1225 as canon of Lille and official of Arras; canon of Arras in 1234. Six of his poems (ed. A. Metcke, 1906), metrically ingenious and in a light and graceful style, are extant.

A. Guesnon, Recherches biographiques sur les trouvères artésiens (1894).
F.W.

Gilm zu Rosenegg, Hermann von (*Innsbruck 1 XI 1812; †Linz 31 V 1864), Austrian poet. Striving for political awakening in the Tirol, he attracted official disfavour by his passionate anti-jesuitical verse. His love-poems and lyrics reveal a sensitive ear and eye.

Tiroler Schützenleben (1863); Gedichte (2 vols, 1864; sel. tr. J. G. Legge, Rhyme and Revolution in Germany, 1917).—Gesamtausgabe, ed. R. Greinz (1895); Familien- und Freundesbriefe, ed. M. Necker (1913).
A. Dörrer, Gilms Weg und Weisen (1924).
H.A.P.

Gilpin, William (*nr Carlisle 4 VI 1724; ∞c. 1754 Margaret Gilpin; †Boldre 5 IV 1804), English author. His poetical and reflective accounts of his travels in England, illustrated by his own aquatint engravings, set a fashion for picturesque travel-books, satirized in Dr Syntax.

Observations on the River Wye and several parts of South Wales (1782; followed by similar works on Cumberland, Westmorland, Scottish Highlands, Isle of Wight, West of England); Remarks on Forest Scenery and other Woodland Views (1790); Life of Latimer (1755; followed by lives of Wycliffe, Cobham, Huss, Jerome of Prague, Zisca); Essay on Prints (1768); Lectures on Church Catechism (1779).
Warner, Literary Recollections. Original Letters from W. G. (1817).
R.M.H.

Gil y Carrasco, Enrique (*Villafranca del Bierzo, León 1815; †Berlin 1846), Spanish novelist and poet. He studied law and the humanities; entered diplomacy; was a friend of Espronceda and Humboldt. Though a fine, delicate poet he is mainly known for El señor de Bembibre (1844, new ed. 1920), considered the best romantic novel in Spanish. Much of its charm is due to its lyrical qualities. The subject centres round the Order of the Templars in Spain.

Obras (2 vols, 1883).—El Señor de Bembibre, Eng. tr. G. W. Gethen and L. Veaho as The Mystery of Bierzo Valley (1938).
J. M. Goy, E. G. Su vida y sus escritos (1924).
R.M.N.

Gil y Zárate, Antonio (*Real Sitio de San Ildefonso 1793; †Madrid 1861), Spanish playwright. He studied science at the Sorbonne; became professor of French and an academician; and intervened in politics. His first plays were of a neo-classical French pattern but under romantic influence he evolved towards historical drama. His Carlos II was a disguised political attack against reactionary Spain. His fame died with him.

Obras dramáticas (Paris, 1850).—Un año después de la boda (1826); Blanca de Borbón (1835); Don Trifón o todo dinero (1841); Carlos II, el hechizado (1844); Guzmán el Bueno (1847).

Marqués de Valmar, 'Don A. G. y Z', in Aut. Dram. Contemp. (1883). R.M.N.

Ginsberg, Mordechai Aharon (*Salant 3 XII 1795; †Vilna 5 XI 1846), Hebrew essayist. Ginsberg's main contribution to the Jewish 'enlightenment', was to make general knowledge accessible to the Jewish community by translating history and geography into Hebrew. In his autobiography Aviezer he gave a candid and startling description of his childhood and youth. Y.H.

Gioberti, Vicenzo (Turin 5 IV 1801; †Paris 26 X 1852), Italian patriot, philosopher and author whose plans for reform embraced most aspects of Italian life. Exiled in 1833 for his adherence to Mazzini, he returned in 1848 and became a minister and president of the council under Carlo Alberto. In 1849 he was sent as Piedmontese envoy to the French government and then retired from active politics, devoting the rest of his life to political propaganda. As a philosopher Gioberti was independent of systems, and the work which first brought him fame, Il Primato morale e civile degli Italiani (1843), antagonized Mazzini and his followers almost as much as it encouraged Italian patriots of more moderate tendencies; it also brought him the open hostility of the Jesuits. The controversy which ensued led to various polemical writings culminating in Il Rinnovamento civile d'Italia (1851) in which he modified certain ideas expressed in the Primato. Gioberti is least well known for his literary work, but his acquaintance with Leopardi and Manzoni encouraged an independence which is at its best in his satires.

Le opere di V. G. (1851); Le opere postume di V. G. (1855–63); Epistolario di V. G. (1938); I Carteggi di V. G., ed. L. Madaro (n.d.); Edizione nazionale (32 vols, 1938 ff.).

G. Saitta, Il pensiero di V. G. (1927); C. Sgroi, L'Estetica e la critica letteraria di V. G. (1921); A. Bruers, Roma nel pensiero del G. (1935); R. Freschi, L'Azione politica di G. (1935). N.K.W.

Giordani, Pietro (*Piacenza 1 I 1774; †Parma 2 IX 1848), Italian patriot whose liberal ideas led to continual persecution and exile. The friend of Capponi, Monti and Leopardi, his great sensitivity broke up many of his friendships. His output was considerable but fragmentary because of his impatience and meticulousness, consisting mainly of short works on a variety of subjects, many of them unfinished. Italian prose of the period owes much to his reforming zeal though he was excessively preoccupied with form. His Epigrafi brought him well-deserved fame.

Opere (1854–63); Le lettere di P. G., ed. G. Ferretti (1937, incomplete).

S. Fermi, Saggi giordaniani (1915); S. Fermi, 'Rassegna giordaniana', in Boll. stor. piacentino (n.d.); Prose Illustre dell'Ottocento (1939). N.K.W.

Giordano da Pisa, or da Rivalto (*Pisa c. 1260; †Piacenza 19 VIII 1311), Italian preacher. A fervent Thomist, he studied at Pisa and at the Dominican schools of Bologna and Paris. Widely travelled in France, Germany and England he taught at Santa Maria Novella, Florence and at Pisa. Fra Giordano's Prediche are transcriptions by an unknown hand of his biblical discourses. Though often abridged they are an eloquent and important testimony of the church and piazza preaching tradition.

Prediche inedite del Beato Giordano da Rivalto, recitate in Firenze dal 1302 al 1305, ed. Narducci (1867); Mistici del Duecento e del Trecento, ed. Levasti (1935; selections).

A. Galletti, 'Fra G. da P.', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 31 and 33 (1898–99) and L'Eloquenza (1938); N. Sapegno, Il Trecento (1945; with biblio.). M.W.

Giovanni Fiorentino, (Ser) 14th-century Florentine narrative writer; life obscure. In exile (?) at Dovadola (Forlì) he composed Il Pecorone (1378), a collection of 50 comic, tragic and licentious novelle set in a framework suggested by the Decameron. The tale of Giannetto (IV.1) contains elements found later in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, including the bond with a Jew for a pound of flesh and the wooing of a lady at Belmont.

Il Pecorone di s. Giovanni Fiorentino, ed. Battaglia (1943); Narratori del Trecento, ed. N. Sapegno (1954).

F. Novati, 'Ser Giovanni del Pecorone', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 19 (1892); E. Gorra, 'Il Pecorone', in Studi di crit. lett. (1892); N. Sapegno, Il Trecento (1945; with biblio.). M.W.

Giovio, Paolo (*Como 19 IV 1483; †Florence 10 XII 1552), Italian historian. A widely travelled eye-witness of many notable events, he was raised to the episcopate under papal patronage. His magnum opus, the history of his own times, is a model of renaissance style.

Historiarum sui temporis libri XLV (pub. 1550–52, 1st 10 books were never written; covers period 1494–1547); Opera omnia (1578).

L. Rovelli, L'Opera storica e artistica di P. G. (1928); B. Croce, Conversazioni critiche, 3rd series (1932). P.McN.

Giraldi, Giambattista Cinzio (*Ferrara 1504; †ibid. 1573), Italian man of letters. He became a teacher of natural philosophy at the university of Florence and in 1541 succeeded Celio Calcagni in the chair of belles-lettres. He moved to Mondovi, Turin and Pavia, where he occupied the chair of rhetoric until his death. As a dramatist he favoured the trends, associated with Speroni, towards the reform of the theatre on Aristotelian lines, while himself advocating the imitation of Seneca's tragedies. He aimed to use the horror of his themes to effect an Aristotelian catharsis, but for Christian and Catholic ends. His Orbecche (1541) is considered the first modern tragedy on the classical pattern to have been performed in Italy. The Ecatommiti, begun in 1528 and published in 1565, is a collection of 130 indifferent tales, written with a moralizing, counter-reformist slant. It was translated into French and Spanish and supplied directly or indirectly the plots of Shakespeare's Measure for Measure and Othello. He also wrote a moralizing epic poem, Ercole (1557), two treatises on the composition of dramas and novels, and a pastoral poem of classical inspiration, Egle (1550 ?).

Tragedie (1583); Discorsi (1554); Eng. tr. of some tales in T. Roscoe, Italian Novelists (1825).

L. Berthé de Besaucèle, J. B. G. (1920); C. Guerrieri Crocetti, G. B. G. e il pensiero critico del secolo XVI (1932). C.P.B.

Giraldi, Giglio Gregorio, latinized Lilius Gregorius Gyraldus (*Ferrara 14 VI 1479; †Rome II 1552), Italian poet and humanist. Apostolic protonotary under Leo X and Clement VII, he published Latin poems and works of accurate scholarship, of which the dialogues De poetis nostrorum temporum are of considerable value and interest.

Poëmata (1536); Lilii Gregorii Gyraldi Ferrariensis Opera Omnia (2 vols, Leiden, 1696); De poetis nostrorum temporum, ed. K. Wotke (1894).

V. Rossi, 'Per la cronologia e il testo dei dialoghi di L. G. G.', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 37 (1901); F. L. Schoell, 'Les mythologistes italiens de la Renaissance et la poésie Élisabéthaine', in Rev. de Litt. Comp., 4 (1924). P.McN.

Giraldus Cambrensis (*Manorbier, Pembs. c. 1145–47; †1223 ?), Norman-Welsh traveller and autobiographer, who belonged to the de Barri family. He was nominated to the see of St David's in 1176. This aroused the wrath of Henry II because he had not been consulted. In 1185 Gerald was sent with prince John to Ireland; and in 1188 he accompanied archbishop Baldwin on a preaching crusade through Wales. The archbishop rejected him for the see of St David's in 1198 on the ground that the king would not approve of any relative of the Welsh princes in that office. He visited Rome in 1199, 1201, 1203 and 1207. When he saw that he could expect no real support from Rome he became reconciled with the king and archbishop. Gerald's independence of mind and his strong prejudices are obvious in his writings. His narrative style is racy and humorous, but he can also be both eloquent and forceful. His autobiographical works are of the greatest interest.

Opera, ed. Brewer, Dimock and Warner (8 vols, 1861–91); The Itinerary of Archbishop Baldwin through Wales, tr. R. Colt Hoare (2 vols, 1806); The Irish History . . ., tr. J. Hooker (1587).

H. Owen, Gerald the Welshman (1904); G. C. Coulton and F. P. Magoun, 'G. C. and Indo-Germanic Philology', in Speculum, I (1924); T. R. Phillips, Notes on G. C. (1924); F. M. Powicke, 'Gerald of Wales', in John Rylands Libr. Bull., XII (1928); U. T. Holmes, 'Gerald the Naturalist', in Speculum, XI; W. Kleineke, 'Das Liber de Principis Instructione', in Englische Fürstenspiegel (1937); Thomas Jones, Gerallt Gymro (1947), Mân us . . . (1949, in Welsh), 'Gerald the Welshman's Itinerary . . . ', in Jour. Nat. Lib. Wales, 6 (1949–50). C.P.

Girard d'Amiens, 13th-century French poet. His production is extensive, particularly the immense Charlemagne (1290 ?), written in imitation of Adenet le Roi. His commonplace Escanor (1280 ?), dedicated to queen Eleonor of Castile, is the latest Arthurian verse romance in date. Méliacin (1286 ?) tells in facile, monotonous style about a magic wooden horse.

Escanor, ed. H. Michelant (1886).

G. Paris, 'G. d'A.', in Histoire Littéraire de la France, 31 (1893). M.F.L.

Giseke, Nikolaus Dietrich (*Nemes-Csó, Hungary 2 IV 1724; †Sondershausen, Thuringia 23 II 1765), German poet. Of Hungarian descent Giseke was brought up in Hamburg and became a pastor. He contributed to the Bremer Beiträge.

Poetische Werke (1767).—F. Spehr, in Allgem. dt. Biogr., 9 (1879). H.B.G.

Gissing, GEORGE ROBERT (*Wakefield 22 XI 1857; †St Jean-de-Luz 28 XII 1903), English novelist. Gissing's education at Owens College, Manchester, where he showed considerable scholastic and literary promise, was cut short by an ill-advised love affair and, after visiting America and Germany, he settled in London. Miserably poor, married unhappily, subsisting precariously by teaching and journalism, he gained first-hand experience of the squalor and ugliness of slum-life so vividly represented in The Nether World (3 vols, 1889). The influence of Dickens is apparent in the characterization and melodramatic episodes of his early novels, but Gissing's social criticism bore principally upon the psychological implications of the evils he saw, and his insight into human motive was as powerful as his sense of the physical reality of the settings he created. Frustration, caused by poverty or by the threat of poverty working upon a complex nature, is a recurrent theme of his studies of both lower- and middle-class life. His tone, while serious, is not one of unrelieved gloom, for he brought to contemporary problems a novelist's subtlety in portraiture, particularly of women, and an ability to make failure interesting and drabness significant.

NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES: Workers in the Dawn (3 vols, 1880); The Unclassed (3 vols, 1884); Isabel Clarendon (2 vols, 1886); Demos (3 vols, 1886); Thyrza (3 vols, 1887); A Life's Morning (3 vols, 1888; with intro. by W. Plomer, 1947); The Emancipated (3 vols, 1890); New Grub Street (3 vols, 1891); Denzil Quarrier (1892); Born in Exile (3 vols, 1892); The Odd Women (3 vols, 1893); In the Year of Jubilee (3 vols, 1894); The Paying Guest (1895); Eve's Ransom (1895); Sleeping Fires (1895); The Whirlpool (1897); The Town Traveller (1898); Human Odds and Ends: Stories and Sketches (1898); The Crown of Life (1899); Our Friend the Charlatan (1901); Veranilda (1904); Will Warburton (1905); The House of Cobwebs and Other Stories (with intro. by T. Seccombe, 1906).—MISCELLANEOUS: Charles Dickens, a Critical Study (1898); By the Ionian Sea (1901); The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft (1903), ed. C. Chisholm (1953); Letters, ed. A. and E. Gissing (1927).

F. Swinnerton, G. G., a Critical Study (1912, 1923); Virginia Woolf, 'G. G.', in The Common Reader, Second Series (1932); H. G. Wells, Experiment in Autobiography (1934); S. V. Gapp, G. G., Classicist (1936). R.F.

Giusti, GIUSEPPE (*Monsummano nr Pescia 12 V 1809; †Florence 31 III 1850), Italian patriot and writer. The friend of Manzoni, Capponi and others, Giusti's great reputation in his own day as a poet has since suffered a decline, partly because much of his work was inspired by local incidents and minor current events, partly because of his own vacillating temperament. He attacked by turns most schools of literary thought, but was unwilling to commit himself to any consistent course. Giusti himself felt that he had wasted his time and could have done better. Nevertheless many of his poems, especially his satires, are justly famous and have created proverbial Italian characters. Among his minor works in prose the Epistolario (1904) is the most important as it contains a wealth of Tuscan expressions, words and idioms. By many of the writers concerned with the 'Questione della lingua' at that time Giusti was considered the finest writer of Tuscan prose.

Tutti gli scritti editi e inediti di G. G. (1924); Le poesie di G. G. (1936).

G. Surra, Indagini sul carattere e sull'arte di G. G. (1913); B. Croce, Poesia e non poesia (1935). N.K.W.

Giustinian, LEONARDO (*Venice c. 1388; †ibid. 10 XI 1446), Italian poet. An accomplished humanist, his graceful lyrics in Venetian, popular in metre and conception, were set to music and enjoyed enormous vogue, lending his name to light lyrics of this genre.

Poesie edite ed inedite di L. G., ed. B. Wiese (1883).

M. Dazzi, L. G. poeta popolare d'amore (1934). P.McN.

Gjörwell, CARL CHRISTOFFER (*Landskrona 10 II 1731; †Stockholm 26 VIII 1811), Swedish publisher, best known for his paper Den swenska Mercurius (1755–61, 1763–65), containing reports of new learned publications. Most came from foreign periodicals, but by stressing the humanities rather than the then fashionable natural sciences, it presaged the aesthetic trends of the Gustavian era. His manuscripts, particularly his copious correspondence, constitute a main source for Swedish cultural history of the later 18th century.

Brefväxling (6 vols, 1798–1810); En Stockholmskrönika ur C. C. Gjörwells brev 1757–78, ed. O. Sylwan (1920).

O. Levertin, Från Gustav III:s dagar (1896); O. Sylwan, Sv. pressens historia (1896); M. Lamm, Upplysningstidens romantik (2 vols, 1918–20). C.H.K.

Gladstone, William Ewart (*Liverpool 29 XII 1809; ∞1839 Catherine Glynne; †Hawarden 19 V 1898), English statesman, perhaps the foremost orator of his century, whose writings, in addition to those serving immediate political ends, show him an accomplished literary and theological critic and a scholar delighting in Homer.

Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age (3 vols, 1858); Juventus Mundi (1869); Homeric Synchronism (1876); Primer on Homer (1878); Gleanings from Past Years (7 vols, 1879; 8th vol. 1890); The State in its Relation with the Church (1838); Impregnable Rock of Holy Scriptures (1890); Vatican Decrees in their Bearing on Civil Allegiance (1874); Vaticanism (1875); Bulgarian Horrors and the Questions of the East (1876); A Chapter of Autobiography (1868); Speeches and Public Addresses (2 vols, 1892–94); G.'s Speeches: Descriptive Index and Bibliography, ed. A. T. Bassett (1917); Letters of G. to his Wife, ed. A. T. Bassett (1936); Correspondence on Church and Religion (2 vols, 1910); The Queen and Mr G., selection, with comm., P. Guedalla (1933).

F. Burrell, G. (1933); H. C. Wyld, The best English . . . together with notes on Mr G.'s pronunciation (1934). R.M.H.

Glanvill, Ranulf de (†Acre 1190), justiciar of England (1180), doubtful author of the Latin Tractatus de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Regni Angliae, the earliest treatise on English common law.

Tractatus, ed. G. E. Woodbine (1932; Eng. tr. J. Beames, 1812).

W. S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, II (4th ed. 1936). R.W.B.

Glapthorne, Henry (*Whittlesey 28 VII 1610; ∞ ? Susan ?; †after 1643), English dramatist. Little is known of Glapthorne's life, although he was called 'one of the chiefest poets' of the Caroline age. His plays illustrate well the transition from the Elizabethan to the Restoration stage. His poems resemble those of his friend Richard Lovelace. He was presumably a royalist and may have died in the civil war.

Argalus and Parthenia (1639); The Tragedy of Albertus Wallenstein (1639); The Hollander, a comedy (1640); Wit in a Constable, a comedy (1640).—The Plays and Poems of H. G., ed. R. H. Shepherd (2 vols, 1874).

J. L. Walter, H. G. (Times Lit. Supp., 19 IX 1936). J.B.B.

Glatigny, Joseph Albert Alexandre (*Lillebonne 21 V 1839; †Sèvres 16 IV 1873), French poet, strolling player and dramatist. Glatigny is one of the more picturesque figures of the parnassian school of poets. His early work, Les Vignes Folles (1857), shows the influence of Banville.

Verse: Les Flèches d'or (1864); Gilles et Pasquins (1872); Le Fer rouge (1871).—Various: Le Jour de l'An d'un Vagabond (1870); L'Illustre Brizacier (1873).—Poésies complètes (1879).

C. Mendès, La Légende du Parnasse contemporain (1884), G. (1906); J. Reymond, A. G. (1936). T.W.

Gleim, Johann Wilhelm Ludwig (*Ermsleben 2 IV 1719; †Halberstadt 18 II 1803), German poet. At Halle university Gleim met Uz and Götz, with whom he introduced into German literature wine and love songs after the manner of Anacreon, though intentionally devoid of experience. He served in the second Silesian war in 1744 as a military secretary, gaining the knowledge and enthusiasm expressed in his patriotic and popular Kriegslieder von einem preussischen Grenadier (1758). From 1747 he lived at Halberstadt as the secretary to the cathedral chapter. A friend of Lessing, Gleim was a kind and sympathetic helper of young writers.

Versuch in scherzhaften Liedern (2 vols, 1744); Lieder (1745); Lieder, Fabeln und Romanzen (1758); Lieder nach dem Anakreon (1766).

K. Becker, Gleim. Der Grenadier und seine Freunde (1919). H.B.G.

Glickel von Hameln (*Hamburg 1645; †1724), author of 7 volumes of memoirs, written in Old Yiddish, or Judaeo-German. One of the most delightful works in the whole range of Jewish literature, it is a primary source for the conditions of Jews in the 17th century.

Zikhronot Marat Glikel Hamil, ed. D. Kaufman (1896), Eng. tr. M. Lowenthal (1932). J.S.

Glinka, Fëdor Nikolayevich (*Smolensk prov. 8 VI 1786; †Tver' 11 II 1880), Russian poet of mystical and religious verse. Yet one of his secular poems, Troika, has actually become a folk-song known all over Russia. As a fighter against Napoleon in 1812 he also wrote on military matters.

Sochineniya (3 vols, 1869–72).

A. Zhiznevsky, Biografiya F. N. Glinki (1890). J.L.

Glišić, Milovan (*Gradac 6 I 1847; †Ragusa 20 I 1908), Serbian writer, held a number of posts in the state theatre, library and publishing house. His work was devoted mainly to journalism and the writing of plays, and to translations from Russian and French classics. His best original compositions are his short stories dealing in realistic light with Serbian peasant life.

PROSE: Pripovetke (2 vols, 1877–82); Prva Brazda (a rustic idyll, 1891).—PLAYS: Dva cvancika (1882); Podvala (1885). S.C.

Gnapheus, GUILHELMUS, or WILIEM DE VOLDER (*The Hague 1493; †Norden 29 IX 1568), writer of polemic Protestant literature in Latin and Dutch. In 1520 he became head of the Latin school at The Hague. Continually persecuted for his faith and outlawed in 1528, he fled to Germany. On account of his Anabaptism he had to seek refuge in East Friesland in 1547 where he became tutor to the sons of countess Anna and later steward of her estates.

Een suverlicke ende seer schoone disputacie etc. (Emden, between 1525 and 1529), in a Latin reprint recast as a biography of Jan de Bakker (both ed. Paul Fredericq, Corpus document. inquisitionis etc., 4); Een troost ende spiegel der siecken etc., repeatedly reprinted since 1531, later corrected and extended by the author as Tobias ende Lazarus etc., Emden, 1547 (ed. in Bibl. Ref. Neerl., 1); Acolastus (1528; ed. J. Bolte, 1871), prototype of the biblical school dramas on the model of Terence, of which G. wrote several more.

J. Lindeboom, Het Bijbelsch Humanisme in Nederland (1913) and in Nieuw Nederl. Biogr. Wdb., III; De Bie en Loosjes, Biogr. Wdb. v. Protest. Godgel. in Nederland, III. J.J.M.

Gnedich, NIKOLAY IVANOVICH (*Poltava prov. 2 II 1784; †Moscow 3 II 1833), Russian poet and translator of Homer's Iliad (1829) in which he successfully balanced the classical manner with suitable archaic expressions. Among his poems there are good paraphrases of Greek folk-songs.

Sobranie stikhotvoreniy (1936).

S. A. Vengerov, Istochniki slovarya russkikh pisateley (1900). J.L.

Gnessin, URI-NISSAN (*Starodub, Ukraine 1879; †Warsaw 6 III 1913), Hebrew short-story writer. The background of the stories was the staleness of Jewish small-town life and its atmosphere of frustration. His characters are young people full of the restless longings of adolescence. His style marks a new tendency in Hebrew literature—away from realism and towards the poetic perception of nature and human feelings.

Kithbe U. N. G. (3 vols, Merhavia, 1946); Ha-Toren (1923–24, biblio.). C.K.

Gobin, ROBERT (fl. 1507), French poet. Dean of Laigny sur Marne in the diocese of Paris and advocate in the ecclesiastical court, he wrote allegorical and didactic verse of some satiric force.

Vision de la Mort (1504?); Loups ravissans (1506) and Confession generale en rime (1507) in contemporary undated editions; brief extracts in Fleurs de Rhétorique, ed. K. Chesney (1950).

E. Langlois, Essai historique sur la Danse des Morts, I (1851); T. Walton, in Studies presented to L. E. Kastner (1932). M.Y.

Gobineau, JOSEPH ARTHUR, COMTE DE (*Ville-d'Avray 14 VII 1816; †Turin 13 X 1882), French writer. Gobineau was a career diplomat and, among other appointments, was French ambassador at Tehran, Rio de Janeiro (1869) and Stockholm (1872). He published two volumes of verse (L'Aphroessa, 1869 and Amadis, 1876): a novel (Les Pléiades, 1874), several historical studies, and a volume of travels (Trois Ans en Asie). His best-known work, however, is l'Essai sur l'Inégalité des Races Humaines (3 vols, 1853–55) which is an apologia for the Aryan race, and had a very great influence on later racial theories. He was a friend of Wagner and enjoyed a high reputation in Germany.

Les Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale (1865); Histoire des Perses (1869); La Renaissance (1877); Histoire d'Ottar Jarl (1879).

L. Schemann, G., Eine Biographie (1913); O. Levy, The Life, Work and Influence of Count A. de G. (1913; intro to Eng. tr. of La Renaissance); A. Combris, La Philosophie des Races du Comte de G. et sa portée actuelle (1938).—Special numbers of Europe (1923) and Nouv. Rev. Fr. (1934). M.G.; J.P.R.

Goddard, WILLIAM (fl. 1615), English satirist, probably a member of the Middle Temple, who mainly attacks women, often grossly.

A Mastiff Whelp (1599); A Nest of Wasps (1615), ed. C. H. Wilkinson (1921); A Satyricall Dialogue (1616?). B.L.J.

Godebski, CYPRIAN (*Polesie? 1765; †Raszyn 19 IV 1809), Polish poet. A soldier from 1797 (in Italy), he died on the battlefield. He is the best of the 'soldier poets' of the period.

VERSE: Wiersz do legiów polskich (1805).—NOVEL: Grenadier filozof (1805).—DIARY: Pamiętnik oblężenia Mantui (1864).—Dzieła wierszem i prozą (1821).

M. Smolarski, Poeta wiersza do legiów polskich C. G. (1910). S.S.

Godefroi de Leigni (Lagny nr Meaux? fl. c. 1170), French clerk who, at the author's request, wrote the concluding part (some 1,000 lines) of Chrétien de Troyes' Charete. F.W.

Godescalc (c.* 805; †869). Of Saxon birth, he studied at Fulda and at Reichenau, with his friend Walafrid Strabo.

Highly gifted and wayward, he was a pupil of archbishop Raban Maur, with whom he came into conflict over the question of predestination. He wrote theological treatises, some charming poems of great originality and perhaps also the Ecloga Theoduli.

Poetae Latini Aevi Carolini, III; Ecloga Theoduli, ed. J. Osternacher (1902).

G. Morin, 'Gottschalk retrouvé', in Rev. Bénéd., XI (1931–32); N. Fickermann, 'Wiedererkannte Dichtungen Gottschalks', ibid.; G. L. Perugi, Gottschalc (1911). F.J.E.R.

Godewyck, PIETER VAN (*3 II 1593; †11 VIII 1660), Dutch poet, headmaster at Delft, wrote patriotic poems in the manner of Cats; famous for his school drama, a comedy classical in form but in the Dordrecht dialect, Der Vrouwe Lof (1646), and Wittebroodskinderen of bedorven jongelingen, a comedy after the Discoli by Schonaeus (1641).

G. D. J. Schotel, Godewijck's Wittebroodskinderen (1867); J. Scheltema, Geschied- en letterkundig Mengelwerk, III, 3 (1823). A.M.B.W.

Godfrey, THOMAS (*Philadelphia 4 XII 1736; †Wilmington, Del. 3 VIII 1763), American poet and playwright. He wrote poems imitating Pope. His blank-verse play, The Prince of Parthia, in the manner of the Jacobeans, was the first American tragedy staged in the colonies.

The Court of Fancy: A Poem (1762); Juvenile Poems on Various Subjects, with The Prince of Parthia: A Tragedy (1765).

A. H. Quinn, A History of the American Drama from the Beginning to the Civil War (1943). H.L.C.

Godfrey of Viterbo (c.* 1120; †Viterbo 1191), poet and chronicler, was educated at Bamberg and may have been of German extraction. He served as chaplain and notary to Frederick I and Henry VI. His chief works are the Pantheon, a universal chronicle in verse and prose to 1186, and a sympathetic account of the emperor Frederick's exploits from 1162 to 1181.

Ed. G. Waitz in Mon. Ger. Hist., Script., XXII (1872).

U. Balzani, Le cronache italiane del Medievo (1900); H. Ulmann, Gotfrid von Viterbo (1863); L. Meyer, Les Légendes des matières de Rome, de France et de Bretagne dans le Pantheon de Godefroi de Viterbe (1933). R.R.R.

Godínez, Felipe (*Seville 1588; †Madrid ? 1637 ?), Spanish dramatist. He was of Jewish descent and was made to do public penance by the Inquisition. He wrote some interesting plays on Old Testament subjects.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 45. E.M.W.

Godolphin, SIDNEY (*Godolphin Hall 1609–10 ?; †Chagford 9 II 1643), English courtier poet who fell in battle. A member of Clarendon's circle, he accompanied Leicester abroad (1632), sat in Parliament for Helston where he supported Strafford. Godolphin shows great promise as an able couplet writer and lyrist, and anticipated the metre of In Memoriam.

Poems, ed. G. Saintsbury in Minor Poets of the Caroline Period, II (1906); ed. W. Dighton (1931); both contain the tr. Passion of Dido for Æneas. B.L.J.

Godwin, FRANCIS, bishop of Llandaff and Hereford (*Hannington 1562 ?; ∞ ?Woolton; †Whitourne ? IV 1633), English divine, celebrated as a historian, a friend of Selden and Camden. Godwin's Man in the Moon, written well before publication (1638), had enormous popularity, going through 25 editions in 4 languages by 1768. B.L.J.

A Catalogue of the Bishops of England (1601), ed. W. Richardson (1743).

T. Cooper, in Dict. Nat. Biog., 8 (1908). J.R.B.

Godwin, MARY, née WOLLSTONECRAFT (*nr London 27 IV 1759; ∞29 III 1797 William Godwin; †London 10 IX 1797). She was of Irish extraction, an impulsive and enthusiastic woman, a follower of Rousseau; wrote eloquently in support of women's rights.

A Vindication of the Rights of Man (1790); A Vindication of the Rights of Women (1792); Historical and Moral View of the French Revolution (1794); Letters written in Norway, Sweden and Denmark (1796).

C. Rouschenbusch-Clough, A Study of Mary Wollstonecraft (1898). R.McH.

Godwin, WILLIAM (*Wisbech, Cambs 3 III 1756; ∞29 III 1797 Mary Wollstonecraft, ∞1801 Mary J. Clairmont; †London 7 IV 1836), English political theorist. Godwin, who began as a Presbyterian minister and a Tory and became a sceptic and a pacifist anarchist, may be called the theorist of the romantic movement—he influenced Coleridge, Wordsworth, Southey and Shelley. His theories of social justice—he attacked institutions and preached the perfectibility of man—were given literary form in his novel Caleb Williams (1794).

An Enquiry Concerning the Principles of Political Justice, and its Influence on General Virtue and Happiness (2 vols, 1793); Memoirs of the Author of a Vindication of the Rights of Woman (1798); St Leon, a Tale of the 16th Century (1799); The Life of Geoffrey Chaucer (2 vols, 1803); Essay on Sepulchres (1809);

History of the Commonwealth of England (4 vols, 1824–28).

C. K. Paul, W. G., his Friends and Contemporaries (2 vols, 1876); L. Stephen, English Thought in the 18th Century (1902); F. K. Brown, The Life of W. G. (1926). B.H.

Goens, Rijklof Michaël van, pseud. 'le philosophe sans fard' (*Utrecht 12 V 1748; Wernigerode 25 VI 1810), Dutch scholar, essayist and translator; from 1766 professor (Greek, rhetoric and history) at Utrecht. Through international connexions and correspondence he was the first and most universal exponent of pre-romanticism in the Netherlands; contributed to De Nieuwe Tael- en Dichtkundige Bijdragen (1763–66) and was co-founder of the Maatschappij der Nederl. letterkunde (1766).

Diatribe de Cenotaphiis (1763); Verhandeling over het verhevene en naïve in de schoone kunsten en wetenschappen (tr. from M. Mendelssohn with important pref. 1769).

J. Wille, De literator R. M. v. G. en zijn kring, I (1937); P. J. C. de Boer, R. M. v. G. en zijn verhouding tot de literatuur van West-Europa (1938); P. van Valkenhoff, 'R. M. v. G.' in Studiën, 133. J.W.W.

Goes, Johannes Antonides van der (*Goes 3 V 1647; ∞1678 Susanna Bormans; †18 IX 1684), Dutch poet and surgeon. He came into contact with Vondel through his drama Trazil. This friendship, a consolation to Vondel in the loneliness of his old age, was decisive for Antonides' poetic style. After this solitary drama he wrote lyrical poems, the majority of them inspired by national events. His Ystroom (1671), with illustrations by Romeyn de Hooghe, shows the strength and weakness of his talent: grandeur verging on bombast. Goes marks the transition from the living baroque to its stereotyped aftermath.

Trazil of overrompelt Sina (written 1667); Theems in Brant (1667); Bellone aan band (1667); Nederlaag der Turken (1671); Oorspronk van 's Lants ongevallen (1672); Uitvaert van de Ruyter (1676); Marsyas (satirical poem against Pels); J. Bowring's Batavian Anthology (1824).

David van Hoogstraten, Leven van A. v. d. G. met alle de gedichten (3rd ed. 1714); P. G. Witsen Geysbeek, Biogr., Anthol. en Critisch Woordenboek der Ned. Dichters (1821); J. Bauwens, La tragédie française et le théâtre hollandais au dix-septième siècle (Amsterdam, 1921). A.M.B.W.

Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von (*Frankfurt-am-Main 28 VIII 1749; ∞1806 Christiane Vulpius (†6 VI 1816); †Weimar 22 III 1832), German poet and man of letters. The son of the imperial counsellor Johann Kaspar Goethe (1710–82) and Katharina Elisabeth (née Textor, 1731–1808), Goethe was privately educated in comfortable patrician surroundings. The occupation of Frankfurt by the French 1759–62 widened his horizons and introduced him to the theatre. Leipzig, where he studied law 1765–68, had little to offer; his early writings show him still under rococo influences. A period at home recuperating after a severe illness followed, and in Strasbourg, where he completed his studies 1770–71, his genius burst forth, stimulated by his meeting with Herder, who introduced him to Shakespeare and the natural origins of poetry, and by his love for Friederike Brion. He spent 1771–75 in Frankfurt as a lawyer, whilst the attention which Götz von Berlichingen had attracted grew to a European reputation upon the publication of Werther (1774), which was inspired by his love of Charlotte Buff and the suicide of K. W. Jerusalem in Wetzlar 1772. It was as a restless, problematic figure, potentially too great to settle in the comfortable Frankfurt rut (engagement to Lili Schönemann), that he followed the young duke Karl August's call to Weimar, Nov. 1775. This microcosmic state, with its small-scale administration, provided an environment in which Europe's last universal man could develop himself in the round. The period 1775–86 was one of self-discipline through administrative responsibilities and the moderating influence of Charlotte von Stein: he had little time to write, but his scientific interests began to gain ground. The Italian journey (1786–88) was a flight from constricting circumstances and an important turning-point. The change to a southerly atmosphere and contact with classical antiquity brought a new burgeoning both to his scientific intuitions and to his creative powers, which now coalesced. Returning, he found that he had grown beyond his friends: their disapproval of his domestic liaison with Christiane Vulpius, who bore him a son in 1790, increased his isolation. He did not resume his administrative duties, except for the Weimar theatre, which he directed 1791–1817. Apart from his friendship with Schiller (1794–1805) he was henceforth to know less and less of the companionship of equals. Ripening from 1800 or so into the doyen of German letters, he was increasingly surrounded by protégés, worshippers, visiting foreign worthies and mauvaises langues: small wonder that he devised a self-protective official shell. His amazing vitality ensured his development to the last: Faust, Pt II, finished only in 1831, contained the sum of his matured experience. Binding together the 18th and the 19th centuries, his work falls into three periods. In the first, rococo juvenilia give place to Sturm und Drang (q.v.)—Werther, the Ur-Faust etc.—, where his strong feelings and poetic imagination pour out in unrestrained flood, and the emphasis is upon the individual. In the classical period (Tasso, Iphigenie, Hermann und Dorothea, Wilhelm Meister) form is increasingly important, the emphasis upon man in relation to society. The last period, from Schiller's death, when Goethe's classical rigorism was blended with as many romantic elements as he could approve, is more heterogeneous, containing the autobiographical books, the aridly wise Wanderjahre, Die Wahlverwandtschaften, which in structural and psychological subtlety foreshadows Henry James, and Faust (q.v.). At every period his deepest thoughts and feelings flowed naturally into lyric poetry: as late as 1823 his love for Ulrike von Levetzow evoked the Trilogie der Leidenschaft. Goethe said that his works were fragments of a great confession, and, though they were the greatest writing of their time, they only account for a fraction of the colossal shadow cast by his personality. His entire life was his work of art: letters, memoranda, recorded conversations etc. formed a gigantic quarry out of which others too shaped their works of art—wax-works and plaster images abound. From the 1780s onwards his scientific investigations—botany, biology, meteorology, optics—helped him towards balance and objectivity. It was his intention gradually to explore the laws governing the organization of living things. Though he was a patient and exact observer, creative imagination rather than ratiocination led the way in his science as in his writings. His guiding principle in every sphere was that all being was an organic whole, and this he embodied as far as possible not only in his works but in his life.

Annette (1767); Leipziger Liederbuch (1769); Die Mitschuldigen (1769); Götz von Berlichingen (1773); Satyros (1773, pr. 1817); Götter, Helden und Wieland (1773, pr. 1774); Clavigo (1774); Die Leiden des jungen Werthers (1774), tr. W. Rose (1929); Die Geschwister (1776); Der Triumph der Empfindsamkeit (1778); Iphigenie auf Tauris (1779, prose; final version 1787); Torquato Tasso (1790); Die Geheimnisse (1785); Schriften (8 vols, 1787–90); Egmont (1788); Römische Elegien (1795); Faust, ein Fragment (1790); Beiträge zur Optik (1791–92); Neue Schriften (7 vols, 1792–1800); Reineke Fuchs (1794); Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre (4 vols, 1795–96), tr. T. Carlyle (1824); Xenien (1796); Hermann und Dorothea (1798); ed. Die Propyläen (3 vols, 1798–1800); Achilleis (1799 ff.); Die Natürliche Tochter (1804); Epilog zu Schillers Glocke (1805); Winkelmann und sein Jahrhundert (1805); Faust I (1808); Pandora (1808); Wahlverwandtschaften (1809); Farbenlehre (1810); Dichtung und Wahrheit (4 vols, 1811–33); Morphologie (1817–23); Westöstlicher Divan (1819); Über Kunst und Altertum (6 vols, 1816–32); Italienische Reise (1816–17); Wilhelm Meisters Wanderjahre (1821, final version 1829), tr. T. Carlyle (1827); Annalen (1830); Faust II (1832), tr. L. MacNeice, Faust I and II (1951); Briefwechsel zwischen Goethe und Schiller, 1794–1805 (2 vols, 1828); Ausgabe letzter Hand (40 vols, 1827–32); sel. tr. various hands (Bohn; 14 vols, 1848–90); Hist.-krit. Gesamtausgabe (poetical works, 55 vols; scientific, 13 vols; diaries, 15 vols; letters, 50 vols; 1887–1918).

G. Lukacs, G. und seine Zeit (1947); K. Viëtor, G. (1949); A. Schweitzer, G. (1949); W. Bode, G. (9 vols, 1920–27); J. G. Robertson, G. (London, 1927); P. H. Brown, G. (N.Y., 1920); Barker Fairley, G. as revealed in his poetry (1932) and A Study of G. (1946); L. Lewisohn, G., the story of a man, told in his own words (1949); J. Boyd, Notes to G.'s Poems (1944); Sir Charles Sherrington, G. on Nature and on Science (2nd ed., 1949); R. D. Gray, G. the Alchemist (1952). Essays on G., ed. W. Rose (1949); Ernst Beutler, Essays um G. (2 vols, 1939–47); Goethe-Kalender (1905 ff.); Publications of the English Goethe Society (1886 ff.); A. Dickson, G. in England 1909–49, a bibliography (1951). H.A.P.

Goeverneur, JAN JACOB ANTONY, pseud. JAN DE RIJMER (*Hoevelaken 14 II 1809; †Groningen 19 IV 1889), Dutch poet, excellent children's poet, translator and editor of De Huisvriend (1843–82).

Gedichten en rijmen (1836); Verstrooide rijmen (1850); Fabelboek (4 vols, 1837).—Gezamenlijke gedichten en rijmen (1873–74); 'Autobiografie', in Noord en Zuid (1899).

P. L. van Eck Jr., in Het Kind (1940); E. K. Kossmann, R. Töpffer (1946). J.W.W.

Goffe, THOMAS (*1591; †East Clandon 27 VII 1629), English divine and poet, celebrated as an orator, whose three principal tragedies were acted at Christ Church, and his tragi-comedy before the king and queen at Salisbury. A woman-hater, he died soon after marriage.

The Raging Turke; or, Bajazet the Second (1631); A Couragious Turke; or, Amurath the First (1632); The Tragedie of Orestes (1633); Three Excellent Tragedies (1656); The Careless Shepherdess (1656). B.L.J.

Gofman (HOFMAN), VICTOR VICTOROVICH (*1884; †Paris 1911), Russian modernist poet. His lyrics are of an intensely intimate kind yet imbued with the 'decadent' nostalgia and the pessimism of a modern déraciné. He was less successful with his short stories.

Sobranie sochineniy (2 vols, 1917; another ed. 1922).
V. Bryusov, Dalëkie i blizkie (1911); N. Gumilëv, Pis'ma o russkoy poezii (1912).
J.L.

Gogol, Nikolay Vasilyevich (*Sorochintsy 19 III 1809; †Moscow 21 II 1852), Russian author. An Ukrainian by birth, he came to St Petersburg in search of employment. Frustrated in the civil service, he achieved immediate success with his humorous stories from Ukrainian life, Vecherá na khutore bliz Dikanki (2 vols, 1831–32). He enhanced his reputation by four excellent narratives in his Mirgorod (1835) and another three in his miscellany Arabeski (1835). His satirical comedy, Revizor ('The Government Inspector', 1836) was an unheard-of success. The greatest triumph was scored, however, by his grotesquely realistic novel, Mërtvye dushi ('Dead Souls', 1842), most of which he had written during his stay in Rome. In the same year the first collected edition of his works appeared—Sochineniya (2 vols)—which included his famous narrative Shinel' and his sprightly farcical comedy, Zhenit'ba ('The Marriage').

An eccentric and restless hypochondriac, Gogol can be regarded as one of the most puzzling figures between the romantic and the realistic periods in European literature. As he was always divided between his moral inhibitions and his art, he was anxious to permeate (especially after 1842) his works with didactic propensities. He even intended to write a moralizing continuation of Dead Souls and to turn the whole of it into a soul-saving trilogy. But his didacticism only undermined the spontaneity of his creative process. Hence the slowness with which he wrote the second volume of his great novel the MS. of which he burned in 1845 and then again shortly before his death. All that remains are four chapters of his final draft and fragments of a fifth chapter. What made things worse was his growing religious and moral crisis during which he wrote his sermonizing Vybrannye mesta iz perepiski s druzyami ('Selected Passages from Correspondence with Friends', 1847). The book was a failure. It provoked violent attacks on account of its reactionary spirit and was responsible for the famous letter Belinsky wrote to Gogol—the most indignant letter in Russian literature. Crushed by moral hypochondria and by his prolonged lack of artistic inspiration, Gogol even made—at the beginning of 1848—a pilgrimage to Palestine, but it was all in vain. At last he settled in Moscow where he died in a state of semi-madness.

Gogol's influence on the development of Russian literature was enormous. His grotesque realism was of a subjective kind—the realism of a wounded romantic idealist who describes life mainly in order to take revenge upon it by indicting and ridiculing its negative features. Nevertheless he was for a long time regarded as a pure realist. This was partly due to the critic Belinsky who based his own theory of realism (or 'natural school', as he called it) on the assumption that such works as The Government Inspector, Dead Souls and The Greatcoat were realism pure and simple. This realism of indictment remained one of the striking features of many a subsequent Russian author. So did Gogol's quest and 'vexation of the spirit' as well as his notion of the social and moral responsibility of literature. He exercised a strong influence above all on young Dostoyevsky and later on the symbolist Bely. Gogol's emotional and ornate prose penetrated—via Bely—even into the works of several Soviet writers. Altogether he is one of the most important figures in Russian literature as a whole.

Sochineniya (10 vols, 1915); Polnoye sobranie sochineniy (1921); Sobranie sochineniy (6 vols, 1950); The Works of Gogol, tr. C. Garnett (6 vols, 1922); Tales from Gogol, tr. R. Portnova (1945); Diary of a Madman, Nevsky Prospect, tr. B. Scott (1946); The Government Inspector, tr. D. J. Campbell (1947); Dead Souls, tr. G. Reavey (1948); Tales of Good and Evil, tr. D. Magarshack (1949).
V. J. Shenrok, Materialy dlya biografii Gogolya (4 vols, 1902–08); Louis Léger, Nicolas G. (1914); V. V. Vinogradov, Etyudy o stile Gogolya (1926); Pereverzev, Tvorchestvo Gogolya (1928); B. de Schloezer, G. (1932); A. Bely, Masterstvo Gogolya (1934); V. Veresayev, Kak rabotal G. (1934); V. V. Gippius, G. (1936); D. S. Merezhkovsky, G. et le diable (1939); V. V. Nabokov, N. G. (1944, 1947); N. V. Vodovozov, N. V. G. (1945); J. Lavrin, N. G. (1952). J.L.

Góis, Damião de (*Alenquer 2 II 1502; †ibid. 30 I 1574), Portuguese historian. A humanist of international repute, friend of Erasmus, Bembo and Vives, he studied at Louvain and Padua and travelled widely in northern Europe, making the acquaintance of Luther and Melanchthon. Twice denounced before the Inquisition for unorthodoxy, he was imprisoned 1571–73. Góis' most important Portuguese work is his history of the reign of king Manuel, which deals largely with Portugal's colonial expansion in the east. He also left several works in Latin, including an interesting treatise on the religion and customs of Ethiopia.

Chronica do felicissimo rei Dom Emanuel (4 parts, 1566–67), ed. J. M. Teixeira de Carvalho and D. Lopes (4 vols, 1926); Chronica do principe Dom João (1567), ed. A. J. Gonçalves Guimarães (1905); Fides, religio moresque Aethiopum (Louvain, 1540); Deploratio Lappianae gentis (Louvain, 1540).

G. J. C. Henriques, Inéditos Goesianos (2 vols, 1896–98); J. de Vasconcelos, Damião de Goes (1898); 'As Cartes Latinas de Damião de Goes', in O Instituto, 48 (1901); F. M. de Sousa Viterbo, Estudos sobre Damião de Goes (1900); M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne (1937), 'Le Cosmopolitisme de D. de G.', in Rev. litt. comparée, 18 (1938). T.P.W.

Goldfaden, ABRAHAM (*Konstantin, Ukraine 1840; †New York 1908), Yiddish writer and theatrical producer. He founded the first Yiddish theatre (Jassy, Rumania 1876). He began his literary career in 1863 writing poems in Hebrew, but soon reverted exclusively to Yiddish. After leaving Russia in 1875, he started a satirical weekly (Yisrolik) in Lemberg and another periodical in Czernovitz. Later he returned to Russia, touring the major cities with his theatrical troupe whose popular successes led the authorities to ban the theatre. In 1887 he went for the first time to New York where he finally settled in 1903. Goldfaden's poetry and plays remained popular long after his death, some of his poems becoming widely known as folk-songs.

VERSE: Tsitsim u-prakhim (1865); Dos Yidele (collected Yiddish poems, 1866); Yiddish natsionale gedikhte (1898); Shabsiel (1896).—PLAYS: Di Yidene (1869); Di Rekruten; Di Bobe mit'n ainikl; Shmendrik; Di Shtume Kalle; Kabtsanson & Hungerman; Bar Kochba (historical operetta); Shulamith; Doktor Almosado; Ben Ami, Di Kishef-makherin. J.S.

Golding, ARTHUR (*1536; ∞Ursula Raydon; †10 V 1606), English translator, educated Jesus College, Cambridge. Receiver to his nephew Edward de Vere, 17th earl of Oxford, Golding came into much landed property. His chief work was a translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses (1567) to which Shakespeare was indebted. His verse translations are lively and poetical.

The Eyght bookes of Caius Julius Caesar (1565); Sermons by M. John Caluine upon the Booke of Job (1574); A Woorke concerning the Trewnesse of the Christian Religion (1587); A Tragedie of Abraham's Sacrifice, ed. M. W. Wallace (Toronto, 1906).

L. T. Golding, An Elizabethan Puritan (N.Y. 1937). G.F.S.

Goldoni, CARLO (*Venice 25 II 1707; ∞22 VIII 1736 Maria Nicoletta Conio; †Paris 6 II 1793), Italian dramatist, poet, prose writer and librettist. The reformer of Italian comedy; as a lawyer he practised in Venice (1731–33) and Pisa (1744–48); Genoese consul (1740–44). Interested in the stage from his earliest years, in 1734 Goldoni undertook to write for the company of actors at the San Samuele Theatre, Venice. Later, on leaving Pisa, he became a professional dramatist employed by the players at the Venetian theatres of Santo Angelo and San Lucca (1748–62). During these fruitful years Goldoni effected his theatrical reform, though faced with the jealous opposition of Pietro Chiari and Carlo Gozzi. In 1762 he left Venice and spent the rest of his life in France. He was invited to direct the Comédie italienne, Paris (1762–64) and later became Italian master to the royal princesses. During the Revolution he lost his pension and died in poverty.

Goldoni wrote some 250 plays in Italian, Venetian dialect and French. In his early years he composed lyric tragedies (Amalasunta), tragicomedies in verse (Belisario) and many scenari for the commedia dell'arte (Le trentadue disgrazie di Arlecchino). Believing, however, that good comedy should 'correct defects' and 'make vice detestable', he began to write out the dialogue of his scenari, suppress improvisation and gradually free the players from the traditional practice of wearing masks (Momolo cortesan, 1738; Donna di garbo, 1743). In time he succeeded in replacing the contemporary improvised farce with an ethical character comedy which was also a truthful 'mirror of life' (La Locandiera, 1753).

Goldoni's roots were in the commedia dell'arte, but he assimilated Molière and the sentimental didactic literature of England and France. He wrote Pamela (1750), based on Samuel Richardson's novel, and many exotic historico-oriental plays in martellian verse (La Sposa persiana, 1753); at times he urbanely satirized the Italian nobility (Il cavaliere e la dama, 1749). Goldoni is at his best when writing in Venetian dialect (I Rusteghi, 1760), especially in the clean, swift comedies which mirror the picturesque and vibrant life of the lower classes (Le Baruffe chiozzotte, 1762). His plays in French reflect the spirit of his new environment (Le Bourru bienfaisant, 1771).

Goldoni also composed musical intermezzi (1728–60), libretti for the opere buffe of Galuppi (L'Arcadia in Brenta) and Piccini (La buona figliuola), occasional verse and the invaluable Mémoires (in French), a detailed account of his life and art.

Mémoires, ed. Mazzoni (1907; Amer. tr. J. Black, 1877); Lettere, ed. Masi (1880); Corrispondenza diplomatica, ed. Di Tucci (1932).—Scelta di Commedie, ed. Masi (2 vols, 1897), ed. Nardi (3 vols, 1926).—Opere complete (44 vols, 1788–95; ed. Musatti, Maddalena and Ortolani, 37 vols, 1907–43; ed. Ortolani, 8 vols, 1935–48).

G. Ortolani, Della vita e dell'arte di C. G. (1907); H. C. Chatfield Taylor, G.: a Biography (1913); V. Lee, Studies in the 18th Century (1880); Ch. Rabany, C. G., le théâtre et la vie en Italie au XVIII^e siècle (1896); E. Rho, La missione teatrale di C. G. (1935).—A. Momigliano, Primi studi goldoniani (1922) and 'La comicità e l'ilarità del G.', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 61 (1913); E. Gimmelli, La poesia di G. (1941); C. Levi, 'Molière e il teatro italiano', in Marzocco (15 I 1922); L. Falchi, 'C. G. e i comici dell'arte', in Nuova Antologia (1930); G. Ziccardi, 'I Mémoires di C. G.', in Forme di vita e d'arte nel Settecento (1931).—A. della Torre, Saggio di una bibliografia delle opere intorno a C. G. 1793–1907 (1908); C. Cordié, 'Bibliografia speciale, 66', in Problemi ed Orientamenti critici, 1 (1948). M.W.

Goldschmidt, Meïr Aron (*Vordingborg 26 X 1819; ∞1848 Johanne Marie Sonne; †Frederiksberg 15 VIII 1887), Danish novelist. He was of Jewish descent and was brought up in the home of an orthodox uncle. In 1840 he founded the satirical Copenhagen weekly Corsaren which he edited for six years. It was a radical, anti-royalist paper, with many brilliant contributions from Goldschmidt himself. After a feud with Kierkegaard, Goldschmidt gave up the paper and went abroad for some years. He ranks high as a novelist. Some of his novels and stories deal with Jewish life, traditions and psychology, others give intimate descriptions of Danish provincial life, or make long expositions of his ideas on retributive justice.

Novels and Stories: En Jøde (1845), The Jew of Denmark, tr. Mrs Bushby (1852); Fortællinger (1846); Hjemløs (1857), Homeless, or A Poet's inner Life, tr. by author (3 vols, 1861); Fortællinger og Skildringer (3 vols, 1863–65; includes Arvingen, III, Eng. tr. The Heir, 1865); Kærlighedshistorier fra mange Lande (1867); Ravnen (1867); Smaa Fortællinger (2 vols, 1868–69); Fortællinger og Virkelighedsbilleder (2 vols, 1877).—Memoirs: Livserindringer og Resultater (2 vols, 1877).—Udvalgte Skrifter i Folkeudgave (6 vols, 1908–16).

F. Dreier M. A. G., et Litteraturbillede (1852); H. Kyrre, M. G. (2 vols, 1919); E. Bredsdorff, Corsaren (1941). E.B.

Goldsmith, Oliver (*Ardnagow, Co. Roscommon 1728; †London 4 IV 1774), Irish poet, playwright, novelist and essayist. Graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, 1749; studied medicine at Edinburgh and Leiden; after two years' wandering in Europe, settled in London. His rise to literary fame began about 1763, the year of the foundation of Johnson's Literary Club, of which Goldsmith was a member. His longer poems are models of 'Augustan' verse; his best comedy She Stoops to Conquer (1773) still holds the stage; his short poem Retaliation (c. 1774) is a series of vivid and witty impressions of Burke, Garrick, Reynolds and other members of the Club; and his novel The Vicar of Wakefield (1766) is a permanent classic of English prose.

Extravagant and generous, Goldsmith, who made much money by his writings, was continually in debt. In prose and poetry his style is graceful and fluent. His personality, original, humane, humorous and whimsical, is stamped strongly on his writings. In theory he was an avowed classicist: in practice his poetic treatment of nature and of rural life and his engagingly personal note have much in common with romanticism. Goldsmith also wrote a number of ephemeral publications for the booksellers.

Verse: The Traveller (1764); The Deserted Village (1770).—Comedy: The Good-natured Man (1768).—Essays: A Citizen of the World (1760–62).

Austin Dobson, Life of G. (1888); Lord Macaulay, 'Essay on G.', in Miscellaneous Works; Walter Scott, Lives of the Novelists (1821–24); W. M. Thackeray, English Humorists of the 18th Century (1853); S. Gwynn, O. G. (1935). R.McH.

Golein, Jean (*1320?; †1403), French Carmelite friar. At the request of Charles V he translated a number of Latin works, including the Collationes Patrum by Cassianus, the De regimine principum by Gilles de Rome and the Flores Chronicorum by Bernard Gui.

A. Thomas, 'Un Manuscrit de Charles V au Vatican', in Mélanges de l'Ecole française de Rome, I (1881). A.H.D.

Golenishchev-Kutuzov, Arseny Arkadyevich, Count (*1848; †1912), Russian poet, who kept to the polished and disinterested classical tradition at a time when 'civic poetry' was in fashion. In many of his intimate lyrics one feels the cult of death and Nirvana.

Sochineniya (3 vols, 1904–05); Russische Dichtungen (tr. S. Behr, 1890). J.L.

Gómara, Francisco López de: see López de Gómara, Francisco.

Gombauld, JEAN OGIER DE (*Saint-Just-de-Lussac c. 1590?; †Paris 1666), French writer. A member of Conrart's circle, which developed into the French Academy, and a habitué of the Hôtel de Rambouillet, Gombauld excelled in ingenious minor love-poetry and equally in religious verse to which his Protestantism lent solemnity.

Endymion (1624, novel); Amaranthe (1631, pastoral play); Poésies (1633); Sonnets (1649); Epigrammes (1657); Ees Danaïdes (tragedy, 1658).
L. Morel, J. O. de G. (Neuchâtel, 1910).
G.B.

Gomberville, MARIN LE ROY, SIEUR DU PARC ET DE (*Paris 1600; †Paris 14 VI 1674), French novelist. His novels were modernizations of the romances of chivalry, mingling the courtly decorum of the 17th century with astonishing adventures in foreign lands. Gomberville shows curiosity for the exotic and takes his heroic characters to the Middle East, Morocco, Mexico etc.

Polexandre (1637); La Cythérée (1640–42); La Jeune Alcidiane (1651).
M. Magendie, Le roman français au 17e siècle (1932).
G.B.

Gomersal, ROBERT (*London 1602; †Thorn Combe, Devon? 1646), English dramatist and divine. He was an eloquent preacher in the University of Oxford. His tragedy Lodovick Sforza (1628) is written in a stiff and pedantic style.
J.J.Y.L.

Poems (1633); The Tragedie of Lodovick Sforza, ed. B. R. Pearn, Bang's Materialen (1933).
B.L.J.

Gómez de Avellaneda, GERTRUDIS (*Puerto Principe 23 III 1814; †Madrid 1 II 1873), Cuban writer who, during the 19th century, enjoyed an extraordinarily high reputation in Spain where she spent most of her life, but who is less esteemed now. 'La Avellaneda' wrote novels, plays and poetry, and achieved her greatest success as a lyrical poet. Her plays are examples of early romantic tragedies, a genre that in Spain was not the happiest achievement of the romantic movement. Her novels are not good. Her poetry is remarkable for the prosodic correctness of her formal odes and the vehement intensity of feeling in her short lyrics, usually amatory. Her diction is stilted and conventional and she suffers from the incompatibility of her intense feeling with the grandiose literary conventions to which she was bound—verbose in her youth, inflated later by the mental habits of the Spanish romantics.

Poesías (1841).—Sab (a novel, 2 vols, 1841).—Obras literarias (5 vols, 1869–71, with studies by J. N. Gallego and N. P. Díaz); Obras de la Avellaneda (4 vols, 1914).
E.Sa.

Gommersz, JOB (†Nieuwerkerk on Duiveland 17 VII 1543), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition, town clerk and factor of the Chamber of Rhetoric 'De blauwe Acoleyen' at Nieuwerkerk. Three plays and a number of refrains are extant; these bear witness to his unshaken Roman Catholicism.

Klucht van de bedrogen minnaars (on the theme of Decam. 9, 1), Een spel van O. L. V. hemelvaert and Van menigh mensche in MS. Royal Library 132 F 7, The Hague; refrains ibid.
P. J. Meertens, in Tijdschr. v. Taal en Lett., xiv (1926) and Letterkundig leven in Zeeland etc. (1943).
J.J.M.

Gonçalves de Magalhães, DOMINGOS JOSÉ, Vizconde de Araguaya (*1811; †1882), Brazilian poet. As a young man he came under the influence of French romanticism, and his second volume marks a break in Brazilian literature with Portuguese neo-classicism. Although he twice essayed the epic, his true talent remained lyrical. His work is deeply infused with Catholic piety.

Poesias (1832); Suspiros poeticos e saudades (1836); Antonio José (1839); A confederação dos Tamoyos (1856; 1857; 1864); Urania (1862); Obras completas (8 vols, 1864–65).
E.Sa.

Gonçalves Dias, ANTONIO (*Caxias 1823; †1864), Brazilian romantic poet noteworthy for his intense patriotism expressed in simple lyric forms that have made him the national poet par excellence. His patriotism took the form of sympathy with Indian, Negro and White elements in the national culture, he himself being able to claim the blood of all three. His 'Indianism' is more genuinely felt than the decorative nativism of the 18th-century poets.

Primeiros cantos (1846); Segundos cantos (1848); Os Tymbiras (1848); Ultimos cantos (1851); Cantos (Leipzig, 1857; 1860; 1865; 1877); Poesias (earliest ed. unknown; 9th ed. Rio de Janeiro, 1920); Obras posthumas (6 vols, 1868–69; parts pub. separately).
E.Sa.

Goncharov, IVAN ALEXANDROVICH (*Simbirsk 6 VI 1812; †St Petersburg 15 IX 1891), Russian author. His first novel, Obyknovennaya istoriya (1847), made him famous. Although somewhat pedestrian in style, it was topical in its theme and abounded in characterization and atmosphere. The same features came out in his greatest novel Oblomov (1855), whose hero represents the climax of the unadapted 'superfluous man', so conspicuous in the Russian life and fiction of that period. In the novel the weakling Oblomov is contrasted with his half-German friend Stolz —an energetic representative of the capitalist bourgeoisie. Yet Goncharov knows how to show Oblomov's essential nobility and to retain sympathy for him. Goncharov's third novel, Obryv (1869), too, is rich in excellent portraits—marred only by a malicious caricature of a 'nihilist' of the 1860s. Fregat Pallada (1856) is a record of his sea-journey to Japan in 1852–54 and contains many autobiographical features and reminiscences.

Sobranie sochineniy (12 vols, 1899; a different ed., 12 vols, 1916); Izbrannye sochineniya (1948).—A Common Story, tr. C. Garnett (1917); The Precipice (1915); Oblomov, tr. C. J. Hogarth (1915), tr. N. A. Duddington (1929, 1932).

A. Dobrolyubov, Chto takoe oblomovshchina (1860); E. A. Solovyëv, I. A. G. (1895); V. I. Pokrovsky, G. (1907); A. A. Mazon, Un maître du roman russe (1914); E. Lyatsky, G. (1920) and Roman i zhizn' (1925); W. Rehm, 'Gontscharow und die Langeweile', in Experimentum medietatis (1947). J.L.

Goncourt brothers: Edmond Louis Antoine Huot de (*Nancy 26 V 1822; †Champrosay 16 VII 1896); Jules Alfred Huot de (*Paris 17 XII 1830; †Paris 20 VI 1870), French novelists, historians and art critics. Their interest in painting led them to make a detailed study of French life and art in the 18th century and Edmond later produced some influential studies of Japanese art. The careful methods of documentation they had applied to their historical works were again brought into use when they began to write novels of contemporary life, intimate studies of neurotic types based on direct observation of both characters and milieu, written in their own peculiarly subtle impressionistic style, their écriture artiste. Their first novel was En 18 . . (1851), but their most characteristic works are Germinie Lacerteux (1865) and Manette Salomon (1867). The strange intimate creative relationship of the two brothers is described in Les Frères Zemganno (1877), a novel of circus life published by Edmond after his brother's death. The Journal des Goncourt (9 vols, 1887–95) gives a remarkable account of contemporary development in literature and art. Edmond's will provided for the foundation of a literary academy, the Académie Goncourt, and the award of an annual prize, the Prix Goncourt, to a promising novelist.

Histoire de la Société française pendant la Révolution (1854); Histoire de la Société française pendant le Directoire (1855); Portraits intimes du XVIIIe siècle (1857–58); Sophie Arnould (1857); Histoire de Marie Antoinette (1858); Les Maîtresses de Louis XV (1860); La Du Barry (1860); La Femme au XVIIIe siècle (1862); L'Amour au XVIIIe siècle (1878); L'Art au XVIIIe siècle (1856–65); Gavarni, l'homme et l'œuvre (1868).—Novels: Charles Demailly (1860); Sœur Philomène, Renée Mauperin (1864); Henriette Maréchal (1865); Madame Gervaisais (1869).—By Edmond alone: La Saint-Huberty (1882); Mlle Clairon (1890); La Guimard (1893); Outamaro (1891); L'Art japonais (1893); Hokusaï (1896). —Novels: La Fille Elisa (1877); La Faustin (1882); Chérie (1884).

A. Delzant, Les G. (1889); P. Sabatier, L'Esthétique des G. (1920). T.W.

Góngora y Argote, Luis de (*Córdoba 1561; †ibid. 1627), Spanish poet, of aristocratic family. He spent some years at Salamanca university, took deacon's orders in 1585 and became a prebendary at Córdoba cathedral, undertaking much official business for the chapter, which led him to travel widely in Spain. At fifty he retired to the country where he wrote his masterpieces: El Polifemo and Las soledades. In 1617 he went to Madrid where he was priested and became one of Philip III's chaplains. Further preferment was denied him; his patrons were disgraced, died or were killed. He had expensive tastes and his means were small. He was taken ill in 1627, returned to Córdoba and died there.

His early poems (from 1580) consist of elegant Italianate sonnets, sentimental and burlesque ballads, lyrics of all kinds and a few occasional odes. These poems are surprisingly mature, and many have consistently retained their popularity. After 1600 his work became more elaborate and his subject-matter changed; panegyrics of the nobility replace love-poetry, and his satire became more bitter. His Polifemo and Soledades were bitterly attacked and enthusiastically defended for their supposed stylistic innovations (see Gongorism). The chief critics were Jáuregui, Lope de Vega and Quevedo, the two last being old personal enemies. The poems profoundly influenced the poetic style of 17th-century Spain, but fell into disrepute in the 18th century. They remained virtually unread until 1927 when Dámaso Alonso republished the Soledades with a critical introduction and prose paraphrase. Góngora is one of the greatest Spanish poets; he is sometimes difficult but never dull; his technique is impeccable. The brilliant, stylized world of the Soledades, the sense of the intensity and precariousness of human happiness to be found in the Polifemo and other poems, are his most original contribution to literature.

Obras poéticas, ed. R. Foulché-Delbosc (New York, 3 vols, 1921); Soledades, ed. Dámaso Alonso (1927; rev. 1935); Obras completas, ed. Millé (n.d.).—Translations: H. Thomas, 'Three Translators of G.' (Stanley, Fanshawe, Aires), in Revue Hispanique, 48 (1920); E. M. Wilson, The Solitudes of Don L. de G. (1931).
L. P. Thomas, Le Lyrisme et la préciosité cultistes en Espagne (Halle, 1909) and G. et le Gongorisme (Paris, 1911); M. Artigas, Don L. de G. y A., biografía y estudio crítico (1925); A. Reyes, Cuestiones gongorinas (1927); D. Alonso, La lengua poética de G., I (rev. 1950).
E.M.W.

Gonzaga, TOMÁS ANTÓNIO (*Oporto 1744; †Mozambique 1810), Portuguese poet. Having studied at Coimbra he became a magistrate in Brazil; accused of taking part in the Brazilian nationalist revolt of 1789, he was imprisoned and later deported to Mozambique. One of the most sensitive of the 18th-century Arcadian poets, Gonzaga fell in love with Maria Doroteia de Seixas, whom he celebrated in verse as Marilia, his own Arcadian name being Dirceu. His lyrics, published under the title Marília de Dirceu (date of 1st ed. unknown; 2nd ed. 1800), achieved an immediate and lasting popularity.

Marília de Dirceu e mais poesias, ed. M. Rodrigues Lapa (1937).
T. Braga, 'T. A. G.', in Filinto Elísio (1901).
T.P.W.

González, DIEGO TADEO (*Ciudad Rodrigo 1731; †Madrid 1794), Spanish poet and a prominent Augustinian orator. His cell at Salamanca was the meeting place for the best poets of the period. His El murciélago alevoso is a good, vigorous, burlesque poem, a single exception in a weak collection of conventional amorous pastorals and poems on discreetly religious and boringly didactic subjects.

Poesías, in Bibl. Autores Esp., 61; 'El murciélago alevoso', in Rev. Hisp. (1917).
Fray E. Esteban, 'Poesías, inéditas de Fray D. G. en el British Museum', in Ciudad de Dios., 25.
R.M.N.

González, JUAN VICENTE (*Caracas 1808; †ibid. 1866), Venezuelan writer. He wrote chiefly historical works, but also some verse and a series of elegiac short biographies in prose—Las mesenianas. He was in the full romantic tide of that part of South America.

Curso de literatura española (1852); Biografía del doctor José Cecilio de Avila (1858); Manual de la historia universal (1863); Biografía del general José Félix Ribas (Madrid, 1918); Historia moderna (1925); Obras literarias (1887).
E.Sa.

González de Clavijo, RUY (*Madrid; †1412), Spanish travel-writer. King Henry II of Castile sent him as ambassador to Persia. His account of his adventures and of eastern places and customs is entertaining.

Embajada a Tamorlán, ed. F. López Estrada (1943), Embassy to Tamorlane, tr. Guy le Strange (1928).
E.M.W.

González de Eslava, FERNÁN (*Seville ? 1534 ?; †Mexico City 1601 ?), author of the earliest surviving recorded dramatic pieces in Mexican literature and probably in that of the New World. They were printed posthumously in Mexico City in 1610 and consist of seventeen usually short pieces, belonging in style to the pre-Lopean drama of Spain. They are all religious in purpose, but include allusions to contemporary secular life, and were probably written between 1567 and, at latest, 1600.

Coloquios espirituales, ed. J. García Icazbalceta (1877; reproduces 1st ed.).
E.Sa.

González del Castillo, JUAN IGNACIO (*Cádiz 1763; †ibid. 1800), Spanish playwright. He earned his living as a prompter, taught Spanish to Böhl de Faber, the famous hispanophile, and had some local theatrical success, but died in poverty. His best plays are his short sainetes in the manner of Ramón de la Cruz, in which he portrays Andalusian life, in particular the characters, types and manners of his native town.

Obras completas, ed. L. Cano (3 vols, 1914).
N. González Ruiz, 'G. del C. y el teatro popular español del siglo XVIII', in Bul. Hisp., 1 and 2 (1924).
R.M.N.

Googe, BARNABE (*Alvingham 11 VI 1540; ∞1564 Mary Darnell; †Cockering II 1594), English poet. A relative of Sir William Cecil, Googe was employed in various semi-official capacities. His eclogues are among the earliest examples of the pastoral form in English. He also published translations.

Eglogs, Epytaphes and Sonnettes (1563, ed. E. A. Arber, 1871); The Zodiacke of Life . . . by Marcellinus Palligenius [i.e. P. A. Manzolli] (1565); Four Books of Husbandry . . . by M. Conradus Heresbachius (1577); The Popish Kingdom . . . by Thomas Naogeorgos [i.e. Kirchmayer] (1570).
J.B.B.

Góralczyk, KAZIMIERZ: see ANCZYC.

Gorbunov, IVAN FËDOROVICH (*1831; †1895), Russian anecdotist and author of vivid scenes from the life of lower classes —scenes which he himself used to recite with unusual success. Among his satirical characters that of General Dityatin (from ditya—child) is a conservative Russian counterpart of Colonel Blimp.

Sobranie sochineniy (2 vols, 1901–04). J.L.

Gordin, JACOB (*Mirgorod, Ukraine 1853; †New York 10 VI 1909), Yiddish author. A pupil of Tolstoy, he propagated the idea of 'back to the land' and sought a synthesis between Christianity and Judaism. He went to America to establish a communist agricultural settlement, but instead devoted himself entirely to writing plays, 70–80 all told.

Sibirien (1892); Got, mentch un teivel; Elisha ben Abuya; Der Unbekannter. J.S.

Gordon, ADAM LINDSAY (*Azores Islands 19 X 1833; †Brighton, Victoria 24 VI 1870), Australian poet; emigrated from England in 1853. His passion for horsemanship is revealed in verse having a tone of vigorous recklessness which was the counterpart of a pervading temperamental pessimism. He committed suicide, oppressed by poverty and debt. His poetry, which is of variable quality, reverts often to English subjects, some of the best of it on medieval themes. A few of his poems of outdoor experience—particularly The Sick Stockrider—foreshadowed later Australian balladry.

Poems of A. L. G. (with intro., notes etc. by F. M. Robb, 1912 and later eds). F.T.M.

Gordon, BERNARD DE (*Rouergue c. 1250), French author of Latin treatises on medicine, of which the most famous is his Lilium Medicinae. S.J.L.

Gordon, YEHUDA LEIB, pseud. Y.L.G. (*Vilna 7 XII 1830; †St Petersburg 16 IX 1892), Hebrew novelist and essayist; the most popular and outstanding Hebrew poet of the Haskalah movement. He was the founder of the new style in Hebrew poetry, using not only biblical style and imagery but also the more exact expressions of post-biblical writings. Denounced as a political conspirator (1879), Gordon lost his livelihood and, while in prison, contracted an incurable illness. He became literary editor of the Hebrew periodical Hamelitz.

His first great romantic poem on a biblical setting was Ahavath David u-Michal (1857). To king David he dedicated another poem, no longer romantic but rather pragmatic; David u-Barzilay. In 1860 he published his collection of fables Mishle Jehuda, adapted from talmudical legends as well as European fabulists.

Gordon's greatest achievement was his poetical work, which is of lasting value and influenced Hebrew poetry for all time, e.g. the long epic poems Shney Yoseph ben Shimon and Al Kutzo shel Yod (1876).

Shire Yehuda (Vilna, 1868); Kol Shire Y. L. G. (4 vols, St Petersburg, 1884; 2nd ed. with 2 add. vols, Vilna, 1898, and later eds); Shire Alila (New York, 1918, with intro. R. Brainin); Ketabe Y. L. G. (2 vols, Tel Aviv, 1928–29).

A. B. Rhine, Leon Gordon (Philadelphia, 1910; with biblio.). S.A.

Gorgias (*Leontini, Sicily c. 485; †c. 380 B.C.), Greek sophist and rhetorician, ambassador to Athens in 427, made prose-speech, by applying to it the studied diction and patterns of poetry, a telling instrument of mass-suggestion. The father of the 'sophistic' style, in which matter is subordinated to a display of manner—witness the Encomium of Helen and Palamedes (vapid 'defences' of those persons by Gorgias or a good imitator)—he yet in the surviving fragment of a funeral-speech achieves a certain elevated beauty, and his antitheses, short balanced clauses, rhymes and poetic imagery became, without their extravagances, part of the living structure of Greek prose.

Helen and Palamedes, ed. (together with Antiphon) F. Blass (1881); fragments in W. H. Thompson's ed. of Plato's Gorgias (1871) and in H. Diels, Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, 2 (6th ed. 1952).

E. Norden, Die antike Kunstprosa (2 vols, repr. 1909); A. and M. Croiset, Histoire de la littérature grecque, IV (1947); J. F. Dobson, The Greek Orators (1919). J.H.K.

Górnicki (originally Góra), ŁUKASZ (*Oświęcim? 1527; †? 22 VII 1603), Polish political writer and historian. In his political writings he advocated aristocratic government. His adaptation into Polish of Castiglione's Cortegiano is distinguished by its language and style. He was the first to translate into Polish some works of Seneca.

TREATISES: Rozmowa z Wlochem o wolnościach i prawach polskich (n.d., 2nd ed. 1616); Droga do zupełnej wolności (1650).—HISTORY: Dzieje w Koronie Polskiej . . . od r. 1538 do 1573 (1637).—ADAPTATION: Dworzanin polski . . . (1566), Ger. tr. Der polnische Demokrit als Hofmann (1856), crit. ed. R. Pollak (1928).—Dzieła wszystkie (3 vols, 1886).

R. Löwenfeld, L. G. Sein Leben und seine Werke (1884); J. Kozielewski, L. G. (1929).
S.S.

Gorostiza, Manuel Eduardo de (*Veracruz 13 X 1789; †Tacubaya 23 X 1851), Mexican playwright; born of Spanish parents, Gorostiza returned to Europe in 1794 and fought against the French. An enthusiastic liberal, he returned to Mexico on the accession of Ferdinand VII. An exact contemporary of Rivas, he presents the interesting contrast of never in his plays abandoning the precepts of neoclassicism. He wrote many entertaining plays in the manner of Moratín, joining strict form with humour and social criticism.

Indulgencia para todos (1818); Las costumbres de antaño (1819); Tal para Cual (1820); Don Dieguito (1820); Contigo pan y cebolla (1833; school ed. by E. McGuire, Boston, 1922).
E.Sa.

Görres, Joseph von (*Coblenz 25 I 1776; ∞1801 Katharina Lasaulx; †Munich 29 I 1849), German writer and publicist, whose noble, dynamic nature made him one of the foremost influences of his time. His love of freedom was first fired by the French revolution, but a mission to Paris (1799) disillusioned him, and he left politics for teaching natural science at Coblenz. In Heidelberg 1806–08 he united with Arnim and Brentano in reawakening national feeling through emphasis on the riches of German tradition. Napoleon called his propagandist Rheinische Mercur (1814) the 'Fifth Great Power', but the Prussian government suppressed it in 1816. On publishing Teutschland und die Revolution (1821) he had to flee to Strasbourg. Returning to Roman Catholicism and called to Munich as professor of history (1826), he formed a focus of ultramontane thought, attaining a nation-wide hearing once more with his Athanasius (1837), after the outbreak of the Prussian church struggle at Cologne 1837.

Der allgemeine Frieden, ein Ideal (1798); Resultate meiner Sendung nach Paris (1800); Glauben und Wissen (1805); Die teutschen Volksbücher (1807), ed. L. Mackensen (1925); Schriftproben von Peter Hammer (1808); Mythengeschichte der asiatischen Welt (2 vols, 1810); Lohengrin, ein altteutsches Gedicht (1813); Teutschlands künftige Verfassung (1816); Altteutsche Volks- und Meisterlieder (1817); Christliche Mystik (4 vols, 1836–42).—Kritische Gesamtausgabe, ed. W. Schellberg (16 vols, 1926 ff.); Gesammelte Briefe, ed. Marie Görres and F. Binder (3 vols, 1858–74).

J. Sepp, G. und seine Zeitgenossen (1896); G. A. Brandt, Herder und G., 1798–1807 (1940); F. Schultz, G. im Zusammenhang mit der jüngeren Romantik (1902); M. Berger, G. als politischer Publizist (1921).
H.A.P.

Gorter, Simon (*Warns 11 XII 1838; ∞1862 Johanna C. Lugt; †Amsterdam 15 VI 1871), Dutch mennonite minister and journalist, father of Herman Gorter, editor-in-chief of Het Nieuws van de Dag.

Letterkundige studiën, ed. A. de Hoop Scheffer (1871); Een jaar leven voor de dagbladpers (1872).

Jer. de Vries, in Levensber. Mij Ned. letterk. (1872); G. Stuiveling, 'S. G. een verloren kans', in Groot Nederland (1940).
J.W.W.

Goscelin of Canterbury (†c. 1099), a monk of St Bertin and Canterbury, was a noted hagiographer and devotional writer in his own day. His most important work is a life of St Augustine of Canterbury.

A. Wilmart, 'Eve et G.', in Rev. Bénéd., 46 (1934) and 50 (1938).
R.R.R.

Goślicki (Goslicius), Wawrzyniec Grzymala = Laurentius Grimalius or Grimaldus (c.* 1530; †31 X 1607), Polish political writer, courtier and bishop (from 1586). In his main work he gives his liberal views on the duties of king's counsellors.

De optimo senatore (Venice 1568); trs: The Counsellor (1598), A Commonwealth of good Counsail (1607), The Accomplished Senator, tr. Oldisworth (1733).

T. Filipowicz, 'The Accomplished Senator', in Proc. Am. Soc. of Internat. Law (Apr. 1932); W. J. Stankiewicz, The Accomplished Senator of L. Goslicius (1946).
S.S.

Gosson, Stephen (*Kent 1555; †London 13 II 1624), English pamphleteer. Educated at Oxford, Gosson wrote several plays, then attacked the theatre on moral, political and religious grounds in a series of pamphlets. His attack provoked replies from Lodge and Sidney. Gosson subsequently became a clergyman.

Pamphlets: The Schoole of Abuse (1579), ed. E. Arber (1895); The Ephemerides of Phialo (1579), extracts with The Schoole of Abuse, repr. E. Arber (1895); Plays confuted in five Actions (1582), repr. W. C. Hazlitt, English Drama and Stage (1869).

H. S. Symmes, Les Débuts de la Critique dramatique en Angleterre jusqu'à la mort de Shakespeare (1903); E. N. S. Thompson, The Controversy between the Puritans and the Stage (1903).
W.A.A.

Gossouin de Metz, 13th-century French poet. A native of Lorraine, he compiled the earliest scientific treatise for laymen in the vernacular, the Image du Monde (1246). There were several successive versions, including a prose one. A much imitated work, it has an English translation by Caxton (1481).

L'Image du Monde, prose version, ed. O. H. Prior (1913).—C. V. Langlois, Vie en France au Moyen Âge, III (1927). M.F.L.

Goszczyński, SEWERYN (*Ilińce 4 XI 1801; †Paris 25 II 1876), Polish poet and writer. An active patriot, after the 1831 rising he left for France. One of the 'Ukrainian school' of poets, in his romantic poem Zamek Kaniowski and his novel Król zamczyska he is under the Byronic influence.

VERSE: Zamek Kaniowski (1828; Das Schloss von Kaniow, tr. J. B. Werner, 1832); Sobótka (1834).—NOVEL: Król zamczyska (1842).—TRANSLATION: Pieśni Ossjana (1838).—Dzieła zbiorowe, ed. Z. Wasilewski (4 vols, 1911).

Z. Wasilewski, 'S. G.', in Szkice literackie (1923); B. Suchodolski, S. G. Życie i dzieła, 1801–1820 (1927); J. Krzyżanowski, 'S. G.', in Polish romantic literature (1930). S.S.

Gotoba (*6 VIII 1180; †28 III 1239), Japanese emperor 1184–99, who in his retirement was a prominent poet.

A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Gött, EMIL (*Jechtingen 13 V 1864; †Freiburg 13 IV 1908), German playwright. Under the influence of Nietzsche and Tolstoy he spent his time in seclusion on a farm, occupied with fantastic plans, invention schemes and his writings. His major works appeared only after his death, amongst them what is considered as his best work, the comedy Mauserung (1908).

PLAYS: Der Adept (1892; 2nd ed. under title Verbotene Früchte, 1895); Edelwild (1901); Freund Heisssporn (1911).—VARIOUS: Tagebücher und Briefe, ed. R. Woerner (3 vols, 1914); Briefe an einen Freund, ed. G. Manz (1919); Nachdenkliche Geschichten, ed. G. Manz (1924).—Gesammelte Werke, ed. R. Woerner (3 vols, 1911; with biog.); Auswahl (1944).

F. Droop, G.s Vermächtnis (1917); M. U. Gött, E. G. Aufzeichnungen seiner Mutter (1921); H. Bahr, E. G. (Bilderbuch) (1921); A. v. Grolmann, E. G. (1937). R.W.L.

Gotter, FRIEDRICH WILHELM (*Gotha 3 IX 1746; †ibid. 18 III 1797), German dramatist. A minor diplomat, Gotter was cofounder with Boie of the Göttingen Musenalmanach (1770). More an adapter than an original playwright, he was a partisan of French taste. His Die Geisterinsel (1797), based on The Tempest, published in Schiller's Horen (1797), won high praise from Goethe.

TRAGEDIES: Merope (after Voltaire, 1774); Mariane (after La Harpe, 1776).—COMEDIES: Die Dorfgala (1772); Die falschen Entdeckungen (1774); Das öffentliche Geheimnis (after Gozzi, 1781); Der Erbschleicher (1789).—VERSE: Gedichte (3 vols, 1787–1802).

K. Schlosser, F. W. G., Leben und Werke (1894). H.B.G.

Gottfried von Neifen (fl. 1234–55), Swabian minnesinger, of noble family (Hohenneuffen nr Urach). One of the poets at the court of king Henry (VII). His Minnesang shows considerable formal skill: it is in content often facile, well-nigh trivial. His Tanzlieder in Neidhart's manner and a few merry (or frankly vulgar) songs are the stronger fare required by the court for informal occasions.

Die Lieder G.s v. N., ed. M. Haupt-E. Schröder (1932).

R. Marleyn, 'G. v. N.s Minnelieder etc.', in German Studies . . . Fiedler (1938). F.P.P.

Gottfried von Strassburg (fl. 1210), German poet, author of Tristan und Isold (19,000 lines, unfinished) and two short Sprüche. He was a civic official (or a cleric) of Strasbourg—a rigorous schooling must be assumed. Comparison of his Tristan with Thomas de Bretagne, his source, is technically difficult; it is however clearly an adaptation (see HARTMANN V. AUE for this term) and an independent reinterpretation. He wrote for connoisseurs (edele herzen) only: his idealization of hero and heroine, their education, dress, behaviour and discourse verges on the decadent. He is without equal in the studied artistry of his verse and diction, using all the devices of the artes poeticae. Passages of smooth narrative lead from one 'essay' to the next: reception, ideal landscape, hunt, comic interlude. To his avoidance of a hackneyed theme we owe a famous digression—an essay in contemporary literary criticism. His esoteric doctrine of love contains a strong element of religious mysticism: the lovers' grotto is a temple 'in the wilderness', they are martyrs—though their devotional reading seems to be Ovid. In the rivalry of Gottfried and Wolfram v. Eschenbach there is something of the old antagonism of clericus and miles. Gottfried had imitators (see KONRAD V. WÜRZBURG) but by the 15th century Eilhart v. Oberg's less exacting text was used (see HEINRICH VON FREIBERG). Wagner used Gottfried.

Ed. F. Ranke (1930); K. Marold (1906) or R. Bechstein (4th ed. 1924) on which A. Closs (1944) is based. Modern.: W. Hertz (1877); tr. J. Weston (1901); E. H. Zeydel (1948).

F. Ranke, Tr. u. Is. (1925) and Die Allegorie der Minnegrotte (1925); F. Piquet, L'originalité de G. de Str. (1905); S. Sawicki, G. v. Str. und die Poetik des MAs (1932); E. Nickel, Studien zum Liebesproblem bei G. (1925). B. Mergell, Tr. u. Is. (1949) not recommended. F.P.P.

Gotthelf, Jeremias, pen-name of Albert Bitzius (*Murten 4 X 1797; †Lützelflüh 22 X 1854), Swiss pastor and writer, son of a pastor at Utzensdorf, where he grew up and went to school. He finally settled at Lützelflüh (1831), where he was elected pastor, and organized schooling and the care of the poor. His writings arose from a practical wish to help and instruct his flock and to combat liberalism and free-thought; their high literary quality was a by-product of didactic intentions. He treated every aspect of peasant life with sober objectivity and unsentimental realism: in their essential truth many of his stories and novels are classics of their kind. Gottfried Keller called him a 'great epic genius'; true, if 'epic' be taken to imply Homeric directness rather than broad scope or elevated theme. He may be said to have created the village story.

Der Bauernspiegel oder Lebensgeschichte des J. G. (1837); Die Wassernot in Emmental (1838); Leiden und Freuden eines Schulmeisters (2 vols, 1838); Dursli der Branntweinsäufer (1838); Die Armennot (1840); Wie Uli der Knecht glücklich wird (1841; Ulric the Farm-servant, tr. J. Firth, 1886); Wie Anne Bäbi Jowäger haushaltet (2 vols, 1843); Käthi die Grossmutter (1847); Uli der Pächter (1849); Erzählungen und Bilder aus dem Volksleben der Schweiz (5 vols, 1850–55; incl. Elsi, die seltsame Magd).—Kritische Gesamtausgabe, ed. R. Hunziker and H. Bloesch (26 vols, 1911–32); Auswahl, ed. J. Mumbauer (1925); Briefe, ed. K. Guggisberg and W. Juker (1948 ff.); Gotthelfs Persönlichkeit: Erinnerungen von Zeitgenossen, ed. W. Muschg (1944).

W. Muschg, G. (1931); K. Guggisberg, J. G., Christentum und Leben (1939); Ricarda Huch, Gotthelfs Weltanschauung (1917); H. L. Goldschmidt, Der Geist der Erziehung bei G. (1939); H. M. Waidson, J. G. (1952). H.A.P.

Gottifredi, Bartolomeo, 16th-century Italian writer (of Piacenza) of hitherto unpublished sonnets, madrigals and letters. He is known to posterity only by his Specchio d'Amore, a lively dialogue between Maddalena and Coppina, not without wit and grace.

Specchio d'Amore, ed. A. F. Doni (1547), ed. G. Zonta (1912). P.McN.

Gottlober, Abraham Baer, pseud. Abag and Mahalel (*Starokonstantinov, Volhynia 14 I 1811; †Bialystok 12 IV 1899), Hebrew poet, novelist, scholar and editor. Gottlober started writing very early, and settled for a number of years in Kremenetz where he became friendly with Baer Levinson. In his later years he became blind and died forgotten in great poverty. Gottlober was a prolific writer and was very popular in his time. Besides poetry he wrote short stories, and like many Hebrew writers also wrote in Yiddish, including satirical songs and a comedy, Der Decktuch (wr. 1838, pub. anon. Warsaw, 1876). Gottlober's most famous poems are the Oniah Soerah and the didactica poem Toldoth Hashira. From 1876 to 1881 he edited the periodical HaBoker Or.

Kol Shire Mahalel (3 vols, Warsaw, 1890). S.A.

Gottsched, Johann Christoph (*Königsberg 2 II 1700; †Leipzig 12 XII 1766), German critic. To escape conscription into the Prussian Guard Gottsched fled to Leipzig where he became professor of poetry (1730). He sought in his Kritische Dichtkunst to establish French taste in Germany. Gottsched reformed the German theatre and dominated literature in the 1730s, but his supremacy was challenged after 1740 by Bodmer and Breitinger. Although Gottsched's outlook was narrow his great energy powerfully influenced German literature. He was among the first investigators of medieval German literature.

Der sterbende Cato (1732; tragedy); Versuch einer kritischen Dichtkunst (1732); Beiträge zur kritischen Historie der deutschen Sprache (8 vols, 1732–44); Die deutsche Schaubühne (6 vols, 1740–45); Nötiger Vorrat zur Geschichte der deutschen dramatischen Dichtkunst (1757).—Gesammelte Schriften (6 vols, 1901–06).

E. Wolff, Gottscheds Stellung im deutschen Bildungsleben (2 vols, 1895–97); E. Reichel, G. (2 vols, 1908–12); G. Schimansky, G.s deutsche Bildungsziele (1939). H.B.G.

Gottsched, Luise Adelgunde, née Kulmus (*Danzig 11 IV 1713; †Leipzig 26 VI 1762), German dramatist. Married to J. C. Gottsched in 1735 she loyally assisted him in his efforts to reform German literature, contributing to periodicals, translating Addison, and writing comedies.

Die Pietisterei im Fischbeinrock (1736); Der kleine Prophet von Böhmisch-Broda (1753).

R. Buchwald and A. Köster, Die Lustspiele der Gottschedin (2 vols, 1908). H.B.G.

Götz, Johann Nikolaus (*Worms 9 VII 1721; †Winterburg nr Kreuznach 4 XI 1781), German poet. While a theological student at Halle he met Gleim and Uz and wrote pseudo-Anacreontic poems. He served as a chaplain in the French army and held various livings in Germany.

Die Oden Anakreons in reimlosen Versen (1746); Vermischte Gedichte (1785).
J. H. Voss, Über G. und Ramler (1809); H. Hahn, J. N. G. (1889). H.B.G.

Gough, RICHARD (*London 21 X 1735; ∞1774 Anne Hall; †Enfield 20 II 1809), English antiquary, who devoted his life to assiduous research on topography and monuments of Britain, translating and augmenting Camden's Britannia.

British Topography (1768); Sepulchral Monuments of Great Britain I (1796), II (1799; with engravings by the Basires); Catalogue of Coins of Canute, King of Denmark and England (1777).
J. Nichols, Biographical Preface to Catalogue of Gough's Library (1810). R.M.H.

Gower, JOHN (*c. 1330; ∞25 I 1397 Agnes Groundolf; †Southwark 1408), Kentish poet who lived for some time in London; acquainted with Chaucer. Besides the ballade In Praise of Peace he wrote three long poems: the French Mirour de l'Omme or Speculum Meditantis, a didactic allegory; the Latin Vox Clamantis, a political satire beginning with an account of the peasants' revolt, 1381; and, most important, the English Confessio Amantis, a large collection of stories drawn from classical and medieval sources and arranged as a series of confessions and responses between Genius, the priest of Venus, and a lover. The whole craft of courtly love is examined in theological terms; and there are digressions on contemporary scientific and encyclopaedic 'lore'. Gower lacks Chaucer's brilliance, but he is the supreme master in English of the octosyllabic couplet and of an unhurried, unemphatic and easy style.

Collected Works, ed. G. C. Macaulay (4 vols, 1899–1902).
W. P. Ker, Essays on Medieval Literature (1905); W. G. Dodd, Courtly Love in Chaucer and G. (1913); C. S. Lewis, The Allegory of Love (1936). R.W.B.

Gozzi, CARLO, CONTE (*Venice 13 XII 1720; †ibid. 4 IV 1806), Italian poet, dramatist and prose writer; brother of Gaspare Gozzi. After 3 years in Dalmatia as a cavalry cadet, he returned to Venice (1744) and began a life of polemics and aristocratic literary activity. Rebelliously anxious to preserve the traditional directions of Italian culture, rapidly changing before the fashionable literary and philosophical currents of the time, he joined the purist Accademia dei Granelleschi and clamorously opposed the naturalistic and sentimental drama of 'those two deluges of ink', Carlo Goldoni and Pietro Chiari. Hoping to revitalize the dying commedia dell'arte, Gozzi wrote 10 Fiabe (1761–65), grotesque dramatizations of popular and oriental tales (L'amore delle tre melarance; Turandot). In the Augellin Belverde (1765) and La Marfisa bizzarra (1761–68), a chivalric poem in ottava rima, he satirized contemporary corruption and the 'enlightenment'. Other works include tragicomedies and the Memorie inutili (1797), an autobiography.

Le Fiabe, ed. Masi with good pref. (1885); La Marfisa bizzarra, ed. Ortiz (1911); Memorie inutili, ed. Bulferetti (2 vols, 1928; The Memoirs of C. G., tr. J. A. Symonds, 2 vols, 1890).—Opere (14 vols, 1801–03).
V. Lee, 'C. G.', in Studies in the 18th century (1880); T. Mantovani, C. G. (1926); G. Ziccardi, 'Ritratto di C. G.'; 'La Marfisa bizzarra; 'Le Fiabe', in Forme di vita e d'arte nel Settecento (1931).—C. Cordié, 'Bibliografia speciale, 73', in Problemi ed Orientamenti critici, I (1948). M.W.

Gozzi, GASPARE, CONTE (*Venice 4 XII 1713; ∞1738 Luisa Bergalli, ∞1779 Sara Cenet; †Padua 27 XII 1786), Italian journalist, poet and prose writer; brother of Carlo Gozzi. Impoverished and unhappily married, he gained a living by his pen; an heir of the Italian classical linguistic tradition; press censor (1762); school reformer (1764). Gozzi wrote satirical verse Sermoni, a Difesa di Dante (1758) in reply to Saverio Bettinelli's Lettere virgiliane, and two periodicals combining pleasant reading with moral instruction in the manner of Addison's Spectator: the lively Gazzetta Veneta (1760–61), an informative chronicle of Venetian life, and the Osservatore (1761–62), a combination of literary and philosophical dialogues, theatrical news, character sketches and novelle urbanely satirizing 'depraved habits and bad taste'. Other works include occasional verse, translations from Marmontel, the Mondo morale—an allegorical romance—and many genial letters.

I Sermoni, ed. Spagni (1895); La Gazzetta veneta, ed. Zardi (1915), ed. Romani (2 vols, 1943); L'Osservatore, ed. Spagni (1897).—Opere scelte, ed. Falqui (1939).—Opere (12 vols, 1794; 16 vols, 1818–20).
M. A. Viglio, G. G. Vita e opere (1916); G. de Beauville, G. G., journaliste vénitien (1937). M.W.

Grabbe, CHRISTIAN DIETRICH (*Detmold 11 XII 1801; ∞1833 Luise Christiane Clostermeier; †ibid. 12 IX 1836), German dramatist, son of a prison superintendent.

He studied law but, convinced of his own genius, tried to live by writing for the stage. Failing to do so, he returned to legal work in Detmold and became military justiciary, till drink and eccentricities led to enforced resignation (1834). A period in Düsseldorf, helping Immermann with theatrical affairs, ended in quarrels. He died soon after, a dissipated wreck. His fitful genius made its mark, but his plays, in their will to astound, were too inchoate to hold the stage. Influenced first by Shakespeare, in his Napoleon he lit upon the path away from the dominance of Schiller and towards a bold prose realism, which was to be further explored in Büchner's Dantons Tod.

Dramatische Dichtungen (Herzog von Gothland, Marius und Sulla) mit einer Abhandlung über Shakespeareomanie (2 vols, 1827); Don Juan und Faust (1829); Die Hohenstaufen (1829–30); Napoleon oder die hundert Tage (1831); Hannibal (1835); Die Hermannschlacht (1836); sel. tr. H. W. Longfellow, The Poets and Poetry of Europe (1846).—Sämtliche Werke mit Briefen, ed. Sp. Wukadinović (6 vols, 1912).

A. Bergmann, G., Begegnungen mit Zeitgenossen (1930), G., sein Leben in Bildern (1936); R. Schlösser, Grabbes Vermächtnis (1937); E. Dieckmann, G., der Wesensgehalt seiner Dichtung (1936); H. Becker, Grabbes Drama Napoleon (1921); Jahrbuch der Grabbe-Gesellschaft (1939 ff.). H.A.P.

Gracián y Morales, BALTASAR (*Belmonte, Calatayud 1601; †Tarazona 1658), Spanish novelist and moralist. He entered the Jesuit order in 1619, became rector of the Jesuit college at Tarragona and acted as army chaplain during the siege of Lerida (1646). The publication of the Criticón without the approval of his superiors caused him disgrace.

His chief work was El criticón, published pseudonymously in three parts (1651, 53, 57), an allegory of human life, showing the necessity of experience and prudence. It shows wide reading and great power, with an astonishingly subtle style. His Agudeza y arte de ingenio (1642, enlarged 1648) is a treatise on style, a catalogue of different kinds of conceits, the manual of conceptismo, and an entertaining, if perverse, anthology. His three shorter treatises on the hero (1637), the politician (a eulogy of Ferdinand of Aragón, 1640) and the discreet man (1646) are terse, sententious and elegant disquisitions on different aspects of social success. His maxims (Oráculo manual—a portable oracle, 1647) have much the same quality. He also wrote a purely devotional work on Holy Communion, which is less pretentious. Gracián's mundane works are all distinguished by a deliberate cult of difficult ingenuity: he wrote to be read slowly by the select few, so that the mental effort would fix his meaning in the mind. His rules for successful living are to some extent incompatible with the religion he preached and in which he sincerely believed. His works were much read in England and France; Schopenhauer admired them.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 45; Obras completas (1944, poor text); Tratados (El héroe, El discreto, El oráculo manual), ed. A. Reyes (n.d.), The Compleat Gentleman, tr. T. Salkeld (1710), The Art of Prudence, tr. Mr Savage (1702, 1705), The Art of Worldly Wisdom, tr. J. Jacobs (1892); Agudeza y arte de ingenio, ed. E. Ovejero (1929, poor text); El criticón, ed. M. Romera Navarro (3 vols, Philadelphia, 1938–40), The Critick, tr. Sir Paul Rycaut (1681); El héroe, ed. A. Coster (Chartres, 1911).

A. Coster, 'B. G.', in Rev. Hisp., 29 (1913); A. F. G. Bell, B. G. (1921). E.M.W.

Graf, ARTURO (*Athens 19 I 1848; †Turin 30 V 1913), Italian scholar and poet by choice and education though his father was Bavarian. The dominant note of his work is pessimism and his favourite poet Leopardi. Besides several volumes of poetry Graf wrote plays, but their poetic value is their chief merit. Holding chairs of literature at Turin from 1876 to 1913 he published works on a wide range of subjects and in 1883, with F. Novati and R. Renier, founded the Giornale storico della letteratura italiana.

Poesie (1922); Opere critiche (1925–27).

A. Mancuso, A. G., poeta della morte (1922); A. De Ferrari, A. G. (1930). N.K.W.

Grafton, RICHARD (†1572), English printer and chronicler. Grafton published several translations of the Bible and chronicles by John Hardyng and Edward Hall. After retiring as a printer, he himself compiled three popular chronicle-histories.

An Abridgement of the Chronicles of England (1562); A Manuell of the Chronicles of England (1566); A Chronicle at large, and meere history of the affayres of England (1569).

C. L. Kingsford, intro. to Stow's Survey of London (2 vols, 1908); L. B. Wright, 'The Elizabethan Middle-class Taste for History', in Jour. of Mod. Hist., iii (1931). W.A.A.

Grahame, JAMES (*Glasgow 22 IV 1765; †ibid. 14 IX 1811), Scottish poet. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1795 and took Anglican orders in 1809. His best poem is The Sabbath (1804), with its quiet piety and natural description of the Scottish scene.

Mary Queen of Scots (1801); British

Georgics (1804); The Birds of Scotland (1806); Poems on the Abolition of the Slave Trade (1810). J.K.

Graindor de Brie (†before 1189), French epic poet, alleged in several MSS of the Bataille Loquifer to have written this poem (and presumably also the Moniage Guillaume) in Sicily during the reign of William II (†1189). These works are known in a redaction by Guillaume de Bapaume, probably very similar to Graindor's original, and in a cyclic version linking the end of the Moniage to the epic Foulque de Candie. They deal with the beginning and end of Rainouart's career and combine the ordinary romantic features of the late epic with incidents imitated from Arthurian romance.

J. Runeberg, Études sur la geste Rainouart (1905), ed. Bataille Loquifer (1913); W. Cloëtta, in Festgabe Mussafia (1905). F.W.

Graindor de Douai (fl. c. 1200), French poet and revisor, to whom we owe the existing versions of the Chanson d'Antioche (ed. P. Paris, 1848) and its sequel the Conquête de Jérusalem (ed. C. Hippeau, 1868). Originally composed by Richard le Pèlerin (c. 1130), the Chanson d'Antioche is a chronicle of the siege of Antioch in the first crusade, based on Albert of Aachen and Tudebod, but cast in the form of a chanson de geste. The slightly younger Conquête de Jérusalem is more purely fictional. Les Chétifs (early 13th century, pub. as an appendix to Hippeau's ed. of the Chevalier au cygne, 1874–77) serves as a prologue to the Conquête de Jérusalem and is a romantic epic full of incredible adventures.

A. Hatem, Les poèmes épiques des croisades (1932). F.W.

Grainger, James (prob. *Dunse 1721; ∞c. 1759 Daniel Burt; †St Christopher 16 XII 1766), English verse-writer and physician, whose The Sugar Cane, a didactic poem of outstanding bathos and flatness, composed in the West Indies, excited ridicule. He contributed to Percy's Reliques and Dodsley's Collection.

The Sugar Cane. A Poem in 4 books (1764); Poetical Works (1836, with life by R. Anderson). R.M.H.

Gramsbergen, Matthys, 17th-century Dutch writer of farces.

Klucht van de Levendighe Doot of Bedrogen Kassier (1648); Kluchtige tragaedie of den Hartoog van Pierlepon (1650); Piramus en Thisbe of den Hartoog van Pierlepon (1700; resembling the scene in Midsummer Night's Dream). J. de Witte van Citters, in Alg. Konst- en letterbode (1885); G. Penon, Bijdr. tot de gesch. der Ned. Letterk., III (1884). A.M.B.W.

Granada, Fray Luis de (*Granada 1504 ?; †Lisbon 1588), Spanish religious writer of humble birth, who became a Dominican in 1524 and later occupied important positions in that order. His last years were spent in Lisbon, where he suffered some petty persecution from the pro-Spanish party. His most celebrated works are a treatise on prayer and meditation (1554), a guide for sinners (1556) and an introduction to the symbol of the faith (1582). The stress on personal religion and the necessity of piety in good works seemed suspect to the Inquisition, and the Guia de pecadores was included in the 1559 Index. It was reissued in an expanded form and was translated into Latin, French, German, Polish, Italian, French, Portuguese, English and Japanese. His works also include a Latin treatise on writing sermons, sermons in Portuguese and a translation of the Imitation. His writings are ascetic rather than mystical. His style is oratorical, and he used Ciceronian periods in Castilian. He excelled in his descriptions of the beauties of God's works and the vanity of human things when followed for their own sake. A typical Counter-Reformation writer his works were read and admired by Protestants and Catholics alike.

Obras completas, ed. Fr. J. Cuervo (14 vols, incomplete, 1906–08); Guía de pecadores, ed. M. Martínez Burgos (repr. of 1st ed., 1929).—Translations: An excellent treatise of consideration and prayer (1598), The flowers of Lodowicke of Granada (tr. T. Lodge, 1601), Granados (sic) Devotion (tr. F. Meres, 1598), A memoriall of a Christian life (tr. R. Hopkins, Rouen, 1586), The sinners guyde (tr. F. Meres, 1598).

J. Cuervo, Biografía del venerable padre Fray L. de G. (1893); R. Switzer, The Ciceronian Style in L. de G. (1927). E.M.W.

Grange, John (fl. 1577), English poet and prose-writer who is praised in Webbe's Discourse. Grange styles himself 'Gentleman, Student in the Common Law'. His Golden Aphroditis, a love tale in prose, anticipating Euphues, has passages in verse: Part II—Granges Garden—is mostly verse. J.J.Y.L.

The Golden Aphroditis (1577; repr. 1939); The Ladies' Delight (1609; repr. 1939). B.L.J.

Granger, James (*Shaston, Dorsetshire 1723; †Shiplake 14 IV 1776), English print-collector and biographer, whose advocacy of the 'utility of collection of engraved portraits' in the preface to Biographical History of England started a contemporary craze.

Biographical History of England from Egbert the Great to Revolution (2 vols, 1769; 5th ed. with biog. intro.); An Apology for the Brute Creation: or Abuse of Animals censured (1772); Letters between G. and many . . . eminent Literary Men . . . : composing a copious history (1805). R.M.H.

Granovsky, Timofey Nikolayevich (*9 III 1813; †Moscow 4 X 1855) Russian author. Although his writings were not many, his personality exercised a strong influence on the generation of the 1840s and he is regarded as a typical 'westerner' of that decade.

Sochineniya Granovskogo (2 vols, 1856); Polnoye sobranie sochineniy (1906).
C. Vetrinsky, Granovsky i ego vremya (1897); P. N. Milyukov, Iz istorii russkov intelligentsii (1902); A. V. Stankevich, T. N. G. (1914); T. G. Masaryk, The Spirit of Russia (1919); M. O. Gershenzon, Istoriya molodoy Rossii (1923). J.L.

Granson, Oton de (*1345 ?; †Bourg-en Bresse 7 VII 1397), French poet. A Savoyard nobleman who fought for the English during the Hundred Years' War, he became a great friend of Geoffrey Chaucer. His verse, although written in the courtly tradition, contains a strong and sincere personal element.

O. de G. und seine Dichtungen, ed. L. Schierer (1904).
H. Braddy, 'Messire O. de G.', in Stud. Philol., 35 (1938); A. Piaget, O. de G., sa vie et ses poésies (1941). A.H.D.

Granville, George, Lord Lansdowne, Baron Bideford (*1667; ∞1711 Mary Thynne; †London 30 I 1734/35), English nobleman who wrote verse and drama. He showed precocious talent but was too involved in worldly affairs to give his whole mind to literature. Granville's lyrics 'to Myra' are pleasant but slight. His remarks on opera and on unnatural flights in poetry are representative of the times.

The Genuine Works in Verse and Prose 1732; 1736).—The Dramatic Works (1752).
S. Johnson, Lives, I (1781), ed. G. B. Hill, II (1905); E. Handasyde, G. the Polite (1933). B.L.J.

Grattan, Henry (*Dublin 3 VII 1746; ∞1782 Henrietta Fitzgerald; †London 4 VI 1820), Irish statesman and orator; member of Irish House of Commons from 1775. At the head of the Irish Volunteers he obtained a limited form of legislative independence for Ireland in 1782. 'Grattan's Parliament' was ended by the Act of Union 1800. His oratory, which strongly influenced the current of Irish Protestant nationalism, has something of Edmund Burke's fire.

Speeches, ed. Madden (1860).—Memoirs (1839–46).
S. Gwynn, H. G. (1939); R. McHugh, H. G. (1936). R.McH.

Grattan, Thomas Colley (*Dublin 1792; †London 4 VII 1864), Irish writer and editor; was widely known through the publication of Highways & Byways (1823–27), a book of continental travels. Lived in Paris and Brussels, wrote much on European affairs.

History of the Netherlands (1830); Beaten Paths (1862). R.McH.

Grattius (fl. c. A.D. 8), Roman didactic poet of whose works only part of a treatise on hunting, in which the influence of Virgil's Georgics is apparent, is extant. The poem is dull and heavy, though relieved by periodic digressions: the metrical construction is careful.

Gratti Cynegeticon, ed. P. J. Enk (1918); F. Vollmer, Poetae Latini Minores, 2 (1911); J. W. and A. M. Duff, Minor Latin Poets (Loeb Libr. 1934). A.J.D.

Gravina, Gian Vincenzo (*Roggiano, Cosenza 16 II 1664; †Rome 6 I 1718), Italian poet, dramatist, critic, philosopher and jurist. His fame is due mainly to Della Ragion Poetica; here he sought to free poetry from fixed rules, and discussed its origins, progress and aims. Gravina was one of the founders of the 'Accademia dell'Arcadia'.

Della Ragion Poetica (2 vols, 1708; crit. ed. G. Natali, 1921); Della Tragedia (1715).—Opere Italiane (3 vols, 1756–58); Prose, ed. F. Emiliani-Giudici (1857).
R. Micacchi, Le Idee Pedagogiche di G. V. G. (1904); F. Moffa, 'G. V. G.', in Studi di Lett. Ital., VII (1907); G. Natali, G. V. G. Letterato (1920); B. Croce, 'G. V. G. l'illuminante', in Nuovi Saggi sulla Lett. Ital. del Seicento (1931), and 'L'Estetica del G.', in Problemi d'estetica (1940); B. Barillari, L'Estetica di G. V. G. (1937) and Preestetica e filosofia del diritto in G. V. G. (1939). U.L.

Gray or Grey of Heton, Sir Thomas (∞Margaret d. of Wm. of Presfen or Presson; †1369 ?), Northumbrian miles litteratus, compiler of the Scalacronica, a prose chronicle in Anglo-Norman of England and Scotland to 1362.

The portion from 1066 to 1362, ed. J. Stevenson (1836); portion containing reigns of Edward I, II and III, tr. H. Maxwell (1907). R.W.B.

Gray, Thomas (*Cornhill, London 26 XI 1716; †Cambridge 30 VII 1771, □Stoke Poges), English poet, educated at Eton and Cambridge, the only one to survive childhood of the twelve children of Philip Gray and his wife Dorothy (née Antrobus), a Cornhill milliner by whose sole efforts the boy was maintained and educated. Among Gray's school friends was Horace Walpole with whom he toured Europe (1739–41). The rest of his life was spent at Cambridge—first at Peterhouse, then Pembroke; thence he made tours in England and Scotland and many visits to Stoke Poges, Bucks, where from 1742 his mother and two aunts lived. The churchyard here was the scene of the famous Elegy which, published in February 1751, brought him instant recognition. Much of Gray's verse is in Latin and he was learned in many other subjects. In 1768 he was appointed professor of history and modern languages.

His exiguous output of highly polished verse shows extreme sensitivity to human suffering and natural beauty. His thought and often his language anticipated Wordsworth and may be held to presage the romantic movement.

An Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College (1747); An Elegy Wrote in a Country Church Yard (1751); Progress of Poesy (1757); Poems by Mr. Gray (1768); The Poems of Mr. Gray, ed. W. Mason (1775; first publication of posthumous works); Works, ed. E. Gosse (1884)

S. Johnson, Life; D. C. Tovey, G. and his Friends: Letters and Relics (1890); W. H. Hudson, G. and his Poetry (1911); Correspondence of T. G., ed. P. Toynbee and L. Whibley (1935); W. P. Jones, T. G., Scholar (1937); Lord D. Cecil, The Poetry of T. G. (1945) and Two Quiet Lives (1948). M.V.D.

Grazzini, Anton Francesco, known as Il Lasca (*Florence 22 III 1503; †ibid. 18 II 1584), Italian writer. Author of several comedies, he is seen at his best in Le Cene, a collection of short stories written in living Florentine with a generous touch of the macabre.

Le Cene ed altre prose (1857); Le Commedie (1859), both ed. P. Fanfani.

M. v. Wolff, A. F. G. (1913); A. Acerra, Le 'Cene' di A. F. G., saggio critico (1915); A. Greco, 'Alla ricerca del Lasca', in Rinascita (1942). P.McN.

Grčić, Jovan Milenko (*Čerević 1846; †Beočin monastery 25 V 1875), Serbian poet, translated Goethe, Schiller and Heine into Serbian. The freshness of his lyrical poetry places him in the succession of Branko Radičević and he is also noted for his power of natural description.

Pesme (1869). S.C.

Gréban, Arnoul (*Le Mans? 1420; †1471 ?), French dramatist. From 1450 to 1455 he was organist and choir-master at Notre-Dame, then obtained an appointment at the court of Charles of Anjou, count of Maine, and became canon at Le Mans.

His one important work is the Mystère de la Passion (1452 ?), a vast compilation (34,574 lines) which took four days to perform. It is based to a great extent on the Passion attributed to Eustache Marcadé, but is far superior because of its dramatic, lyrical and pathetic qualities. A clever blending of serious and grotesque elements, it is the greatest example of 15th-century sacred drama in France and had considerable influence on the development of the theatre. Its realistic details make it one of the most valuable social documents of the period.

Ed. G. Paris and G. Raynaud (1878).

H. Stein, 'A. G., poète et musicien', in Bibl. de l'Éc. des Chartes, 79 (1918); P. Champion, Histoire poétique du XVe siècle, II (1923); R. Lebègue, 'La Passion d'A. G.', in Romania, 60 (1934). A.H.D.

Gréban, Simon (†Le Mans? 1473), French dramatist and poet, brother of Arnoul Gréban. He was an official at the court of Charles of Anjou, count of Maine, and canon of Le Mans. The Actes des Apôtres, a Mystery written after 1452, and some miscellaneous poems have been attributed to him.

H. Chardon, Les Gréban et les Mystères dans le Maine (1879); A. Piaget, 'S. G. et Jacques Milet', in Romania, 22 (1892); R. Lebègue, Le Mystère des Actes des Apôtres (1929). A.H.D.

Grech, Nikolay Ivanovich (*St Petersburg 1787; †ibid. 12 I 1867), Russian author, and—together with Bulgarin and Senkovsky—a member of the notorious time-serving triumvirate of St Petersburg journalism. Two of his novels, Chërnaya zhenshchina (1834) and Poyezdka v Germaniyu (1836) achieved some success.

Sobranie sochineniy (5 vols, 1838); Zapiski o moyey zhizni (1886; repr. 1930).

M. Lemke, Nikolayevskie zhandarmy i literatura (1908); V. Kaverin, 'Legendy o zhurnal'nom triumvirate', in Zvezda, I (1929). J.L.

Greeley, Horace (*Amherst, N.H. 3 II 1811; ∞1836 Mary Cheney; †New York 29 XI 1872), American journalist. He founded the New York Tribune (1841) and edited it until his death. A Yankee radical, supporting socialistic experiments, he was defeated when he ran for President.

Hints Toward Reforms (1850); Glances at Europe (1851); An Overland Journey, from New York to San Francisco . . . (1860); Recollections of a Busy Life (1868).

H. S. Stoddard, H. G.: Printer, Editor, Crusader (1946); J. A. Iseley, H. G. and the Republican Party, 1853–61: A Study of the New York Tribune (1947). H.L.C.

Green, JOHN RICHARD (*Oxford 12 XII 1837; ∞1877 Alice Stopford; †Mentone 7 III 1883), English historian, whose Short History of the English People (1874), written with historic imagination that fused hitherto dissociated aspects of history into one study of the development of a nation, was an immense popular success.

Stray Studies from England and Italy (1876); History of the English People (4 vols, 1877–80); Making of England (1881).—Letters, ed. L. Stephen (1901).

Pref. by Mrs Green to Short Hist. (rev. ed. 1888). R.M.H.

Green, MATTHEW (*1696; †London 1737), English poet, Quaker free-thinker, who successfully championed the right of Custom House cats to a milk allowance. His octosyllabic poem, The Spleen, warmly praised by Gray and Pope for originality, is in light vein of gentle satire; it is included in Dodsley, vol. I, 1748.

The Spleen. An epistle inscribed to his particular friend Mr C. J. (1737, with pref. by Richard Glover; 3rd ed., corrected, with addition, 1738; with life by L. H. Williams, 1936). R.M.H.

Green, THOMAS HILL (*Birkin, Yorks 7 IV 1836; ∞1871 Charlotte Addington Symonds; †Oxford 26 III 1882), English philosopher. Green applied his neo-Kantian metaphysic to ethics and political philosophy. In society, he believed, the individual found both freedom and integration.

The Philosophical Works of David Hume, ed. T. H. Green and T. H. Grose (4 vols, 1874–78; see intro.); Prolegomena to Ethics, ed. A. C. Bradley (1883); The Works of T. H. G., ed. R. L. Nettleship (3 vols, 1885–88); Lectures on the Principles of Political Obligation (1895).

W. H. Fairbrother, The Philosophy of T. H. G. (1896). B.H.

Greene, ROBERT (*Norwich ? VII 1558; ∞c. 1586 ?; †London 3 IX 1592), English poet, playwright, writer of prose fiction and pamphleteer. Entering St John's College, Cambridge (1575), Greene became friendly with Nashe, and in his residence acquired the habits of dissipation for which he became notorious. He travelled in Italy, Spain, France, Denmark and Poland. Deserting his wife and child after spending her money, he went to London, where for the rest of his life he lived precariously by writing. Extraordinarily versatile as a writer, Greene is reported to have been impulsive and headstrong as a man, extravagant, good-looking, pleasant and gentlemanly of manner; yet while he made friends with ease, he rarely kept them. Although there is no evidence to support the tradition that he was both actor and priest, its existence illustrates the poles of sensibility between which he swung. Twice he experienced a religious conversion, first on his return to England, then on his death-bed. And although the author of 'amorous' stories, he also risked his life exposing the underworld of London in his 'conny-catching' pamphlets. A delicate lyrist, he helped to establish both the romantic comedy and the prose novel on the foundations on which they developed later.

VERSE and DRAMA: The Plays and Poems, ed. J. C. Collins (1905); The Complete Plays, ed. T. H. Dickinson (1909).—NOVELS: Gwydonius. The Carde of Fancie (1584), ed. G. Saintsbury, Shorter Novels, I (1929); Pandosto (1588), ed. P. G. Thomas (1907); Menaphon (1589), ed. G. B. Harrison (1927).—PAMPHLETS: A Notable Discovery of Coosnage (1591), ed. G. B. Harrison (1923); The Thirde and last part of Conny-catching (1592), ed. G. B. Harrison (1923); The blacke bookes messenger (1592), ed. G. B. Harrison (1924); A quip for an upstart courtier (1592), ed. C. Hindley (1873).

J. C. Jordan, R. G. (1915); G. B. Harrison, Shakespeare's Fellows (1923). B.L.J.

Grefflinger, GEORG (*Regensburg c. 1620; †Hamburg c. 1677), German poet. In the course of a chequered career he travelled through most of Germany and settled in 1647 as a lawyer in Hamburg, where he became friendly with Johann Rist, founded the newspaper Neuer Merkur and engaged in extensive hackwork (translations of Cats, Corneille and Lope de Vega). His poetry has a freshness and vigour recalling Kaspar Stieler.

VERSE: Deutscher Epigrammatum erstes Hundert (1645); Lieder über die jährlichen Evangelien (1648); Seladons Weltliche Lieder (1651); Poetische Rosen und Dörner (1655).—PROSE: Diarium Britannicum (1651); Kurze Erzählung deutscher Händel (1653).

W. von Oettingen, Über G. G. (1882); Th. Weevers, 'G. en Bredero', in Album Frank Baur, II (1948). L.W.F.

Greg, WILLIAM RATHBONE (*Manchester 1809; ∞1835 Lucy Henry; †London 15

XI 1881), English essayist of speculative mind who wrote with urbane sincerity on social, political and religious problems.

Creed of Christendom (1851); Political Problems of our Age and Country (1870); Rocks Ahead: or Warnings of Cassandra (1870); Mistaken Aims and Attainable Ideals of Working Classes (1876). R.M.H.

Gregorčič, SIMON (*Vrsno 15 X 1844; †Gorica 24 XI 1906), Slovene poet. His early poems, mostly lyrical and patriotic, show the influence of Stritar. His later poems have more varied religious, philosophical themes, sometimes tinged with melancholy, and seldom recapture the vigour and charm of his youthful work.

Poezije (4 vols, 1882, 1888. 1903, 1908). S.C.

Gregorovius, FERDINAND ADOLF (*Neidenburg 19 VI 1821; †Munich 1 V 1891), German poet and historian, who spent many years in Italy, and whose wide travels in southern Europe stirred that intuitive sense of the interdependence of geography and history, unusual for his time, which gives his work its evocative power.

Konrad Siebenhorns Höllenbriefe an seine lieben Freunde in Deutschland (1843, under pseud. Ferdinand Fuchsmund); Idee des Polentums (1848); Der Tod des Tiberius (1851; tragedy); Wanderjahre in Italien (1856–77); Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter (8 vols, 1859–72; ed. F. Schillmann, 2 vols, 1926; tr. A. Hamilton, 1909); Geschichte der Stadt Athen im Mittelalter (2 vols, 1889); Gedichte, ed. A. von Schack (1892); Römische Tagebücher, ed. F. Althaus (1892; tr. Mrs G. W. Hamilton, 1907); Briefe an Hermann von Thile, ed. H. v. Petersdorff (1894); Briefe an Gräfin Erfilia Caetani Lovatelli, ed. B. Münz (1896).

J. Hönig, G. als Dichter (1913) and G. als Geschichtsschreiber der Stadt Rom (1921). H.A.P.

Gregory I, the Great (*c. 540; †604), fourth Latin Doctor Ecclesiae. He came of a senatorial family, becoming Prefect of Rome about 570; but he soon withdrew into the monastery of St Andrew which he had founded in his ancestral palace on the Coelian. Pelagius II sent him, in 579, on an embassy to Constantinople, where he remained until 585 and composed his vast commentary on Job. Then he returned to be abbot of his monastery, until he was consecrated pope in 590. By his letters he asserted the authority of the Roman see in the churches of the west. He was less successful with the church of Constantinople, but he had friendly and deferential correspondents in the other eastern churches.

Through his Pastoral Rule (a handbook on the episcopal office), and his Dialogues (on the miracles of the 'Italian Fathers' and of St Benedict in particular), he exercised a great influence on the middle ages. Though he affected to despise literary style, he was the master of a powerful and often majestic prose.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 75–79; Letters, ed. P. Ewald and L. Hartmann, Mon. Germ. Hist., Epist., I.

F. H. Dudden, Gregory the Great (2 vols, 1905); F. Ermini, Gregorio magno (1924). F.J.E.R.

Gregory Acindynus (fl. 14th century), Byzantine monk. A keen supporter of the hesychasts and the orthodox point of view, he wrote theological works and poems refuting both the Latin Barlaam and the Greek Nicephorus Gregoras.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 148 and 151. J.M.H.

Gregory of Nazianzus (*Nazianzus, Cappadocia c. 329; †ibid. c. 390), Greek ecclesiastical writer. Son of Gregory, bishop of Nazianzus, he received the usual literary and rhetorical education of the times at Caesarea in Cappadocia, Caesarea in Palestine, Alexandria and Athens. At Athens he began his life-long friendship with St Basil. Returning to Nazianzus about 355, he devoted himself to an ascetic life of contemplation. Consecrated priest in 362, he assisted his father in the administration of his diocese. In 373 Basil had him appointed bishop of the little Cappadocian town of Sasima but Gregory refused to go to his see. About 379 he was summoned to Constantinople to help combat Arianism there, and in 380 consecrated archbishop. A few years later, weary of intrigue, he resigned his archbishopric and returned to his ascetic life at Nazianzus.

His writings include homilies, letters and poems. Of the homilies the most celebrated were the five on the doctrine of the church (380), which earned for him in the Orthodox church the title of 'the Theologian'. The letters deal mainly with personal matters. Of his poems all except two are written in the classical quantitative metres. Those on theological and ethical themes are mere exercises in versification, but the autobiographical poems are sincere and moving, though the elaboration of form is little to modern taste.

Gregory was inferior in practical wisdom to Basil and in philosophical penetration to Gregory of Nyssa. It was to some extent in spite of himself that he was put in the position of formulating with authority the dogmas of the church. He was a man of deep sensibility and a master of the elaborate rhetoric of antiquity. Even in his prose works he is something of a poet. It was for their style that his homilies were prized in the Byzantine world, and Gregory himself was regarded as a Christian Demosthenes. Early translations into Latin, Armenian, Georgian, Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Arabic and old Slavonic made him a model of Christian eloquence throughout the orthodox world.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 35–38; J. B. Alzog, S. Gregorii Nazianzeni oratio apologetica de fuga sua (2nd ed. 1869); A. J. Mason, The Five Theological Orations of G. of N. (1899); A. W. Chatfield, Songs and Hymns of the Earliest Greek Christian Poets (1876); C. W. King, Julian the Emperor (1888; containing G.'s Two Invectives); C. G. Browne and J. E. Swallow, Select Orations and Letters of G. of N. (1894).

A. Benoît, Saint G. de N. (2 vols, 2nd ed. 1884); M. Guignet, S. Grégoire de Nazianze et la rhétorique (1911) and S. G. de N. orateur et épistolier (1911); J. Sajdak, Historia critica scholiastarum et commentatorum Gregorii Nazianzeni, I (1914); A. P. Ralbovszky, Die Dichtungen des heiligen G. von N. (1914); T. Sinko, De traditione orationum Gregorii Nazianzeni (2 vols, 1917–23); E. Fleury, Hellénisme et christianisme. S. G. de N. et son temps (1930); M. Pellegrino, La poesia di S. G. N. (1932); P. Gallay, Langue et style de S. G. de N. dans sa correspondance (1935); P. Gallay, La vie de S. Grégoire de Nazianze (1943); J. Daniélou, Platonisme et théologie mystique . . . de saint G. de N. (1944); J. Plaguieux, S. Grégoire de Nazianze, théologien (1952). R.B.

Gregory of Nyssa (*Caesarea, Cappadocia; †c. 395), Greek ecclesiastical writer. Gregory was the son of a distinguished rhetorician and advocate, and younger brother of St Basil. After the customary rhetorical and literary education he began to practise as a teacher of rhetoric and married. Later, however, under the influence of Gregory of Nazianzus he entered the church and in 371 was consecrated by his brother Basil bishop of Nyssa in Cappadocia. In 376 he was deposed by the Arian party and restored only after the death of the emperor Valens in 378. About 380 he made a long journey of visitation to Pontus, Lesser Armenia, Palestine and Arabia. In 394 he took part in the synod of Constantinople.

He was a many-sided writer. Of his exegetic works the best known are those on the Creation of Man, on the Hexaemeron (the first six days of the Creation), on Ecclesiastes, the Song of Songs and the Beatitudes. The dogmatic writings are largely directed against the Arians. Less polemical, and more interesting today, are the catechetical oration and the address to his sister Macrina on the soul and the resurrection, which is in the form of a Platonic dialogue. Of the ascetic writings, which are mostly short, only the treatise on virginity is worthy of note. The homilies include festival sermons, panegyrics on martyrs, sermons of consolation and treatments of general ethical themes. The 25 letters deal mainly with personal matters.

Gregory was the profoundest thinker of the three great Cappadocian Fathers. Deeply influenced by Platonism, and following, though more successfully, in the footsteps of Clement of Alexandria and Origen, he developed a Christian mysticism which has many parallels with neo-Platonism. He was less of a stylist than Basil or Gregory of Nazianzus, and his thought sometimes fits awkwardly into the rhetorical literary forms of his age.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 44–46; J. H. Srawley, The Catechetical Oration of G. of N. (1903); E. Klostermann, Gregorii Nysseni Peri tes Engastrimythu (1912); W. Jaeger, Gregorii Nysseni contra Eunomium libri III (2 vols, 1921), Gregorii Nysseni opera ascetica (1952); G. Pasquali, Gregorii Nysseni Epistulae (1925).—W. H. Moore and H. A. Wilson, Select Writings and Letters of G. of N. (1893); W. K. L. Clarke, The Life of St Macrina by G. of N. (1916); J. H. Srawley, The Catechetical Oration of St G. of N. (1917).—J. A. Stein, The Encomium of St G. of N. on his brother Basil (1928).

J. Bauer, Die Trostreden des G. von N. in ihrem Verhältnis zur antiken Rhetorik (1892); C. Gronau and A. Reiche, Die künstlerischen Elemente in der Welt- und Lebensanschauung des G. von N. (1897); L. Méridier, L'Influence de la seconde sophistique sur l'œuvre de G. de N. (1906); H. F. Cherniss, The Platonism of G. of N. (1930); M. G. de Castro, Die Trinitätslehre des G. von N. (1938); J. Daniélou, Platonisme et théologie mystique . . . de saint G. de N. (1944); J. Janini Cuesta, La antropologia y la medicina pastoral de S. G. de N. (1946); T. A. Goggin, The Life and Times of St G. of N. (1947). R.B.

Gregory of Tours, Georgius Florentius (*Clermont-Ferrand 30 XI 538; †Tours 17 XI 594), of noble Gallo-Roman birth, was in 572 made bishop of Tours by king Sigibert and became involved in politics. Sigibert's successor, Chilperich, was hostile to him, but Gregory outlived him, remaining an outstanding figure in the Frankish church until his death. The most famous of his works is his Historia Francorum, in which he made a copious use of many sources with a genuine striving for truth.

It is a valuable source for the history of Merovingian times. Among his hagiographical works are four books De virtutibus S. Martini.

Historiarum libri X, ed. B. Krusch and W. Levison, in Mon. Ger. Script. Rer. Merov. (1937–42), History of the Franks, tr. O. M. Dalton (2 vols, 1927).

G. Vinay, San Gregorio di Tours (1940); J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, 'The Work of G. of T.', in Trans. R. Hist. Soc., 5th ser., I (1951). F.J.E.R.

Gregory Palamas, 14th-century Byzantine theologian, archbishop of Thessalonica. He was the foremost exponent of the teaching of the Orthodox church on the extent to which the divine and uncreated Godhead could be known by created beings. This teaching centred in the way of life practised by the hesychasts. The controversy was due partly to Latin misunderstanding of Greek theology and partly to the association of religion and politics during a period of civil war in the Byzantine empire. Palamas also wrote specific works against the Latins as well as letters and sermons and a life of Peter of Athos. Some of his writings still remain unprinted.

Migne, Patr. Gr., 150–51, 161 (with Latin tr.).

B. Krivocheine, 'Ascetic and Theological Teaching of G. P.', in Eastern Churches Qu., 3 (1938). J.M.H.

Greif, Martin, pseud. of Friedrich Hermann Frey (*Speyer 18 VI 1839; †Kufstein 1 IV 1911), German poet and playwright. He lived at Munich, but had no personal contact with the 'Munich Poets' round Geibel and Heyse. With them, however, he has in common the easy flow of his verse and the strongly traditionalistic element in his poems.

Verse: Gedichte (1860); Frühlingslieder (1864).—Plays: Bertha und Ludwig (1861); Konradin (1889); Agnes Bernauer (1894).—Ges. Werke (3 vols, 1895–96); Nachlass, ed. W. Kosch (1911).

L. Kiesgen, G. als Lyriker (1911); A. van Geelen, G. als Dramatiker (1934). R.W.L.

Grek, Maxim, i.e. Maxim the Greek (*1480; †1556), Greek monk who was summoned by prince Vasily Ivanovich from Mount Athos to Moscow in order to correct several ecclesiastical books. In Russia he sided with the strongly ascetic trans-Volga hermits, was imprisoned and wrote a number of polemic, dogmatic and theological treatises.

Sochineniya (3 vols, 1859–62).—V. Ikonnikov, M. G. i ego vremya (1915). J.L.

Gresset, Jean-Baptiste Louis (*Amiens 29 VIII 1709; †ibid. 16 VI 1777), French poet and dramatist. Educated by the Jesuits, he was expelled from their order for the mild irreverance of his light verse, which is among the best of his period (as Vert-Vert, story of a hard-swearing parrot). His comedy, Le Méchant, carries echoes of Molière's Le Tartuffe. Later in life he returned to religion and burnt his manuscripts.

Verse: Vert-Vert (1734, 1747); Le Lutrin vivant (1743); Le Carême impromptu (1734); La Chartreuse (1735).—Plays: Edouard III (1740); Sidney (1745); Le Méchant (1747).—Œuvres complètes, ed. Renouard (3 vols, 1811).

J. Wogue, G. (1894). G.B.

Gretser, Jakob (*Markdorf 27 III 1562; †Ingolstadt 29 I 1625), German Jesuit dramatist. Gretser wrote 23 plays (1584–86) for the Jesuit stage at Freiburg i. U. and Ingolstadt. His best play Udo deals with the eventual damnation of the archbishop of Magdeburg. A counter-Reformation 'Faust' play in Latin, it represents the greatest achievement of the Jesuit theatre before Bidermann.

Udo (1587–98; in MS. only, cod. lat. Mon. 19 7572); Bruder-Klausen-Spiel (1586), ed. E. Scherer (1928); Regnum Humanitatis (1587), ed. A. Dürrwächter (1898); Regnum Humanitatis, Comoedia secunda (1590), ed. Dürrwächter (1912).—Opera Omnia (17 vols, 1734–41, contains no dramas).

A. Dürrwächter, J. G. u. seine Dramen (1912); Joh. Müller, Das Jesuitendrama in den Ländern deutscher Zunge, II (1930). D.G.D.

Greville, Charles Cavendish Fulke (*2 IV 1794; †London 18 I 1865), English political diarist, who for forty years wrote a painstaking record of the social and political life of his time for ultimate publication. His impartiality and intimate knowledge of men and affairs give particular value to his writings.

The Greville Memoirs: incl. Journal of Reigns of King George IV and King William IV, ed. H. Reeve, Reign of Queen Victoria, 1837–51 and Journal of Reign of Queen Victoria, 1852–60 (8 vols, 1874–87); Letters (1924); The Greville Diary (1927). R.M.H.

Greville, Fulke, Baron Brooke (*Beauchamp Court, Warwickshire, 3 X 1554; †Warwick 30 IX 1628), English courtier, statesman, poet and patron of letters. From Shrewsbury School, where he met Sidney (1564), and Jesus College, Cambridge, Greville attended court (1577), winning favour. He was secretary of the principality of Wales (1583, for life 1603), treasurer of the navy (1598–1604) and chancellor of the exchequer (1614–22). An elegant speaker in Parliament, Greville sat for Warwickshire, was knighted (1603) and raised to the peerage (1621). Loyal to Essex and Bacon, he was murdered by a disgruntled servant. With Sidney, Dyer and Harvey, Greville influenced literature. Skilful technically, his lyrics and closet dramas have the tone of heroic couplets in more complicated rhyme-schemes.

B.L.J.

The Life of Sir Philip Sidney (1652), ed. N. Smith (1907); Caelicia, ed. M. F. Crow, in Elizabethan Sonnet-Cycles, 4 (1898); Poems and Dramas, ed. G. Bullough (1938); The Works in Verse and Prose, ed. A. B. Grosart (1894).

G. Bullough, 'F. G.', in Mod. Lang. Rev., 28 (1933). J.R.B.

Grévin, Jacques (*Clermont-en-Beauvaisis 1538; †Turin XII 1570), French poet and physician. He was an early associate of Ronsard, with whom he broke after his conversion to Protestantism (1560). His verses recall Ronsard and Du Bellay. His significance lies in his comedies (La Trésorière and Les Ebahis) and his tragedy Julius César (1561). This, based on a Latin tragedy by his teacher J. A. Muret, is one of the earliest French experiments in the form.

Olimpe (1560, verses); Théâtre (1561).—Théâtre complet et poésies choisies, ed. L. Pinvert (1922).

L. Pinvert, J. G. (1899). G.B.

Grey, Sir George (*Lisbon 1812; †1898), New Zealand soldier, administrator, student of Maori. Although his main importance for New Zealand history lies in other fields, New Zealand literature owes a debt to him for the revelation of Maori poetry and legend.

Mythology and Traditions of the New Zealanders (1854); Proverbial and Popular Sayings of the Ancestors of the New Zealand Race (1857); Poems, Traditions, and Chaunts of the Maories (1853). D.M.D.

Griboyedov, Alexander Sergeyevich (*15 I 1795; †Tehran 11 II 1829), Russian dramatist and diplomat. His fame rests on a single work—the classical comedy Gore ot uma (1823–24). Written in rhymed iambic verse of uneven length and in the Molièresque tradition, this comedy lampoons the entire Moscow society of the period. Griboyedov also wrote poems and a few other less successful plays, but his literary and diplomatic career came to a tragic end when he was killed by the infuriated mob in Tehran.

Polnoye sobranie sochineniy (Acad. ed., 3 vols, 1911–17); Sochineniya (1940).—Gore ot uma (1823–24; Eng. tr. (a) S. W. Prig, The Misfortune of Being Clever, 1914; (b) B. Pares, The Mischief of Being Clever (1925) and later as Wit Works Woe, in Masterpieces of the Russian Drama (1933).

A. Alferov, A. S. G. (1910); N. K. Piksanov, G. i Molière (1922); N. Gershenzon, Griboyedovskaya Moskva (1928); N. K. Piksanov, Tvorcheskaya istoriya 'Gorya ot uma', (1928).
J.L.

Grieck, Claude de (*Brussels 1625; †c. 1670), Flemish playwright, printer at Brussels, exponent of French classicism in the southern Netherlands. First he translated Spanish plays from the French, later he turned directly to the Spanish theatre and tried to assimilate its atmosphere. His works were also performed in Amsterdam.

Hylas (1644; after Mareschal); Heraclius (1650; after P. Corneille); Don Japhet van Armeniën (1657; after Scarron); Den grooten Belisarius (1658; after Rotrou); Cenobia (1667) and Ulysses op het eiland (1668; both after Calderón).

J. te Winkel, 'De invloed van de Spaanse letterkunde op de Ned.', in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., I (1881); J. A. van Praag, La comédie Espagnole aux Pays-Bas (1922); T. de Ronde, Het tooneelleven in Vlaanderen door de eeuwen heen (1930); J. Bauwens, L'Influence de Corneille en Hollande (1921). A.M.B.W.

Griethuysen, Sibylle van (*Buren 1620; ∞1644 Upke Wytzema), Dutch poet of religious verse, lived with her husband at Appingedam (whence her sobriquet 'the Damse Sappho') and at Groningen.

Claeg-liederen Jeremiae (1645); Hemelsche-Troost-Borne (1651).—J. A. Worp in Oud-Holland, III. A.M.B.W.

Griffin, Gerald (*Limerick 12 XII 1803; †13 VI 1840), Irish poet and novelist. Worked as a journalist in Limerick and London. A good minor poet; wrote stories of Irish life, one successful drama, Gisippus, and a novel, The Collegians, upon which Boucicault founded his popular melodrama The Colleen Bawn. Griffin joined the Order of Irish Christian Brothers (1837).

Novels and Poems (1842–43); Poetical and Dramatic Works (1857).

W. S. Gill, G. G. (1940). R.McH.

Griffiths, Ann, née Thomas (*Llanfihangel yng Ngwynfa, Mont. 1776; ∞1804 Thomas Griffiths; †VIII 1805), Welsh hymn-writer. It seems that the retentive memory of a maid servant alone saved many of her hymns from oblivion. Written with a confident abandon, they are rich in startling images and paradoxes.

Casgliad o Hymnau (1806); Gwaith A. G., ed. O. M. Edwards (1905).

J. Hughes, Cofiant Mrs A. G. (1847); M. Davies and W. Williams, Cofiant A. G. (1865); E. Griffith, A. G. Ei Llythyrau a'i Hemynau (1903); H. E. Lewis, A. G., ei hanes a'i hemynau (1903); E. Richards, A Short Memoir of A. G. with a translation of her letters and hymns (1916); D. M. Lewis, 'Ffurf wreiddiol hymnau A. G.', in Y Llenor, III (1924); J. R. Jones, 'A. G.', in Efrydiau Athronyddol, 13.
B.Re.

Grigorovich, DMITRY VASILYEVICH (*Simbirsk prov. 19 III 1822; †1899), Russian author. His narratives Derevnya (1846) and Anton Goremyka (1847) were early examples of the realistic and humanitarian 'natural school' as formulated by the critic Belinsky. They made the peasant fashionable in literature and thus heralded Turgenev's Zapiski okhotnika ('A Sportsman's Sketches'). Grigorovich wrote other narratives and novels, many of them from society life, for the radical periodical Sovremennik, but with less success. His Literaturnye vospominaniya ('Literary Reminiscences', 1929) are still of great interest.

Polnoye sobranie sochineniy (12 vols, 1896); Anton Goremyka (1919, 1942).—The Cruel City, tr. E. Pierson (1891); The Fisherman, tr. A. S. Rappoport (1916, 1925).

I. V. Vladislavlev, Russkie pisateli (1924).
J.L.

Grigoryev, APOLLON ALEXANDROVICH (*Moscow 1822; †ibid. 25 IX 1864), Russian poet and critic who regarded literature as an irrational 'organic product' of a nation in the course of its development. As a romantic (after the manner of Schelling) he was in opposition to Belinsky and the utilitarian critics of the day. Leading a bohemian existence, he edited (1850–56) Pogodin's Moskvityanin, but in the early 1860s he joined the staff of Dostoyevsky's shortlived Vremya and—after its suppression in 1863—the unsuccessful Epokha. His views on art and literature are best summed up in his Paradoksy organicheskoy kritiki ('Paradoxes of Organic Criticism') as well as in his Moi literaturnye i nravstvennye skital'chestva ('My Literary and Moral Wanderings'), both of them reissued in 1915. As a poet Grigoryev was uneven, yet some of his lyrics—those reflecting his love of gipsy songs—are superb. One of his modern admirers and emulators was Alexander Blok.

Sobranie sochineniy (14 parts, 1915–16); Stikhotvoreniya (1915, 1937); Vospominaniya (1930).

A. Blok, Sud'ba Grigoryeva (1915); A. A. G., ed. V. Knyazhnin (1917); L. Grossman, Tri sovremennika (1922); N. Rubinstein, 'A. G.', in Literatura i marksizm' (1929). J.L.

Grillparzer, FRANZ (*Vienna 15 I 1791; †ibid. 21 I 1872), Austrian dramatist. Unstable heredity and political censorship hampered the full development of Grillparzer's genius. He entered the civil service in 1813, finally became director of archives after many frustrations and retired in 1856. His official career was a source of grievance to him, his private life equally clouded. Neither marrying nor releasing his betrothed, Käthe Fröhlich, he ended his days as her lodger. He suffered much from the intermittence of his creative powers, and after the failure of Weh dem der lügt (1838) permitted no new play to be performed, though Heinrich Laube revived his earlier work with resounding success. 1816–26 was his most fertile period, when the great success of his poetical fate-tragedy Die Ahnfrau (1817) and of his classic-romantic Sappho (1817) gave him self-confidence. Das Goldene Vlies (1818–20) is considered the finest of all treatments of Medea. His historical plays brought him official discouragement, and later plays, his greatest work among them, were written with slow labour. His posthumously discovered epigrams were a brilliant revelation of embittered gloom. His melancholy outlook pervaded his plays, whose central theme is that to become involved—in love or the exercise of power—brings downfall. His Novelle Der Arme Spielmann is a muted study of one who remained uninvolved. In his all but annihilating struggle for balance and restraint he imposed classical concentration upon the romantic elements in his plays and in so doing touched greatness. The last bastion of the 18th century, he was the first Austrian writer to achieve international standing.

Blanka von Kastilien (1807–09); Sappho, tr. L. C. Cumming (1855); Das Goldene Vlies (1822; tr. F. W. Thurstan and S. A. Wittmann, 1879); König Ottokars Glück und Ende (1825; sel. tr. T. Carlyle, 1840); Ein treuer Diener seines Herrn (1830); Melusina (1833; music K. Kreutzer); Des Meeres und der Liebe Wellen (1831); Der Traum ein Leben (1834); Weh dem der lügt (1837); Libussa (1872); Die Jüdin von Toledo (1873; tr. G. H. and A. P. Danton, 1913–15); Ein Bruderzwist in Habsburg (1873).—Historisch-kritische Gesamtausgabe, ed. A. Sauer and R. Backmann (1909 ff.); Werke, ed. E. Castle (6 vols, 1923–24).

Gespräche und Charakteristiken seiner Persönlichkeit durch die Zeitgenossen, ed. A. Sauer (7 vols, 1941); R. Payer v. Thurn and H. Reuther, G. im Bilde (1930); G. Pollak, F. G.

and the Austrian Drama (1907); J. Nadler, G. (1948); L. Beriger, Grillparzers Persönlichkeit in seinem Werk (1928); F. Wolf-Cirian, Grillparzers Frauengestalten (1908); J. Müller, Grillparzers Menschenauffassung (1934); W. Kosch, Österreich im Dichten und Denken Grillparzers (1946); H. v. Hofmannsthal, Die Berührung der Sphären (1931); Jahrbuch der Grillparzer-Gesellschaft (1891 ff.). H.A.P.

Grimald, Nicholas (*Huntingdonshire 1519 ?; †1562 ?), English clergyman, poet and Latin dramatist, who was a member of both Universities and contributed to Tottel's Miscellany, which he may have edited. Grimald wrote blank and rhyming verse with competence. J.J.Y.L.

L. R. Merrill, The Life and Poems of N. G. (1925); G. P. Shannon, 'N. G.'s. Heroic Couplet', in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc., 45 (1930). B.L.J.

Grimm, Friedrich Melchior, Baron von (*Regensburg 26 XII 1723; †Gotha 19 XII 1807), French critic of German origin. After studying at Leipzig he went to Paris (1748) as secretary to count Friesen and became intimate with the French philosophes, particularly Diderot and, until their break in 1757, Rousseau. His main writings are in the Correspondance littéraire, a cultural newsletter addressed to foreign sovereigns, which he edited (1753–73).

Correspondance littéraire, philosophique et critique par Grimm, Diderot, etc., ed. M. Tourneux (16 vols, 1877–82); Lettres de G. à l'Impératrice Cathérine II, pub. Russian Imp. Hist. Soc. (1885).

E. Scherer, M. G. (1887); A. Cazes, G. et les Encyclopédistes (1933). G.B.

Grimm, Jakob (*Hanau 4 I 1778; †Berlin 20 IX 1865), German scholar, who founded the study of scientific philology, and, with his inseparable brother Wilhelm, that of German antiquity. Both studied at Marburg, where they were influenced by Savigny; contact with the Heidelberg romantics directed their attention to folklore—Grimm's Märchen and Deutsche Sagen were the enduring results. Dismissed from professorships at Göttingen 1837 for having signed a protest against the king of Hanover's abrogation of the constitution, both became members of the Prussian Academy of Sciences in 1841. Jakob Grimm's scientific study of language developed, with the bold intuitions of genius, from his study of early literature. Grimm's Law of consonantal mutations was first fully worked out in his Deutsche Grammatik.

Kinder- und Hausmärchen (with W. Grimm; 3 vols, 1812, 1815, 1822); Lieder der alten Edda (with W. Grimm; 1815); Deutsche Sagen (2 vols, 1816–18); Deutsche Mythologie (1835; Teutonic Mythology, tr. J. Stallybrass, 1880–88); Über seine Entlassung (1838); Kleine Schriften mit Selbstbiographie, ed. K. Müllenhoff and E. Ippel (8 vols, 1864–90); Briefe der Brüder Grimm, ed. A. Leitzmann (1923).

W. Scherer, J. G. (1879); W. P. Ker, J. G. (New York, 1915); W. Muschg, 'Das Dichterische im Werk Jakob Grimms', in Ermatinger-Festschrift (1933). H.A.P.

Grimm, Wilhelm (*Hanau 24 II 1787; ∞1825; †Berlin 16 XII 1859), German writer and scholar, and life-long collaborator with his brother Jakob. The more sociable of the two, Wilhelm Grimm married and had a family, but the brothers continued to live in a harmonious joint household. Complementary to his brother, he was less of a creative thinker, but more of a writer. It is principally to him we owe the memorable simplicity of the Fairy Tales.

Über deutsche Runen (1821); Die deutsche Heldensage (1829); Zur Geschichte des Reims (1852); Kleinere Schriften mit Selbstbiographie, ed. G. Hinrichs (4 vols, 1881–87); Briefwechsel mit Jenny von Droste-Hülshoff, ed. K. Schulte-Kemminghausen (1929). H.A.P.

Grimme, Friedrich Wilhelm (*Assinghausen 25 XII 1827; †Münster 3 IV 1887), Low German writer. His anecdotes, funny stories and satires show him to be a keen observer of the lower classes in town and country, but his attitude is that of the educated bourgeois and his sense of humour is somewhat banal.

Sprickeln un Spöne (1858); Spargitzen (1860); Grain Tuig (1860); Galanterey-Waar (1867); Nachlass (1890).

F. Wippermann, F. W. G. (1908); H. Luhmann, in Mitt. Quickborn, 33 (1939). G.C.

Grimmelshausen, Johann Jakob Christoph von (*Gelnhausen 1622; †Renchen 17 VIII 1676), German novelist. The son of an innkeeper, he grew up in the turmoil of the Thirty Years' War, the background of his literary work. He probably lost his Protestant parents in the sack of Gelnhausen in 1634, was kidnapped by Hessians and Croats, joined the imperial armies in 1636 and left in 1648 to become administrator of the estates of the counts of Schauenburg at Gaisbach. In 1660 he was discharged from this office and became the administrator of the Ullenburg estate until 1665. At about this time he was converted to Roman Catholicism. In 1667 he became the agent of the bishop of Strasbourg in Renchen, where he lived until his death. He apparently began writing in the army, but devoted himself seriously to it for financial reasons after 1665. Most of his work consists of tales with a popular flavour in contrast to the courtly novels modelled on L'Astrée, though three of his works (Der Keusche Joseph, 1667; Dietwald und Amelinde, 1670; and Proximus und Lympida, 1672) attempted to capture their market. Grimmelshausen's strength is the metaphysical picaresque novel, and in the contrapuntal structure of Simplicissimus his lively description and deep religious emotion come to full fruition, making it one of the major works of German literature, incorporating all the principal themes of the age. The hero seeks after spiritual things, with continual setbacks from the world and the flesh, until he renounces the world and lives as a hermit. Courasche gives a contrasting picture of a female picaro entirely devoted to the world. The numerous adaptations and continuations of Simplicissimus (of which the 'sixth book', in which Simplicissimus retires to a desert island, is the first) by Grimmelshausen and others vouch for its popularity.

Satyrischer Pilgram (1666); Der abentheurliche Simplicissimus Teutsch (1669; ed. J. H. Scholte, 1939); Continuatio des abentheurlichen Simplicissimi oder Schluss desselben (1669; ed. J. H. Scholte, 1939); Neueingerichteter und vielverbesserter abentheurlicher Simplicissimus (1669, rev., with Continuatio as 6th book; ed. R. Kögel, 1880); Landstörtzerin Courasche (1670; ed. J. H. Scholte, 1923); Seltsamer Springinsfeld (1670; ed. J. H. Scholte, 1925).—Selected works, ed. A. von Keller (4 vols, 1852–62), H. Kurz (4 vols, 1863–64, with valuable notes on sources etc.), J. Tittmann (4 vols, 1874–77), F. Bobertag (2 vols, 1882–88), H. H. Borcherdt (4 vols, 1921); Eng. tr. of Simpl. by A. T. S. Goodrick with intro. by W. Rose (1926).

J. H. Scholte, Probleme der Grimmelshausenforschung (Groningen, 1912); A. Bechtold, G. und seine Zeit (1914); J. H. Scholte, Zonagri Discurs von Waarsagern (Amsterdam, 1921); G. Könnecke and J. H. Scholte, Quellen und Forschungen zur Lebensgeschichte Grimmelshausens (2 vols, 1926–28); M. Koschlig, G. und sein Verleger (1939); J. H. Scholte, Der Simplicissimus und sein Dichter (1950).—Monographs by W. Burkhardt (1929), K. C. Hayens (Oxford 1932, only general treatment in English), H. E. Busse (1939).—K. Fuchs, Die Religiosität Grimmelshausens (1935); C. A. von Bloedau, Simplicissimus und seine Vorgänger (1908); E. Ermatinger, Weltdeutung im Simplicissimus (1923); J. Alt, G. und Simplicissimus (1935); essays by various hands in Euphorion, 14th Suppl. (1924); W. Rose, Men, Myths and Movements in German Literature (1931). L.W.F.

Gringore, Pierre (*Calvados 1475?; †1538?), French poet and playwright. His first work is an allegorical poem, Le Château de Labour (1499), in the style of the rhétoriqueurs. Under the patronage of Louis XII and later of duke Anthony of Lorraine he wrote satirical and farcical plays in which he took part; the outlook of his Jeu du Prince des Sotz (1512) is Gallican and bourgeois. He reappears in idealized form in Victor Hugo and Théodore de Banville.

Œuvres complètes, ed. C. d'Héricault and A. de Montaiglon (2 vols, 1858–77).

C. Oulmont, P. G. (1911) and Étude sur la langue de P. G. (1911); N. Hamper, Die Stellung P. G.s zur franz. Kirchenpolitik (1912); W. Dittman, P. G. als Dramatiker (1923). M.Y.

Griswold, Rufus Wilmot (*Benson, Vt. 15 II 1815; ∞1837 Caroline Searles, ∞1845 Charlotte Myers, ∞1853 Harriet McCrillis; †New York 27 VIII 1857), American anthologist. Editor of Graham's Magazine, he advocated 'Americanism' in literature.

The Poets and Poetry of America (1842); The Prose Writers of America (1847).

J. Bayless, R. W. G.: Poe's Literary Executor (1942). H.L.C.

Grob, Johann (*Groben-Entswil 16 IX 1643; †Herisau 1 IV 1697), Swiss poet. He served in the Saxon army, travelled and held official positions in canton Appenzell. He is known by his epigrams and his patriotic pamphlet Treugemeinter Eidgenössischer Auffwecker (1688). His epigrams follow Owen and Logau but show many individual traits.

Dichterische Versuchsgabe (1678); Rheinholds von Freienthal Poetisches Spazierwäldlein (1700); Epigramme, ed. A. Lindquist (1929), C. Lang (1939, selection only).

E. Zschokke, Der Toggenburger Epigrammatiker J. G. (1887); A. Lindquist, Det tyska 1600-tals epigrammets motiver och tendenser (1949). L.W.F.

Groeningen, August Pieter van, pseud. Willem van Oevere (*Utrecht 14 II 1865; †Barendrecht 12 II 1894), Dutch writer of an early promising naturalistic novel and short stories; a school teacher, in contact with De Nieuwe Gids.

Martha de Bruin (1889); Een nest menschen, ed. P. Tideman (1895).

W. Kloos, in Veertien jaar liter. geschied., 2 (1896); J. de Meester, 'A. P. v. G. en de epiek', in Taal en Letteren, 9 (1898); H. Gerversman, 'Een bijdrage tot de genesis van Tachtig', in De Nieuwe Gids, 40 (1925). J.W.W.

Groen van Prinsterer, Guillaume (*Voorburg 21 VIII 1801; ∞1828 Elizabeth M. M. van der Hoop; †The Hague 19 V 1876), Dutch statesman, historian and journalist, pupil of Bilderdijk and friend of Da Costa, one of the leaders of the Réveil, advocate of denominational education.

Archives ou correspondance inédite de la Maison d'Orange-Nassau (14 vols, 1835–61); Parlementaire studiën en schetsen (3 vols, 1865–67).

T. de Vries, Mr G. G. v. P., eene bibliografie (1908); Briefwisselingen (4 vols, 1925–49); P. A. Diepenhorst, G. v. P. (1932); L. C. Suttorp and others, G. v. P.'s 'Ongeloof en revolutie' (1949). J.W.W.

Gröndal, Benedikt Sveinbjarnarson (*Bessastaðir 6 X 1826; ∞1871 Ingigerður Zoëga; †Reykjavík 2 VIII 1907), Icelandic novelist, poet and prose writer. Gröndal, who had a somewhat erratic early career, was the son of the famous scholar Sveinbjörn Egilsson. He was educated at Bessastaðir and Copenhagen. Later he became converted to Roman Catholicism and studied in Belgium. Finally he settled down to a serious study of northern antiquities. His chief prose work is Sagan af Heljarslóðarorrustu ('The Battle of Hel's Field', 1861), a rollicking burlesque, written in the style of the medieval knightly romance; it was inspired by the battle of Solferino and satirizes the contemporary international situation. His Þórðar saga Geirmundarsonar (1891) is a Rabelaisian satire of modern life. Gröndal's verse is marked by great boldness of imagination and sensitive patriotic feeling, although at times, as in his prose, his fluency and fantasy lead to a certain obscureness. His production also included text books on a vast variety of subjects.

Verse: Drápa um Örvarodd (1851); Kvæði (1853–1856); Kvæðabók (1900); Dagrún (1906). —Prose: Dægradvöl (1923).

G. Finnbogason and others, Benedikt Gröndal áttræður (1906); S. Einarsson, 'G. and Heljarslóðarorrusta', in Jour. of Eng. and Ger. Philol., 36 (1937). R.G.P.

Gronovius, Johannes Fredericus (*Hamburg 7 IX 1611; †Leyden 28 XII 1671), Dutch classical philologist, came to Holland after meeting Hugo de Groot, was professor at Deventer, in 1658 at Leyden. He edited Livius, Seneca, Plinius and other Latin authors. A.M.B.W.

Groome, Francis Hindes (*Monk Soham, Suffolk 30 VIII 1851; ∞1876 Esmeralda Locke; †London 24 I 1902), English scholar of Romany language and lore, novelist and miscellaneous writer on literary subjects.

In Gypsy Tents (1881); Influence of Gypsies on Superstition of English Folk (1891); Kriegspiel (gypsy novel, partly autobiog., 1896); Two Suffolk Friends (study of his father and Edward Fitzgerald, 1895); Gypsy Folk-Tales (1899).

T. Watts-Dunton, Memoir (1902). R.M.H.

Groot (Grotius), Hugo de (*Delft 10 IV 1583; ∞1608 Maria van Reigersberch; †Rostock 28 VIII 1645), Dutch theologian, jurist, philologist, neo-Latin poet and playwright. Groot studied at Leyden from 1594 and made a journey to France in 1598 where he took a doctor's degree in law at Orléans. In 1599 he settled at The Hague as attorney at law. In 1601 he was commissioned by the States of Holland to write the history of the insurrection. Groot had already published several learned and literary works, editions of Capella and Aratus, the tragedy Adamus exul (later followed by other biblical dramas), poems in Latin and Greek etc. For the East India Company he wrote De jure praedae (1604), one chapter of which was published separately as Mare Liberum. In 1607 Groot became Advocaat-Fiscaal of Holland, Zeeland and West Friesland, in 1613 pensionary of Rotterdam which made him a member of the States of Holland as well and later also council commissioner. His activities during the religious struggles were responsible for his being sentenced to life imprisonment in 1618. He escaped from the castle of Loevestein in 1621. In Paris he crowned his scholarly pursuits, begun at Loevestein—Inleiding tot de Hollandse Rechtsgeleerdheid, commentaries on the Bible, Latin translations of Greek writers, the draft for the Bewijs van de ware Godsdienst etc.—by writing his most famous work, De Jure Belli ac Pacis, with which he laid the foundations of modern international law. Under Frederik Hendrik he lived for a short time in the Netherlands (Oct. 1631 to April 1632), next in Germany until he became Swedish ambassador in France.

J. ter Meulen, Concise bibliography of H. G (1925), continued in Grotiana; J. ter Meulen and P. J. J. Diermanse, Bibliographie des écrits imprimés de H. G. (1950); H. C. Rogge, Brieven van en aan Maria v. Reigersberch (1902); P. C. Molhuysen, Briefwisseling van H. G. (2 vols, 1928–36); H. G. Essays on his life and works, ed. A. Lysen (1925); W. S. M. Knight, Life and works of H. G. (1925); W. J. M. v. Eysinga, H. d. G. (1945); C. v. Vollenhoven, in Verspreide Geschriften, I (1934). J.J.M.

Groot, Pieter de (*Rotterdam 1615; †1678), Dutch statesman and poet, son of Hugo, was pensionary of Amsterdam and ambassador to Louis XIV. He wrote religious and political poems.

Verscheyde Nederduytsche Gedichten (1651); Apollo's Harp (1658); Hollants Venezoen (a satirical poem on William III; de G.'s authorship was never proved); Vertroosting over de doodt van zijne Hoogheit (first ascribed to Vondel, but presumably by de G.); Uitbreiding der Psalmen (1724).

J. P. Cornets de Groot, Levensschets van P. de G. (1847); M. van Leeuwen, Het leven van P. de G. (1917). A.M.B.W.

Groote, Geert (*Deventer X 1340; †20 VIII 1384), Dutch theologian. He read theology, law and medicine at Paris from 1355 to 1368. Converted to a life of penitence in 1374, he preached in many towns with spectacular success, founding for his followers the houses of Brethren and Sisters of the Common Life and thus becoming the father of the Modern Devotion, a movement of moral renewal and inwardness. He wrote numerous dissertations (on marriage, against simony and the concubinage of the clergy) and a great number of letters.

Epistolae, ed. W. Mulder (1933), Getijdenboek, ed. N. v. Wijk (1940), De Simonia ad beguttas, ed. W. de Vreese (1940), De matrimonio, ed. M. H. Mulders (1941).

A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance (1925); K. C. L. M. de Beer, Studiën over de spiritualiteit van G. G. (1938); J. G. J. Tiecke, De werken van G. G. (1941); J. van Ginneken, G. G.'s levensbeeld (1942). J.J.M.

Grosseteste, Robert (*Stradbroke, Suffolk c. 1175; †9 X 1253), bishop of Lincoln, scholar and philosopher; profoundly influenced English thought; wrote miscellaneous works, including an allegorical poem in French.

Epistolae, ed. H. R. Luard (1861); Die Philosophischen Werke des R. G., ed. L. Baur (1912); Le Château d'amour, ed. J. Murray (1918).

F. S. Stevenson, R. G. (1899); F. M. Powicke, R. G. and the Nicomachean Ethics (Proc. Brit. Acad. XVI, 1930); S. H. Thomson, The Writings of R. G. (1940); R. G., Scholar and Bishop, essays ed. D. A. Callus (1953). R.W.B.

Grossi, Tommaso (*Bellano 23 I 1790; †Milan 10 XII 1853), Italian romantic poet and novelist. As a lawyer he drew up the act of union between Lombardy and Piedmont in 1848. He lived for many years in Milan with Manzoni under whose influence he abandoned satire and began to write romantic short stories in verse: La Fuggitiva (1816), L'Ildegonda (1820); further inspired by Scott and Michaud he produced I Lombardi alla prima crociata (1826) and finally his greatest work, Marco Visconti (1834; new ed. 1926), an historical novel. Considered by D'Azeglio and others a masterpiece, it shows a characteristic lack of connexion between plot and historical background, dramatic possibilities are not exploited and many of the characters are too languidly romantic. The personality of Manzoni pervades the whole of Grossi's work.

Opere (1862); Lettere (1939).

G. Brognoligo, T. G. (1916); M. Chini, Le Teorie dei romantici intorno al poema epico e 'I Lombardi alla prima crociata' di T. G. (1920). N.K.W.

Grossmith, George (*London 9 XII 1847; ∞1873 Emmeline Noyce; †Folkestone 1 III 1912), English comedian, member of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company 1877–89. The Diary of A Nobody, a comic study of suburban life, first appeared serially in Punch.

A Society Clown (1888); The Diary of A Nobody (with brother, Weedon Grossmith, 1892; 5th ed. with Memoir by B. W. Findon, 1920). R.F.

Groth, Klaus (*Heide 24 IV 1819; ∞1859 Doris Finke; †Kiel 2 VI 1899), Low German poet. He came from a farming family in a small town in Holstein and ended as an honorary professor of Low German literature at Kiel university. Along with Fritz Reuter, with whom, however, he quarrelled, Groth rehabilitated Low German as a language of poetry and literature. The lyrical and narrative poems of Quickborn (1852) give a complete picture of country life in his native district of Dithmarschen. His poems are conceived in a minor key, tender and sometimes sentimental, reflecting the subjective mood of late romanticism which corresponded well with a basic trait of Holstein mentality. This softness is intensified by Groth's nostalgia for childhood's paradise and his yearning for an undefined spiritual experience. However, these features are outweighed by Groth's gentle humour and kindness of heart and, above all, his melodious mastery of language. His poetic genius showed itself in later expansions of Quickborn, two long narrative poems and several prose stories, but never again reached the height of his first book. His poems have often been set to music, for instance by Brahms.

Verse: Quickborn (1852); Vör de Görn (1858); Rothgeter Meister Lamp un sin Dochder (1862); Quickborn II (includes De Heisterkrog, 1871).—Prose: Vertelln (1855, 1860); Ut min

Jungsparadies (1876).—Briefe über Hochdeutsch und Plattdeutsch (1858); Lebenserinnerungen, ed. E. Wolff (1891).—Gesammelte Werke (1893 ff.).

G. Seelig, K. G. (1924); D. Cölln, K. G., sein Leben und sein Werk (1926); G. Rühsen, Untersuchungen zu Klaus Groths 'Quickborn' (Diss. Marburg, 1930); L. Wolff, 'Der persönliche Grundton im Dichten von K. G.', in Zs. f. Deutschkde. (1931); P. Jørgensen, Die dithmarsische Mundart von Klaus Groths 'Quickborn' (1934); F. Pauly and R. Bülck, K. G. Herkunft und Standort (1948); F. Pauly, K. G., Bedeutung und Persönlichkeit (1949), 'Von den geistigen Grundlagen des Quickborn', in Niederdt. Jahrb., 71/73 (1950).—V. Pauls, Um den Quickborn. Briefwechsel zwischen K. G. und Karl Müllenhoff (1938). G.C.

Grotius: see GROOT, HUGO DE.

Grove, MATHEW, English poet, known only as the author of The History of Pelops and Hippodamia (1587), in ballad metre, and of some short poems.

Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (1878). B.L.J.

Gruel, GUILLAUME (*1410?; †1475?), French chronicler. A member of the household of Arthur de Richemont, constable of France, who became duke of Brittany in 1457. He wrote an interesting, if somewhat uncritical, biography of his master (1466?).

Chronique d'A. de Richemont, ed. A. Le Vavasseur (1890). A.H.D.

Grün, ANASTASIUS, pseud. of ANTON ALEXANDER GRAF AUERSPERG (*Laibach 11 IV 1806; †Graz 12 IX 1876), Austrian poet. His sharp criticism of Metternich's régime was the forerunner of much Young German political verse. His Spaziergänge eines Wiener Poeten (1831) swept Germany, but, though Grün's identity was known, his social position protected him from reprisals. His other verses express optimistic idealism, but were only one element in a busy life devoted to managing his estates, and after 1848 to active politics.

Der letzte Ritter (1830; tr. J. O. Sargent, 1871); Schutt (1836); Gedichte (1837); Nibelungen im Frack (1843); Der Pfaff vom Kahlenberg (1850); Volkslieder aus Krain (1850); Robin Hood (1864); In der Veranda (1875).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. E. Castle (6 vols, 1909); Politische Reden und Aufsätze, ed. S. Hock (1906).

P. v. Radics, A. G. und seine Heimat (1876); R. Wachter, A. Grüns politische Dichtung (1933). H.A.P.

Grundtvig, NICOLAI FREDERIK SEVERIN (*Udby 8 IX 1783; ∞1818 Lise Blicher, ∞1851 Ane Marie Elise Toft, née Carlsen, ∞1858 Countess Asta Tugendreich Adelheid Krag-Juel-Vind-Frijs; †Copenhagen 2 IX 1872), Danish poet, historian and linguist. The son of a country parson, he became curate to his father at Udby. After his father's death he devoted a number of years to the translation of Saxo, Snorri and Beowulf into Danish. In 1821 he became a vicar, but after a feud with the theological professors he resigned in 1826. He visited England three times 1829–31 to study Anglo-Saxon MSS, and it was to some extent due to his initiative that the organized publication of Old English MSS was begun. From 1839 till his death Grundtvig preached in Copenhagen, becoming a bishop in 1861.

Grundtvig is a gigantic figure, not only in Danish literature, but also as an educationist, an historian, a philological scholar, a religious reformer and a politician. The Danish Folk High Schools were directly inspired by him, and his ideas have greatly influenced the whole pattern of Danish democracy. His writings include a vast number of songs and hymns, which contain most of his best poetry.

An unorthodox historian, he shared the romantic enthusiasm for the antiquities of Scandinavia, interpreting its myths as poetic visions. Some of his historical works are strange mixtures of scholarship, prophetic vision and insanity. Grundtvig's influence in religious and spiritual matters is unequalled by any other Danish writer. Originally a zealous and orthodox Christian, he became increasingly more liberal, fought bitterly against all dogma and demanded complete freedom in all spiritual matters.

PROSE: Nordens Mythologi (1808); Optrin af Kæmpelivets Undergang i Nord (2 vols, 1809–11); Kort Begreb af Verdenskrøniken i Sammenhæng (1812); Nordens Mythologie (1832); Haandbog i Verdenshistorien (3 vols, 1833–43); Bragesnak (1844).—VERSE: Maskeradeballet i Danmark (1808); Nytaarsnat (1811); Roskilde-Rim (1814); Nyaarsmorgen (1824); Sangværk til den danske Kirke og Skole (5 vols, 1837–70).—Udvalgte Skrifter, ed. J. Borup and F. Schrøder (3 vols, 1929–31); Værker i Udvalg, ed. G. Christensen and H. Koch (1940 ff.).—CORRESPONDENCE: G. og Ingemann, Brevvexling 1821–59, ed. S. Grundtvig (1882); C. Molbech og G. En Brevvexling, ed. L. Schrøder (1888); N. F. S. G.'s Englandsbreve til hans Hustru, ed. S. and V. Grundtvig (1920); Breve til og fra N.F.S.G., ed. G. Christensen and S. Grundtvig (2 vols, 1924–26).

H. Bruun, Biskop N. F. S. G.'s Levnetsløb (2 vols, 1882); J. H. Monrad, Studier over Grundtvigske Digte (1896); L. Schrøder, G.'s Levnet (1901); F. Rønning, N. F. S. G. (4 vols, 1907–14); J. Borup, G.'s Stjerne (1912);

H. Helweg, G.'s Sindssygdom (1918); T. Bredsdorff, N. F. S. G. (1919); H. Rosendal, N. F. S. G. (1923); H. Begtrup, G.'s Saga (1927); E. Lehmann, G. (1929); J. P. Bang, G.'s Arv (1930); J. P. Bang, G. og England (1932); H. Begtrup, G.'s Syn paa Guds Ord (1933); J. Monrad, N. F. S. G. (1933); G. Albeck, G. og Norden (1942); H. Koch, G. (1943); J. Marias, Bishop G. and the People's High Schools in Denmark (Pretoria, 1911); Noëlle Davies, Education for Life (1931), G. of Denmark (1944). E.B.

Grundtvig, Svend Hersleb (*Copenhagen 9 IX 1824; ∞1858 Laura Jensine Christine Bloch; †Frederiksberg 14 VI 1883), Danish philologist; son of N. F. S. Grundtvig. His first work was a translation of English and Scottish ballads, and he devoted his life to a study of the Danish medieval ballads and to the collection and publication of Danish folk-lore and folk tales. His main work is the edition of Danmarks gamle Folkeviser.

F. Barford, S. H. G. (1883); S. B. Hustvedt, Ballad Books and Ballad Men (1930). E.B.

Gryphius, Andreas (*Glogau 11 X 1616; †ibid. 16 VII 1664), German poet and dramatist, son of a Lutheran pastor whose death by poison in the poet's childhood began a long series of catastrophes which left a permanent mark on him. He gained however a good education and was enabled to travel extensively, notably in Holland, France and Italy, returning in 1650, after refusing chairs of mathematics and astronomy at Frankfurt/Oder, Heidelberg and Uppsala, to take up an important administrative post at Glogau, where he died in harness. His work is distinguished by a deep pessimism and intense religious fervour, the more intense since he lacked any certainty of salvation in a world devastated by war and dominated by mutability, in which not even the stars endure. His Christian stoic dramas, which owe much (though less than has been thought) to Vondel and the Jesuits, are essentially dramas of constant martyrdom, with the exception of Cardenio und Celinde which is a drama of conversion. The theme of illusion and reality, powerfully used in that play, is also fundamental to Gryphius' comedies, which despite his pessimism are the best of the century and owe something to Shakespeare. Herr Peter Squentz treats the theme of the Bottom scenes in Midsummer Night's Dream. His pastoral comedies, written mostly for dynastic occasions, have grace and charm, but he suffered from the lack of a permanent theatre and public. His lyric poetry is the sincerest and most impressive of the period, revealing an existential distress which expresses itself in stately odes and moving sonnets of great power. Though often wrongly accused of lack of dramatic power, Gryphius both as a dramatist and lyric poet is one of the great figures of German literature.

Tragedies: Leo Armenius (1650); Catharina von Georgien, Carolus Stuardus, Felicitas (from the Latin of N. Caussin), Cardenio und Celinde (1657); Aemilius Paulus Papinianus (1659); Gibeoniter (from Vondel's Gebroeders; 1689).—Comedies: Herr Peter Squentz, Majuma (1657); Verlibtes Gespenste, Die gelibte Dornrose (1660); Horribilicribrifax (1663); Der schwermende Schaffer Lysis (1661; after T. Corneille); Seug-Amme (1663; from the Italian).—Verse: Sonn- und Feiertags-Sonette (1637); Olivetum (1646, Latin); Teutsche Reim-Gedichte (1650); Deutscher Gedichte Erster Theil (1657); Freuden- und Trauer-Spiele, auch Oden und Sonnette (1663); Himmel-Steigente Hertzens Seufftzer (1665).—Prose: Leichabdankungen (1666).—Collected works: Andreae Gryphii um ein merckliches vermehrte Teutsche Gedichte (2 vols, 1698), ed. H. Palm (3 vols, 1878–84); Lateinische und deutsche Jugenddichtungen, ed. F. W. Wentzlaff-Eggebert (1938, with biblio.); Dramatische Dichtungen (selection, ed. J. Tittmann, 1870).

V. Manheimer, 'G.–Bibliographie', in Euphorion, XI (1905); R. A. Kollewijn, Über den Einfluss des holländischen Dramas auf G. (1880); V. Manheimer, Die Lyrik des A. G. (1904, standard); W. Harring, G. und das Drama der Jesuiten (1907); W. Flemming, G. und die Bühne (1914, 1921); E. Keppler, G. und Shakespeare (Diss. Tübingen, 1921); F. Gundolf, A. G. (1927, unhelpful); A. Strutz, Die Weltanschauung eines deutschen Barockdichters (1931); G. Fricke, Die Bildlichkeit in der Dichtung des A. G. (1933, very good); F. W. Wentzlaff-Eggebert, Dichtung und Sprache des jungen G. (1936, very good); I. Rüttenauer, Weltangst und Erlösung in den Gedichten von G. (1940); A. Ricci, Cardenio et Celinde, étude de littérature comparée (1948); M. E. Gilbert, 'Gryphius's Cardenio und Celinde', in Mod. Lang. Rev., XLV (1950); E. Lunding, Das schlesische Kunstdrama (Copenhagen 1940, brilliant); H. Schöffler, Deutscher Osten in deutschen Geist (1940, important). L.W.F.

Guaiferius of Salerno (fl. c. 1050), of noble Lombard birth, was for a time abbot of Salerno, but retired to Monte Cassino. His religious verse follows classical models, and his hagiographical writings are in good Latin prose.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 147.

W. v. Giesebrecht, L'istruzione in Italia nei primi secoli del medio-evo (1895); A.-F. Ozanam, Documents inédits pour servir à l'histoire littéraire de l'Italie (1850).

F.J.E.R.

Guarini, BATTISTA (*Ferrara 1538; ∞Taddea di Niccolò Bendidio; †Venice 7 X 1612), Italian poet. Entering the service of Alfonso II of Ferrara in 1567, he succeeded Tasso as court poet in 1577. Entrusted with various diplomatic missions, he twice visited Cracow, but in 1583 retired to S. Bellino, where he completed the Pastor Fido and wrote L'Idropica. Returning as state secretary in 1585, he left Alfonso's court abruptly in 1588 to seek service elsewhere. Reconciled with Alfonso in 1595, he served the Medici in Florence, the della Rovere in Urbino, and appeared before Paul V on Ferrara's behalf before retiring from public life in 1605.

Guarini's fame derives from the Pastor Fido. Although his genius is lyrical rather than dramatic, this pastoral drama with its complicated construction does not lack dramatic interest and heralds the musical drama of the coming century. Set in an Arcadia sublimely urbane, it is a brilliant reflection of the manners of its age. Love, sensuous and pagan, pervades the play, which is not without inspired utterance and (in Corisca) effective characterization. Destined to enjoy prolonged popularity throughout Europe, this mongrel without Aristotelian pedigree did not escape contemporary criticism, but was ably defended by Guarini in the Compendio della poesia tragicomica.

Pastor Fido (the definitive text was fixed by Guarini himself in the 20th ed. 1602); Il Pastor Fido e Il Compendio della poesia tragicomica, crit. ed. G. Brognoligo (1914); Eng. tr. by a kinsman of Sir E. Dymock (1602), Sir R. Fanshawe (1647), W. Grove (1782) and W. Clapperton (1809); Opere di B. G., ed. L. Fassò (1950).

V. Rossi, B. G. ed il Pastor Fido (1886); E. Carrara, La poesia pastorale (1907); B. Croce, Storia dell'età barocca in Italia (1929); M. Marcazzan, 'B. G. e la tragicommedia', in Il Tropario (1930); V. M. Jeffery, 'Italian and English Pastoral Drama of the Renaissance', in Mod. Lang. Rev., 19 (1924). P.McN.

Guarini, GUARINO, known as GUARINO DA VERONA (*Verona 1374; †Ferrara 4 XII 1460), Italian humanist. He studied under Crisolora in Constantinople (1403–08), and taught in Florence, Venice and Verona before making Ferrara his home (1429) and a centre of humanism. Here he made of Leonello d'Este a model renaissance prince and rendered signal services to classical learning, his Regulae becoming a standard grammar. His letters live.

Epistolario di Guarino Veronese, ed. R. Sabbadini (3 vols, 1915–19).

R. Sabbadini, La scuola e gli studi di G. G. Veronese (1896); G. Bertoni, G. da V. (1921). P.McN.

Guarino, BATTISTA (*Ferrara 1434; †ibid. 31 VII 1503), Italian humanist educator. Son and successor of Guarino Guarini, whose methods he propagated in De ordine docendi, he excelled as editor, emendator and poet.

De ordine docendi et studendi (1459), Eng. tr. in W. H. Woodward, Vittorino da Feltre and other Humanist Educators (with life, 1897); Poemata (1496).

A. Luzio and R. Renier, 'La coltura e le relazioni letterarie di Isabella d'Este Gonzaga', in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 35 (1900); G. Bertoni, La biblioteca estense (1903); E. Carrara, La poesia pastorale (1907). P.McN.

Guérin, CHARLES (*Lunéville 29 XII 1873; †ibid. 17 III 1907), French poet. Charles Guérin was sufficiently well off to be able to travel and write until the day of his premature death. A symbolist, he cultivated the poetry of emotional intimacies and human unease. His earlier style was warmly responsive to the feelings with which life inspired him, but as he grew older and withdrew into a Christian sobriety, it took on a more subdued note.

Le Cœur Solitaire (1898); L'Eros Funèbre (1900); Le Semeur de Cendres (1901); L'Homme Intérieur (1905).

J. Viollis, C. G. (1909); J. B. Hanson, Le Poète C. G. (1935). M.G.; J.P.R.

Guérin, MAURICE DE (*Le Cayla 4 VIII 1810; †ibid. 19 VII 1839), French poet. Maurice de Guérin came of an aristocratic family, was influenced by Lamennais, and wrote a few poems of remarkable beauty before his early death from consumption. He left a Journal, in which he reveals many of the secrets of his spiritual life. Through the medium of the ancient myths (Le Centaure, La Bacchante) he expressed a pantheistic and strangely modern view of existence. His sensual and harmonious language places him among the masters of the prose poem.

Reliquiae (1840); Journal; lettres et poèmes (1842); Le Cahier vert (1921); Lettres d'adolescence (1930).—Œuvres, ed. H. Clouard (1930); Œuvres complètes, ed. B. d'Harcourt (2 vols, 1947).

E. Zyromski, M. de G. (1922); E. Decahors, M. de G. (1932); B. d'Harcourt, M. de G. et la Poème en prose (1932); A. Béguin, L'âme romantique et le rêve (1937). M.G.; J.P.R.

Guernes de Pont-Sainte-Maxence, 12th-century French poet. A clerk from the Ile-de-France, he wrote the first vernacular life of Saint Thomas Becket (1174), based on personal inquiry at Canterbury and on written Latin sources. The work is remarkable for truthfulness, skill and passionate interest.

La Vie de Saint Thomas Becket, ed. E. Walberg (1936). M.F.L.

Guerrazzi, Francesco Domenico (*Leghorn I VIII 1804; †Cecina 23 IX 1873), Italian patriot and writer. Much of his life was spent in prison or exile and even after 1862, as a member of the Sub-Alpine parliament, Guerrazzi's extreme views and violent temperament brought him into opposition with all parties except the republicans. As a writer he owed much to Byron and Scott, and his favourite medium was the historical novel with the history adapted to the contemporary political situation. His prolific literary activity was largely intended as patriotic propaganda and the artistic ideal sacrificed to political aims. His creations—exaggerated, ultra-romantic and highly improbable—while rousing the greatest enthusiasm in his own day are now forgotten. His best known works are Battaglia di Benevento (1827) and L'Assedio di Firenze (1836), though his comic allegory L'Asino (1857) is his best and most original work.

Veronica Cybo (1839); Isabella Orsini (1844); Beatrice Cenci (1854); Il buco nel muro (1862); L'Assedio di Roma (1863–65); Lettere, ed. G. Carducci (1880–82); Lettere familiari con ricordi degli ultimi anni suoi, ed. G. F. Guerrazzi (1924).

R. Guastalla, La vita e le opere di F. D. G. (1903); M. Amendola, La vita politica di F. D. G., 1847–49 (1921); 'F. D. G.', in Studi e Documenti (1924); P. Miniati, F. D. G. (1927). N.K.W.

Guest, Lady Charlotte: see Schreiber, Lady Charlotte.

Guevara, Antonio de (*Asturias de Santillana 1480; †Mondoñedo 1545), Spanish moralist. He was brought up at court as a page. After the death of queen Isabella he became a Franciscan. Charles V recalled him to the court, and he supported the throne during the revolt of the Communes. He later became inquisitor at Valencia, bishop first of Guadix, then of Mondoñedo.

His most famous book, the Relox de príncipes, which contains many fictional letters by Marcus Aurelius and the famous speech of the 'Peasant of the Danube' (versified by La Fontaine), appeared in 1529. It was translated into many languages and had an immense vogue in Europe. The 'Familiar Epistles', composed only for publication, together with an account of ten Caesars, a panegyric of country life, a guide for favourites and a work on the origins of navigation, appeared in 1539. Two religious treatises were published in 1542. His prose is very elaborate. He specialized in long sentences with frequent parallelisms and antitheses, internal rhymes and assonance, repetitions and doublets. He frequently claims to quote non-existent classical philosophers and refers to archaeological discoveries which were never made. These characteristics seem to have medieval precedents; in translation they may have helped to develop euphuism in England. There is some period charm in his prose, in spite of its prolixity; the eulogy of country life is a delightful book.

Bibl. Autores Esp., 13; Menosprecio de corte y alabanza de aldea, ed. Martínez de Burgos (1914, 1942); Reloj de príncipes, ed. A. Rosenblat (1936); Doctrinal de privados (Paris, n.d.); Epístolas familiares (selection, Buenos Aires, 1942); El villano del Danubio y otros fragmentos, ed. Américo Castro (Princeton, N.J., 1946).—Translations: The golden boke of Marcus Aurelius, tr. Lord Berners (1532); A dispraise of the life of a courtier (1548); The dial of princes, tr. Sir T. North (1557; repr. in selection, 1919); The familiar epistles, tr. E. Hellowes (1574); A booke of the invention of the art of navigation, tr. E. Hellowes (1577); A chronicle conteyning the lives of tenne emperours of Rome, tr. E. Hellowes (1577); The Mount of Calvarie (1595); The Praise and Happinesse of Countrie-Life, tr. H. Vaughan (1651; repr. Newtown, 1938).

J. Mª Gálviz Olivares, G. in England (Berlin, 1916); Sir H. Thomas, 'The English Translators of G.'s Works', in Estudios . . . A. Bonilla y San Martín, II (1930); R. Costes, A. de G., sa vie, son œuvre (1925). E.M.W.

Guiart, Guillaume (*Orléans 1280 ?; †1316 ?), French chronicler. He campaigned with the French army in Flanders (1304). His long verse chronicle, La Branche des royaux lignages (1306–07), which deals with French history from 1180 to 1304, is interesting from historical and literary points of view.

Ed. J. A. Buchon (2 vols, 1828); P. Paris, 'G. G.', in Hist. litt. de la France, 31 (1893). A.H.D.

Guibert de Nogent (*Clermont 10 IV 1053; †1124), French theologian and historian and abbot of Notre Dame de Nogent-sous-Coucy. His fame rests on two works, a history of the first crusade, entitled Gesta Dei per Francos, written about 1108, and an autobiography, De Sua Vita, written towards the end of his life.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 156; Autobiography, tr. C. C. S. Bland (1926). R.R.R.

Guicciardini, Francesco (*Florence 6 III 1483; ∞Maria Salviati; †Santa Margherita in Montici 22 V 1540), Italian statesman, political theorist and historian. Ambassador to Spain under the Florentine republic, 1512–14, and governor of Modena, Reggio and Parma, 1514–22, he was so skilful an administrator that in 1524 pope Clement VII called on him to quell the rioting in Romagna (of which he was made governor) and in 1525 he was appointed lieutenant-general of the anti-imperial league of Cognac. Owing to developments beyond Guicciardini's control, certain plans miscarried and Rome was sacked by imperial troops (1527). This was the turning-point in Guicciardini's career. His property was confiscated, he was distrusted by his fellow-Florentines and passed his last years in solitude and neglect.

His most important work is the Storia d'Italia, which covers Italian history from the entry of Charles VIII into Italy to the death of Clement VII. In its scope, embracing the political history of all Italy, the work was unprecedented. Its chief defect is the prolixity of its style, for which the author was mocked by Traiano Boccalini. Among his minor works are a history of Florence (entitled by subsequent editors Storie Fiorentine dal 1378 al 1509), Discorsi politici e ricordi (which include a discussion of the Discorsi of Machiavelli) and a collection of maxims and reflections, now known as Ricordi politici e civili, but having no title originally and probably never intended for publication. His Ricordi autobiografici and Le Ricordanze are personal memoirs intended for his family. His views as a political theorist are most clearly set forth in his plan for the government of Florence, Dialogo sul Reggimento di Firenze. In contrast with Machiavelli, Guicciardini was a realist, impatient of theorising and idealistic projects. Both his administration and his writing were based on shrewd observation of men and facts. None of Guicciardini's works was published during his life-time.

Opere, ed. G. Panigada and R. Palmarocchi (8 vols, 1929–33); Diario del viaggio in Spagna (1932), Ricordanze inedite (1930)—both ed. P. Guicciardini; Ricordi politici e civili, ed. R. Palmarocchi (1933).

A. Otetea, F. G., sa vie publique et sa pensée politique (1926); A. Ferrau, Il pensiero politico di F. G. (1930); R. Ridolfi, La genesi della 'Storia d'Italia' guicciardiniana (1939); P. Carli, in Giorn. stor. lett. ital., 115 (1940).
B.R.

Gui de Cambrai, 12th-century French poet. He interpolated in the Alexander cycle an independent romance (1172?). He also wrote a free rendering of the hagiographical Barlaam and Josaphat (1194?).

Vengement Alixandre, ed. Bateman Edwards (1928); Barlaam et Josaphat, ed. C. Appel (1907).

E. Armstrong, Authorship of the Vengement Alixandre (1926); J. Sonet, Roman de Barlaam et Josaphat, I (1949).
M.F.L.

Guidi, Alessandro (*Pavia 14 VI 1650; †Frascati 13 VI 1712), Italian lyric poet. One of the founders of the Accademia dell'Arcadia in Rome, he was deemed by his contemporaries equal to Pindar. His pomposity and smoothness cannot, however, hide the scanty inspiration or the lack of real feeling. Guidi adopted in his canzoni a verse free from a fixed rhyme scheme—a device which Leopardi appropriated later.

Amalasunta in Italia (a melodrama, 1681); Rime (1681); Endimione (a pastoral drama, 1692).—Poesie (1780).

G. Capsoni, A. G. (1896); T. L. Rizzo, A. G. (1928).
U.L.

Guidiccioni, Giovanni (*Lucca 25 II 1500; †Macerata 26 VII 1541), Italian poet. A diplomat in papal service, his Lettere di Negozi afford valuable insight into contemporary politics; but he is chiefly remembered for 14 sonnets on Rome past and present.

Opere di Monsignor G. G., ed. C. Minutoli (2 vols, 1867); Rime, ed. E. Chiorboli (1912).

M. A. Benincasa, G. G., scrittore e diplomatico (1895); E. Chiorboli, G. G. (1907).
P.McN.

Guido da Pisa, 14th-century Italian narrative writer. A Carmelite who admired Dante as the 'great doctor through whom our poetry lives', he composed a valuable Latin commentary and one of the earliest epitomes of the Inferno in terza rima. To instruct people anxious for knowledge but 'hindered through lack of study' he wrote the Fiore d'Italia, a popular historico-mythological manual expounding the story of the Roman people. Two of the five parts only have survived, the Fiore di Mitologia and the Fatti d'Enea.

Il Fiore d'Italia, ed. Muzzi (1824); I Fatti d'Enea, ed. Foffani (1900).

E. C. Parodi, 'I rifacimenti . . . dell'Eneide', in Studi di filol. romanza, II (1887); N. Sapegno, Il Trecento (1945; biblio.).
M.W.

Gui d'Ussel: see Eble d'Ussel.

Guigo I (*St Romain 1083 or 1084; †Grande-Chartreuse 22 VI 1136), prior of the Grande-Chartreuse at age of 27; compiled the Customs of the monastery (c. 1127) and a life of St Hugh of Grenoble (Migne, Patr. Lat. 153). His Meditationes (ed. A. Wilmart, 1936) reveal his own inner life and are unique in medieval literature.

A. Wilmart, 'Les écrits spirituels des deux Guiges', in Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen âge latin (1932) and 'La chronique des premiers Chartreux', in Rev. Mabillon (1936); E. Gilson, 'Présentation de Guige I, le Chartreux', in La Vie Spirituelle (1934); F. J. E. Raby, 'Guigo I, To Himself', in Laudate (1937). F.J.E.R.

Guilhade, JOÃO GARCIA DE (fl. 1250), Portuguese poet. One of the most original of those whose poems have been preserved in the three great collections of early Galician-Portuguese lyrics (see CANCIONEIROS). He is particularly noted for his excellent cantigas de amigo.

As cantigas de D. Joan Garcia de Guilhade, trovador do século XIII, ed. O. Nobiling (Erlangen, 1907). T.P.W.

Guilhem IX, duke of Aquitaine, count of Poitou (1071–1126), the earliest known Provençal troubadour. This ruler, who in power and renown outshone the king of France, is one of the strangest figures in European literature. His early, recklessly wild career culminated in a disastrous crusade to the Holy Land. The establishment in his own territories of the Order of Fontevrault, a mystic-ascetic movement which the entire nobility hastened to join, provoked an inner crisis in Guilhem and decisively influenced his poetry. The earlier of his 11 extant poems offer a cynical treatment of crudely sensual love; sensualism is not entirely absent in the later poems, but the poet's conception of woman and love is spiritualized and intensified in a manner which was to influence profoundly the development of European love-poetry. For metrical and melodic patterns Guilhem is indebted to the hymns and sequences; the influence of Arabic love-poetry is possible.

A. Jeanroy, Les poésies de Guillaume IX, duc d'Aquitaine (1913, 1927); H. Brinkmann, Entstehungsgeschichte des Minnesangs (1926); K. Vossler, 'Die Kunst des ältesten Trobadors', in Miscellanea Attilio Hortis (1910); D. Scheludko, 'Beiträge zur Entstehungsgeschichte des Minnesangs', in Archivum Romanicum, 11–12 (1927–28), in Neuphilol. Mitt. (1934), 'Religiöse Elemente im weltlichen Liebeslied der Troubadours', ibid. (1936); A. Pillet, Zum Ursprung der altprovenzalischen Lyrik (1928); P. Rajna, 'Guglielmo, conte di Poitiers, trovatore bifronte', in Mélanges A. Jeanroy (1928); H. Spanke, 'Zur Formenkunst des ältesten Troubadours', in Studi medievali, N.S. 7 (1934); K. Axhausen, Die Theorien über den Ursprung der provenzalischen Lyrik (1937); M. Casella, 'Il più antico trovatore', in Arch. stor. it., 2 (1938); R. R. Bezzola, 'Guillaume IX et les origines de l'amour courtois', in Romania, 66 (1940); T. Spoerri, 'Wilhelm von Poitiers und die Anfänge der abendländischen Poesie', in Trivium, 2 (1944). R.R.B.

Guilhem Adémar (c. 1165–1217), Provençal troubadour. Born of a noble but impoverished family of the Gévaudan he had to abandon knighthood for minstrelsy. He was active as court poet in Albi, Narbonne and in Spain, but later entered the order of Grandmont. His cansos, a partimen with Eble d'Ussel and a sirventes directed against woman show him generally in the role of languishing lover. His complaints are somewhat monotonous, but show some originality, particularly in the opening stanzas.

K. Almqvist, Poésies du troubadour G. A. (1951). R.R.B.

Guilhem de Berguedan, VICOMTE (fl. c. 1170–1200), Provençal troubadour. This bellicose Catalan noble was deprived of his fief for murdering his powerful opponent, Folc de Cardona; he achieved dangerous notoriety as a heart-breaker. Evidence of his numerous escapades in love and war is to be found in his 4 cansos, a planh, a partimen (with Aimeric de Peguilhan) and 20 highly original and witty sirventes.

A. Keller, Lieder von G. de B. (1849); Milà y Fontanals, De los trovadores en España (1889); Massò Torrents, Repertori de l'antiga literatura catalana, La Poesia, I (1932). R.R.B.

Guilhem de Cabestanh (fl. end of the 12th century), Provençal troubadour, noble of Roussillon. The medieval biographer relates, following a popular narrative pattern, that the lord of Castel-Roussillon, the jealous husband of the poet's adored Seremonde, had him killed and set as a dish before her (cf. CHASTELAIN DE COUCI; q.v.). She cast herself from the battlements; the knights of the district led by the king of Aragon slew the monstrous husband. Seven love-songs are preserved; they show spontaneous, sensuous feeling, firmness and clarity of melodic line and diction, and intricate rhyme patterns.

A. Langfors, Les chansons de G. de C. (1914, 1924). R.R.B.

Guilhem Figueira (c. 1215–50), Provençal troubadour. Of humble birth, he served in his native town as jongleur to Raymond V, count of Toulouse. The Albigensian wars drove him to Italy, possibly to the court of Frederick II. His sirventes and coblas are virile, in some cases extremely outspoken, political songs on behalf of the anti-papal Italian rulers.

P. Rajna, 'Un serventese contro Roma', in Giorn. di filologia rom., I (1878); E. Levy, G. F., ein provenzalischer Troubadour (1880); O. Schultz-Gora, Ein Sirventes von G. F. gegen Friedrich II (1902); V. De Bartholomaeis, Poesie provenzali storiche relative all'Italia (1931). R.R.B.

Guilhem Montanhagol (fl. c. 1233–58), Provençal troubadour, of Toulouse, possibly of noble birth. He wrote mainly in praise of Josserand de Lunel. His spiritualized conception of love reminds one of the Italian poets of the dolce stil nuovo. Extant are 6 cansos d'amor, 17 sirventes of moralizing or political content and a partimen with Sordel. R.R.B.

Guillaume de Deguilleville (*Digulleville (Manche) ? c. 1295; †Chaalis after 1358), French poet. A monk and then prior in the Cistercian house at Chaalis (Oise), he wrote three allegorical works using the pilgrimage theme, the first of which was widely popular in medieval times and may, at a long remove, have influenced Bunyan. A moralizing and didactic poem, representing the vicissitudes of moral experience under the symbolism of a journey, its use of allegorical personifications is arid and forbidding. (See MORALITY PLAYS.)

Pèlerinage de la vie humaine [or du corps] (1330–33: revised and expanded after 1355; a third (intermediate?) version is known, for which see M. Lofthouse, unpub. M.A. thesis, Manchester 1929); Pèlerinage de l'âme (1355); Pèlerinage de Jésus-Christ (1358); all three works (P. de l' âme in first recension only), ed. J. J. Stürzinger (1893–97); Le Roman de la fleur du lis (1338), ed. A. Piaget, Romania, 62 (1936; an allegorical poem extolling religious kingship and the French monarchy under St Louis). F.W.

Guillaume de Ferrières (first mention 1202 ?), described in the MSS by the title of Vidame de Chartres, French lyric poet. He participated in the fourth crusade, but deserted at Zara under the pretext of going to Syria. He is probably identical with Guillaume de Chartres, grand master of the Templars in 1217 (†Damietta 1219). His 8 extant chansons d'amour treat the theme of the disconsolate lover and the unresponsive lady with unrelieved gravity. A poet of considerable technical merit, his best chanson (Combien que j'aie demoree) effectively combines the theme of separation from his lady with the nostalgia of a crusader 'in an accursed land'.

Ed. J. Brakelmann, in Les plus anciens chansonniers français; P. Paris, in Hist. litt. de la France, 23 (1856); ed. with study, J. A. Noonan (typescript, Bodleian, Oxford, 1934). F.W.

Guillaume de Lorris (*Lorris (Loiret) ?, fl. c. 1235), French poet, author of the first 4,058 lines of the Roman de la Rose (q.v.). The most influential Old French work of literature, Guillaume's Rose is the account of a courtly wooing cast in allegorical and pseudo-autobiographical form. The personified abstractions in the poem represent for the most part influences that favour or impede the hero's love-suit, e.g. Bel Accueil (the lady's graciousness), Dangier (her grudging and churlish attitude), Malebouche (slanderous reports spread by enemies), Jalousie (the lady's husband). The work is also to some extent an Art of Love in an allegorical setting. Modelled in some ways on the cosmic religious allegories of medieval Latin (e.g. the Anticlaudianus of Alanus de Insulis), the poem is rendered attractive by its elaborate, stylized and idyllic description of the Garden of Mirth, strongly influenced by similar descriptions in the 13th-century Latin Altercatio Phyllidis et Florae and its vernacular imitations. The poem was continued by Jean de Meung. The first secular allegory of the middle ages, it set the pattern for innumerable later didactic works, all of which adopted the same elaborate machinery. F.W.

Guillaume le Breton (fl. 1225), chaplain to Philip Augustus, author of an epic, the Philippeis, in praise of the king. It is an important historical source.

A. Duchesne, Hist. Francorum Script., 5; extracts in Mon. Ger. Hist., Script., 26. F.J.E.R.

Guillaume le Clerc (fl. c. 1200), French poet, author of Fergus, an Arthurian romance in the style of Chrétien de Troyes. The names of the hero and of his peasant father (Soumillois) are those of historical Scottish personages: Somerled of the Isles (†1164) and his relation Fergus of Galloway (†1161). Scottish place-names are freely mentioned. The poet, a continental Frenchman, may have known Scotland and was perhaps writing for Alan of Galloway (†1234).

Fergus, ed. E. Martin (1872). F.W.

Guillaume le Clerc, 13th-century French poet. A Norman, he wrote pious and edifying works, including a bestiary (*Le Bestiaire divin, between 1208 and 1214; ed. R. Reinsch, 1890) and Le Besant Dieu (after 1226; ed. E. Martin, 1869), a long disquisition on the sins of society.

Ch-V. Langlois, La Vie en France au moyen-âge (1908); M. F. Mann, 'Der Bestiaire Divin des G. le Clerc', in Franz. Studien, VI (1888; useful for French bestiaries in general). F.W.

Guillaume le Vinier (†Arras 1245), French lyric poet. A married clerk, brother to Gilles le Vinier, he was a poet of considerable talent, with a large output (32 poems of certain attribution), who handled a variety of metres and forms with ease and grace. Besides chansons d'amour he wrote a number of pastourelles (precisely located in the neighbourhood of Arras and Douai), two serventois (religious lyrics) and several jeux-partis. His work is in the idealistic vein, developing the theme of the constant lover who asks for no requital, but is bright and idyllic in tone and marked by ingenious similes of a concrete and even homely type.

Ed. of nine poems by E. Ulrix in Mélanges Wilmotte (1910); P. Paris, Hist. litt. de la France, 23 (1856). F.W.

Guillén de Segovia, PERO (*Seville 1413; †1474?), Spanish poet. His private life was unfortunate; his patrons were Álvaro de Luna and an unlucky bishop. He composed a rhyming dictionary and produced some good metrical versions of the seven penitential psalms.

Cancionero general, I, ed. J. A. de Balenchana (1882).
O. J. Tallgren, Estudios sobre la Gaya de Segovia (Helsinki, 1907). E.M.W.

Guilpin, EDWARD, English verse satirist, who was apparently entered at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1 VI 1588) and Gray's Inn (29 IV 1591). A friend of John Marston, Guilpin replied to the attacks of Weever's Whipping of the Satyre (1601).

Skialetheia (1598), ed. G. B. Harrison, Shakes. Assoc. Facs. (1931); The Whipper of the Satyre his Pennance (1601), ed. A. Davenport (1951). B.L.J.

Guinizelli, GUIDO (*Bologna 1230/40; †Monselice? 1276), Italian poet. A lawyer and a learned man, he was exiled from Bologna as a Ghibelline and died in exile. His fame rests on a few splendid poems, or parts of poems, and on the magnificent tribute paid him by Dante (Purg., 26; De Vulg. Eloq.; Vita nuova, 20). Dante esteemed Guinizelli as a stylist, but still more as the 'saggio' who had discerned the true nature of love and expressed this discernment in the canzone, 'Al cor gentil ripara sempre amore'. This famous and beautiful poem—commonly but misleadingly termed the manifesto of the dolce stil novo (see STILNOVISMO)—derives in fact its force from a genuine intuition of the nobility ('gentilezza') of human love—of love as an interior perfection freed from its courtly associations with class and lineage: just the statement that the age was waiting for. Its strong influence on Dante—who called Guinizelli his 'father'—is especially evident in the Vita nuova and the Convivio. The rest of Guinizelli's verse is intermittently beautiful, with patches of involved obscurity; leaving as a whole the impression of a meditative and musical genius whom death removed before his art had reached maturity.

G. Zaccagnini, I rimatori bolognesi del secolo XIII (1933); L. Di Benedetto, Rimatori del dolce stil novo (1939); M. Casella, in Studi romanzi, 30 (1943; for the canzone 'Al cor gentil', text and commentary).
G. Zaccagnini, in Giorn. stor. della lett. ital., 70; and in Studi Danteschi (1921); E. G. Parodi, in Storia e poesia nella Divina Commedia (1921); G. Bertoni, Il Duecento (2nd ed. 1930). K.F.

Guiot de Dijon (fl. c. 1220), French lyric poet. One crusading lyric and five courtly chansons are attributed to him with certainty, ten or eleven others may be his. He seems to have been closely associated with another poet from the Dijonnais (perhaps a relation) called Jocelin, three of whose chansons are extant.

E. Nissen, Les chansons attribuées à G. de D. et Jocelin (1929). F.W.

Guiot de Provins (fl. 12th–13th century), French poet. In youth, he had many illustrious patrons, and five courtly love poems survive. After a visit to the court of Frederick Barbarossa (1184) he travelled in Palestine. Later, becoming a Cluniac monk, he wrote his Bible (c. 1206), an individual, vigorous satire of contemporary life, secular and religious.

Lyrical works, ed. A. Baudler (1902); Complete Works, ed. J. Orr (1915). M.F.L.

Guiraut de Bornelh, or Borneil (*Excideuil c. 1165; †1220), Provençal troubadour, one of the most famous of the Limousin-Périgord poets. Though of humble birth he was highly esteemed for his intellectual gifts and his mastery of poetic form. At first he was an adherent of trobar ric (a sophisticated style combining rich rhymes and ingenious metrical patterns); later he showed a definite preference for simple, lucid poetry. He lacks the spontaneity of Bernart de Ventadorn, but the charm of his 50 extant songs is undeniable. The dignified, courtly restraint of his poetry (moral sirventes, two crusader songs and an alba are preserved) earned him the admiration of Dante.

A. Kolsen, G. de B., der Meister der Trobadors (1894), Sämtliche Lieder des Trobadors G. de Bornelh (2 vols, 1910, 1935); H. J. Chaytor, The troubadors of Dante (1902); A. Pätzold, Die individuellen Eigentümlichkeiten einiger hervorragender Trobadors (1897). R.R.B.

Guiraut Riquier (c. 1254–92), Provençal troubadour, of modest parentage; from Narbonne. He sought in vain—first in Narbonne, then in Castile at the court of Alfonso X, in Rodez, elsewhere, finally again in his native city—a protector able to appreciate his courtly cansos d'amor, his charming pastorelas, his albas, epistles, rotrouenges and tensons. Courtly poetry had had its day; from 1285 he addressed his love songs to the Virgin. Throughout his very numerous poems he shows himself a master of style and a reflective, rather than a lyrical and inspired poet; his spiritualized conception of love is in the end religious mysticism in a courtly idiom.

C. Chabaneau, 'Cinq tensons de G. R.', in Revue des langues romanes, 32 (1888); Lowinsky, 'Zum geistlichen Kunstlied in der altprovenzal. Literatur', in Zeitschr. f. franz. Sprache u. Lit., 20 (1898); J. Anglade, Le troubadour G. R. (1905) and 'Notes sur les derniers troubadours à la cour des comtes de Rodez', in Annales du Midi, 23 (1911). R.R.B.

Guittone d'Arezzo (*nr Arezzo 1225/6; †Florence ? 1294), Italian poet. Of Aretine bourgeois stock, Guittone in his youth cultivated love-poetry, imitating the Provençal troubadours and becoming the chief representative of this tradition in Italy after the decline of the Sicilian School (q.v.). In his 30s a religious conversion, followed by his entering the Bolognese order of the Cavalieri di S. Maria (called the frati gaudenti), changed the content, if not altogether the style, of his writing; it became henceforth entirely religious and morally didactic. Besides a great deal of verse Guittone wrote prose epistles, of which 32 have survived, highly studied in manner and fervently moral in theme. The best known of these, a passionate rebuke of Guelf Florence for the disorders which had led to its defeat by the Ghibellines at Montaperti, accompanies Guittone's famous canzone on the same subject—the most notable political poem in Italian before Dante. Guittone was indeed in his day an outstanding and influential personality, combining the functions of poet and moralist in a way that compels us to regard him as a precursor of Dante, despite the latter's persistent disparagement of his local and 'plebeian' style and diction (cf. De Vulg. Eloq.; Purg., 24 and 26). Certainly the vigour of Guittone's best verse is offset by much laborious word-play, especially in the earlier erotic poems, and by a general uncouthness and prolixity. Strong in reasoning and genuine in moral feeling, he lacked imagination and the sense of art. With the rise of the dolce stil novo his work inevitably fell into disrepute.

Le Rime de G. d'A., ed. F. Egidi (1940); E. Monaci, Crestomazia ital. dei primi secoli (1912); prose letters ed. F. Meriano (1923).

A. Pelizzari, Vita e opere di G. d'A. (1907); F. Torraca, Studi di storia letteraria (1923); A. Schiaffini, Tradizione e poesia nella prosa d'arte ital. etc. (1943). K.F.

Günderode, KAROLINE VON (*Karlsruhe 11 II 1780; †Winkel am Rhein 26 VII 1806), German poet, who published her romantic verse under the name Tian. A friend of Bettina von Arnim's, she lived as an evangelical canoness at Frankfurt-am-Main and committed suicide for love of the scholar, Friedrich Creuzer.

Gedichte und Phantasien (1804); Poetische Fragmente (1805).—Gesammelte Dichtungen, ed. F. Götz (1857), E. Salomon (1923).

K. Preisendanz, Die Liebe der G., F. Creuzers Briefe an sie (1912); Bettina v. Arnim, Die G. (1840; Correspondence of Fräulein G. and B. von Arnim, with some of G.'s poems, tr. M. Fuller and M. Wesselhoeft, 1861).

G. Bianquis, Caroline de Günderode (Paris, 1910); R. Wilhelm, K. v. G. (1938). H.A.P.

Gundulić, IVAN (DŽIVO), Ital. GIOVANNI GONDOLA (*Ragusa 8 I 1589; ∞1628 Nika Sorkočevićeva; †ibid. 1638), Dalmatian poet of a distinguished family. He received an excellent classical education and occupied numerous important posts in the republic. Later, the religious side of his nature seems to have deepened; his Pjesni pokorne kralja Davida ('The Penitential Song of King David', 1621) is a paraphrase in verse of a psalm, whilst his Suze sina razmetnoga ('Tears of the Prodigal Son', 1622), based on the parable, has the accent of personal experience. He was deeply influenced by Tasso and other Italian poets, and some of his few extant plays are little more than adaptations of their work. His Dubravka (1626) shows greater originality and lyrical feeling. Around the conventional pastoral story of the estrangement and eventual reunion of a beautiful shepherdess and her lover, he sings a moving hymn to freedom and human rights, as exemplified in the just government of the Ragusan republic. His Osman (1626), an epic in 20 cantos (of which the fourteenth and fifteenth do not survive), glorifies the Polish victories over the Turks in 1621 as the prelude to the triumph of Christianity over the powers of darkness. Osman remains a masterpiece by virtue of its noble philosophical spirit, the artistry of its style and the skilfully devised interest of its varying episodes.

VERSE: Ljubovnik sramežljiv (1619?).—PLAYS: Prozerpina ugrabljena; Diana; Armida; Ariadne (1633).—Djela, ed. D. Körbler (1919), ed. V. Babukić (1947).

A. Jensen, G. und sein Osman (1900).

S.C.

Gunther (fl. 1180), author of two epic poems, the Ligurinus, celebrating Frederick Barbarossa, and the Solimarius, on the crusades. He was tutor to Conrad, Frederick's son.

Ligurinus, ed. C.-G. Dumgé (1812); Solimarius, ed. (part) W. Wattenbach, in Archives de l'Orient Latin, I.

J. Sturm, Der Ligurinus (1911); A. Pannenborg, Der Verfasser des Ligurinus (1883).

F.J.E.R.

Günther, AGNES, née Breuning (*Stuttgart 21 VII 1863; ∞Professor R. Günther; †Marburg 16 II 1911), German novelist. Her strangely mystical novel, Die Heilige und ihr Narr (1913), is a combination of fairy tale and maiden's dream; it proved a best-seller and has retained its romantic appeal to female readers.

K. J. Friedrich, Die Heilige: Erinnerungen an A. G. (1915); R. Günther, Unter dem Schleier der Gisela: Aus A. G.s Leben und Schaffen (1936).

R.W.L.

Günther, JOHANN CHRISTIAN (*Striegau, Silesia 8 IV 1695; †Jena 15 III 1723), German poet. A student of medicine in Wittenberg, Günther gave himself up to dissipation and was disinherited by his father. He moved to Leipzig but did not alter his mode of life and died in poverty. Günther was a poet of real power whose talents were frustrated partly by his reckless life and partly by the absence of a live German tradition of poetry. His love poems unite passion and imagination.

Gedichte (1735).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. W. Krämer (1940).

O. Roquette, Leben und Dichten J. C. Günthers (1860); C. Wittig, J. C. G. (1909); A. Hoffman, C. G. (1932); H. W. Munzer, Günther's Poetry in the light of his personality (Diss. Pennsylvania, 1948).

H.B.G.

Gunthorpe, JOHN (†Wells 25 VI 1498), dean of Wells, diplomatist and humanist. He wrote orations modelled on the style of Cicero and works on rhetoric and dialectic.

R. Weiss, Humanism in England (1941).

S.J.L.

Guro, ELENA (†1913), Russian poet who died very young. Making use of the up-to-date poetic technique, she showed a rare sensitiveness and originality which became appreciated only after her death.

Sharmanka (1914); Nebesnye verblyuzhata (1924); Osenniy son (1924).

J.L.

Gustav III (*Stockholm 24 I 1746; †ibid. 29 III 1792), king of Sweden 1771–92. Gustav III gave his name to the Gustavian Era in Sweden, illustrious for its strongly Francophil culture, particularly at court. He was an ardent patron of the arts, and during his reign a number of the leading Swedish academies for literature and the arts were revived or founded. He himself wrote several patriotic plays, e.g. Gustaf Adolphs ädelmod (1783), in which he identifies himself with the hero in a romanticized view of Swedish history. He also wrote the synopsis of the patriotic opera Gustaf Vasa (1st perf. 1786), versified by Kellgren and set to music by Naumann.

Konung Gustaf III:s skrifter, ed. J. G. Oxenstierna (1806–12).

O. Levertin, Gustav III som dramatisk författare (1894); Kj. Kumlien, Den gustavianska tiden, in Sv. folkets historia, 5 (1942).

C.H.K.

Gutiérrez, JUAN MARÍA (*Buenos Aires 6 V 1809; †ibid. 26 II 1878), Argentinian poet and biographer. Though lacking in inspiration, he is one of the best Argentinian poets of his age from the point of view of formal perfection. His numerous biographies and other historical works are valuable.

Poesías (1869).

E.Sa.

Gutiérrez González, GREGORIO (*La Ceja 9 V 1826; †Medellín 6 VII 1872), Colombian poet, author of the best Spanish American narrative poem of the bucolic genre, 'Memoria sobre el cultivo del maíz', written in the Virgilian manner.

Poesías (N.Y., 1867); 'Memoria sobre el cultivo del maíz', repub. in Colección Samper Ortega, 84 (Bogotá, 1937).

E.Sa.

Gutiérrez Nájera, Manuel (*Mexico City 22 XII 1859; †ibid. 3 II 1895), Mexican poet and prose-writer. Greatly influenced by the more delicate of the French romantics, especially Musset, and also by Verlaine, this precursor of modernismo (q.v.) is one of the clearest examples of the mingling of French and Spanish styles. His versification is more subtle and pleasing than poetry in Spanish had known for perhaps as much as a century. Some of his topics are 'realist' and witty, in others he may be recognized as a symboliste.

Verse: Poesías (with study by J. Sierra, 1896; several later eds in Paris).—Prose: Cuentos frágiles (1883); Obras (1898–1903).
E.Sa.

Gutteling, Henricus Zacharias Alexander (*Bondowosso, Indonesia 3 IX 1884; †Driebergen 12 XI 1910), Dutch poet. His remarkable talent had barely time to develop fully. He wrote two volumes of verse and a long poem about Shelley and translated Milton's Paradise Lost. His poetry partly appeared in De Beweging.

Een jeugd van Liefde (1906); Doorgloeide Wolken (1911; with intro. by A. Verwey); Shelley: Prometheus Ontboeid (1910).
A. Verwey, 'A. G.', in Proza, IV.
G.H.'sG.

Gutzkow, Karl Ferdinand (*Berlin 17 III 1811; ∞1835 Amalie Klonne, ∞1849 ?; †Sachsenhausen 16 XI 1878), German journalist, playwright and novelist. Of poor parentage, clever and ambitious, Gutzkow was bent upon academic success, till the shock of the 1830 revolution transformed him into a sounding-board, and before long a leader, of progressive thought. Menzel's condemnation of his novel Wally (1835) as blasphemous led to a prison-sentence and to the suppression of his works, both present and future, and those of other Young Germans. Nevertheless as editor of the 'Telegraph' he wielded great influence and embodied his ideas in competent plays and in several prodigious novels. In these, ideas so far outran execution—and this epitomizes the man and his work—that it is not the novels themselves, but his creative theory of the modern novel, as a picture of society interacting and ramifying in breadth, that is his valuable contribution to the writing of his time.

Novels: Maha-Gura (2 vols, 1833); Wally die Zweiflerin (1835); Blasedow und seine Söhne (3 vols, 1838); Die Ritter vom Geiste (9 vols, 1850 ff.); Der Zauberer von Rom (9 vols, 1858–61); Hohenschwangau (5 vols, 1867); Die Söhne Pestalozzi (3 vols, 1870); Novellen (2 vols, 1834).—Plays: Nero (1835); König Saul (1839); Zopf und Schwert (1844; Sword and Queue, tr. G. I. Colbron, 1915); Das Urbild des Tartuffe (1847); Uriel Acosta (1847; tr. H. Spicer, 1885); Dramatische Werke (20 vols, 1873–75).—Miscellaneous: Forum der Journalliteratur, antikritische Quartalschrift (1831); Soireen (2 vols, 1835); Zur Philosophie der Geschichte (1836); Beiträge zur Geschichte der neuesten Literatur (2 vols, 1836); Ludwig Börne (1840); Briefe aus Paris (2 vols, 1842); Vermischte Schriften (4 vols, 1842–50); Gesammelte Werke, ed. H. H. Houben (12 vols, 1908).
J. Proelss, K. G. (1879); J. Dresch, G. et la jeune Allemagne (1904); O. P. Schinnerer, Women in the Life and Work of G. (1924).
H.A.P.

Guy de Bazoches (*before 1146; †1203), became canon and cantor of Châlons. He went on the second crusade. His letters and poems give a picture of the easy life of a cultured member of the secular clergy.

W. Wattenbach, 'Die Briefe des Canonicus Guido von Bazoches', in Berlin. Sitzungsber. (1890), 'Aus den Briefen des G. v. B.', in Neues Archiv, 16 (1891), 'Die Apologie des G. v. B.', in Berlin. Sitzungsber. (1893); Anal. Hymn., 50.
F.J.E.R.

Gvadányi, József, Count (*Rudabánya 16 X 1725; ∞1752 Baroness Franciska Hereczky; †Szakolca 21 XII 1801), Hungarian poet. A staunch conservative, Gvadányi satirized political and civil life in light and epic verse, of which the most important is his Falusi Notáriusnak Budai Utazása (1790).

Verse: A pöstyéni förödés (1787); Rontó Pál (1793).—Various: A világnak közönséges históriája ('The Common History of the World'; 9 vols, 1796–1811; G. wrote 1–6).
Gvadányi-album, ed. D. Kovács (1887); L. Négyesy, Gróf G. J. és Fazekas Mihály (1904).
G.F.C.

Gyllembourg(-Ehrensvärd), Thomasine Christine, née Buntzen (*Copenhagen 9 XI 1773; ∞1790 Peter Andreas Heiberg, ∞1801 Baron Carl Frederik Gyllembourg(-Ehrensvärd); †ibid. 1 VI 1856), Danish short story writer. It was only after 1827 that she began to write the so-called 'Everyday Stories' with which her name is now associated. In an old-fashioned style she discussed several of the problems of her day, and her anonymity did not prevent her from receiving much acknowledgment and admiration.

Noveller, gamle og nye (2 vols, 1833–34); Nye Fortællinger (1835–36); To Noveller (1837); Een i Alle (1840); Nær og Fjern (1841);

Korsveien (1844); To Tidsaldre (1845).—Samlede Skrifter (12 vols, 1866–67).

B. Arnesen Kall, Fru G. og hendes Værker (1875); E. Hude, T. G. og Hverdagshistorierne (1951). E.B.

Gyllenborg, Carl, Count (*Stockholm 7 III 1679; †ibid. 9 XII 1746), Swedish statesman, pamphleteer and playwright. First dramatist of the Age of Freedom in Sweden. The most important of his slightly satirical comedies is Swenska sprätthöken (1740), modelled on de Boissy.

Samlade vitterhetsarbeten, ed. P. Hanselli (1863). C.H.K.

Gyllenborg, Gustaf Fredrik, Count (*Bankekind, Östergötland 25 XI 1731; †Stockholm III 1808), Swedish courtier and poet. Friend and colleague of G. P. Creutz and one of the poetic circle round Hedvig Charlotta Nordenflycht. Gyllenborg began by imitating classical satires, but soon expanded in both lyrical and didactic poetry; notable examples are the Thomsonian odes Vinter-Qväde and Vår-Qväde, written 1758. He excelled in his political meditations and satires on 18th-century party strife, though his latter-day work degenerated into smug and uninspired rhetoric, save for his attractive moral fables.

Vitterhetsarbeten af Creutz och Gyllenborg (1795); Mitt lefverne 1731–1775 (autobiog., pub. 1885).

G. Sahlberg, G. F. G. Hans liv och diktning under frihetstiden (1943). C.H.K.

Gyöngyösi, István (*Ungvár? 1629?; ∞before 1652 Ilona Baranyai, ∞1674 Judit Görgei; †Csetnek 24 VII 1704), Hungarian poet. Hungarian secular baroque verse reached its height in Gyöngyösi's lengthy Ovidian epics, of which Murányi Venusz (1664) is the best known. His technical skill and polished idiom distinguished him sharply from his contemporary, Zrínyi, and set new standards in Hungarian verse.

Rózsakoszorú (1690); Porábúl meg-éledett Phoenix (1693).—Gyöngyösi István összes költeményei, ed. Badics (1914–21).

J. Arany, G. I. (1863); J. Horváth, 'Barokk ízlés irodalmunkban', in Napkelet (1924); I. Waldapfel, G. tanulmányok (1932). G.F.C.

Gyulai, Pál (*Kolozsvár I 1826; ∞1858 Mária Szendrey; †Budapest 9 XI 1909), Hungarian critic, short-story writer and poet. The greatest Hungarian critic of the century, Gyulai maintained a high classical standard throughout his long life. As editor of the Budapesti Szemle he exercised great influence on contemporary literature. His poetic and other prose works are of lesser importance.

Petőfi Sándor és lirai költészetünk (1854); Vörösmarty életrajza (1866).—Kritikai dolgozatok, 1854–1861 (1908).

F. Riedl, 'G. P.', in Budapesti Szemle (1910); F. Papp, G. P. (2 vols, 1935–41). G.F.C.

Haafner (Haffner), Jacob Godfried (*Halle 1755; ∞1808 Anna M. Kreunink; †Amsterdam 3 IX 1809), Dutch writer (of German origin) of good travel books in oriental style based on first-hand experience.

Mijn lotgevallen op een reis van Madraz naar Ceilon (1806); Reize langs de kusten van Orixa en Coromandel (1808); Reize te voet door het eiland Ceilon (1810); Proeve van Indische dichtkunst (1823).—Gezamenlijke werken, ed. C. M. Haffner (4 vols, 1826–27).

J. Ph. Vogel, J. H. (1900). J.W.W.

Haar, Bernard ter (*Amsterdam 13 VI 1806; ∞1830 Johanna M. van Woudenberg, ∞1854 Helena E. Roering; †Velp 19 XI 1880), Dutch poet, prose writer and ecclesiastical historian whose epic poems were much admired in his time. Co-editor of De Gids (1843–46), he became professor of theology at Utrecht in 1854.

Poetry: Johannes en Theagenes (1838); Huibert en Klaartje (1843); De St Paulusrots (1846); Gedichten (3 vols, 1849–66).—Prose: De invloed van het Christendom op de Poëzy (1843); De Kerkhervorming (2 vols, 1844–45); De historiographie der kerkgeschiedenis (2 vols, 1870–73).

E. J. Potgieter, in Kritische Studiën, II (1876); N. Beets, in Levensber. Maatschappij Ned. Letterk. (1881, repr. in Sparsa, with incomplete biblio.); J. ten Brink, Geschied. Noord-Ned. letteren, 2 (1904, with biblio.). J.W.W.

Habington, Thomas (*Thorpe Manor, nr Chertsey 23 VIII 1560; ∞Mary Parker; †Hindlip 8 X 1647), English antiquary who turned Roman Catholic; involved in Babington's conspiracy (1586). In the Tower, 1586–92, he was confined to Worcestershire (1605) for sheltering conspirators of the Gunpowder Plot to which he was not party.

Translation: The Epistle of Gildas (1638).—Prose: The Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Worcester, etc., ed. R. Rawlinson (1717; 1723); A Survey of Worcestershire, ed. J. Amphlett (7 pts, 1893–99). B.L.J.

Habington, William (*Hindlip Hall 4 XI 1605; ∞II or III 1632/3 Lucy Herbert; †30 XII 1654), English poet and historian.

A Roman Catholic, Habington was a respected member of the court of Charles I. His love sonnets celebrate chastity and marriage as twin virtues, but his metaphysical elegies and sombre religious poems carry more conviction. His play, The Queene of Arragon (1640), anticipates heroic drama in its treatment of themes of love and honour. As an historian he interprets events and personalities morally and providentially.

Castara (1643); The Historie of Edward the Fourth (1641); Observations upon Historie (1641); The Poems of William Habington, ed. K. Allott (1948; with life).
A. Harbage, Cavalier Drama (1936).
W.A.A.

Hachimonjiya Jishō: see Andō Jishō.

Hacohen, Shalom (*Meseritz, Poland 1772; †Vienna 1845), Hebrew poet and dramatist. Though educated in the traditional way, he joined the enlightenment movement when he went to Germany. When his Hebrew-reading public in Germany dwindled he left in 1820 for the Austrian empire with its numerous Jewish communities.

Mataei Kedem Al Admath Zafon (verse); Amal VeTirza (verse play). Y.H.

Hadamar von Laber (fl. 1335–40), Bavarian noble, author of an allegory, based on a motif from Wolfram's Titurel (and in the Titurel stanza): a huntsman with his hounds Joy, Loyalty etc. runs Love to earth. Astonishingly popular and often imitated.

Hs. v. L. 'Jagd', ed. K. Stejskal (1880).
E. E. Hese, Die Jagd etc. (1936). F.P.P.

Haddon, Walter (*1516; ∞Margaret Clere, ∞Anne Sutton; †London 21 I 1571/2), Cambridge latinist and civilian. He was a member of Cheke's circle and an ardent supporter of the Reformation.

Lucubrationes (1567); Poemata (1567); Reformatio legum ecclesiasticarum (1571, with Cheke). S.J.L.

Hadewijch, mid-13th-century Dutch mystic, who lived in Brabant (perhaps nr Nijvel). She wrote 45 spiritual love poems in the style of Provençal courtly lyricism, 16 miscellaneous poems and, in prose, 14 visions and a number of letters. Hadewijch is an early representative of western European mysticism, which developed in the 12th century. Influenced herself by northern France (mainly St Bernard), she in her turn influenced the next generations; in Germany she became well known as Adelwip. In Dutch medieval literature her original and sublime talent reaches a height which has never been equalled.

Ed. J. v. Mierlo, in Leuvensche Studiën en Tekstuitgaven, IV, V, VIII, X, XI (1908–25), the strophic poems also in 2 vols (1942), the letters (1948).—Modern Dutch versions of the visions, ed. Albert Verwey (1922); the letters, ed. M. H. v. d. Zeyde together with the original text and commentary (1936); anthologies by J. Snellen (1933) and J. v. Mierlo (1950).
M. H. v. d. Zeyde, H., een studie over de mens en de schrijfster (1934); S. Axters, Gesch. v. d. vroomheid i. d. Nederlanden, I (1950).—Imaginative portraits of H. in poetry are: A. Verwey, 'De konflikten van H.', and 'De liederen van H.', in Oorspronkelijk Dichtwerk, II, and P. N. van Eyck, 'Hadewijch', in Meesters (1945). J.J.M.

Hadlaub, Johannes (fl. c. 1300), Zürich citizen and author of 54 poems preserved in the illustrated 'Manesse' (now Heidelberg C) manuscript: one, on the activities of Rüdeger Manesse (Zürich councillor) and his son as collectors of 'song-books', is of outstanding historical importance. His Minnelieder and their tale of 'Minnedienst' are (pace Gottfried Keller) somewhat lame and 'romantic'. Poems on the trials of family life and his 'harvest songs' are the antithesis of Minnesang.

L. Ettmüller, J. H.s Gedichte (1840); Dt. Liederd., ed. K. Bartsch–W. Golther (1928).—Gottfried Keller's Hadlaub, in the Züricher Novellen (1878). F.P.P.

Hadrian, Publius Aelius Hadrianus (*Italica, Spain A.D. 76; †Rome 138), Roman emperor 117–38; patron of literature and learning. A few mediocre pieces of his own composition are extant.

J. W. and A. M. Duff, Minor Latin Poets (Loeb Libr. 1934). A.J.D.

Haecht, Willem van (c.* 1530; †after 1585), Dutch poet in the Rederijker tradition (Motto: 'Behaecht Godts wille'). Factor of the Chamber 'De Violieren' at Antwerp in 1558, he fled in 1585 to an unknown destination. He wrote 3 apostle plays, bearing witness to his mild Lutheran standpoint and his susceptibility to classical antiquity as well as to everyday life; also a great number of shorter poems, a few dialogues, three 'lamentations' (a translation from Jeremiah) and adaptations of the Psalms which left their imprint on the Dutch Lutheran hymnbook.

C. G. N. de Vooys in Verz. Lett. Opstellen (1949); W. J. Kooiman, Luther's kerklied i.d. Nederlanden (1943); G. J. Steenbergen, in N. Taalgids, 42 (1949) and Jaarboek v.d .Fonteine (1950). J.J.M.

Hāfiz, SHAMS AL-DIN MUHAMMAD (*Shirāz 1320; †ibid. 1389), Persian poet. Hāfiz studied literature and religion in his native town and mastered the Arabic language. His first patron, Shāh Abū Ishāq-i Īnjū, whose twelve years of genial reign were enjoyed by the poet, was ousted in 1353 by the rigorous Mubāriz al-Dīn Muhammad-i Mozaffarī, who imposed a stern ascetic life on Fārs, to the annoyance of Hāfiz. Mubāriz al-Din was, however, deposed five years later by his son, Shāh Shujā', and Hāfiz found favour with him and some of the dignitaries of his court. By this time the poet's reputation had become widespread, and he received invitations from several neighbouring rulers. Hāfiz, however, declined them, preferring Shirāz, for which he shows a striking affection. His last patron was the Muzaffarid Shāh Mansūr (1387–92), who seems to have offered him a position at the court. Of the poet's domestic circumstances little is known. Reference can be found in his works to the untimely death of a son.

His Divan contains over 500 ghazals (short lyric poems), three long odes, quatrains and some other pieces. Hāfiz is the unequalled master of ghazal and the finest lyric poet Persia has ever produced. His penetrating vision of life, expressed in a mystical vein, together with his subtle satirical wit, however, raise him above a mere lyric poet. Subtlety of poetical thought, delicacy of expression and felicity of phrase in Persian poetry, all reached their culmination in the ghazals of Hāfiz. His mastery of ironical satire, directed mainly against the hypocrites, false spiritual leaders and pretentious sufis has hardly been equalled by any other Persian poet.

Hāfiz has exercised a far-reaching influence on later Persian, Indian and Turkish poets, and has found many commentators in these countries. He has inspired western literature, among others in Goethe's Weströstlicher Divan (1819). His Divan is the most popular book of poetry among the Persians and is treated as a kind of Sortes Virgilianae.

Divan-i Hafiz (Calcutta, 1791), ed. H. Brockhaus (Leipzig, 1854–63); ed. A. Khalkhali (Tehran, 1927); ed. M. Qazvini (Tehran, 1941); complete prose tr. H. Wilberforce Clarke (2 vols, Calcutta, 1891); see also G. Bell, Poems from the Divan of Hafiz (metrical tr., 2nd ed. 1928); C. K. Street, Hafiz in Quatrains (1946); A. J. Arberry, Fifty poems of Hafiz (1947).

G. Ouseley, Biographical Notices of Persian Poets (1846); E. Sachau and H. Ethé, Cat. of the Pers. MSS in the Bodleian Library (1889); H. Ethé, 'Neupersische Literatur', in Grun. der iran. Philol.; Q. Qani, Bahs dar Ahval u Asar-i Hafiz (2 vols, Tehran, 1942–43). E.Y.

Hafner, PHILIP (*Vienna 1731; †ibid. 1764), Austrian dramatist. A civil servant, then an actor, Hafner opposed extemporization in the theatre and was the creator of the Viennese 'Lokalstück'. His comedies portrayed or satirized the manners of the time in Vienna.

Megaera, die fürchterliche Hexe (pub. 1765); Die bürgerliche Dame (pub. 1771).—Gesammelte Schriften (3 vols, 1812); Gesammelte Werke (2 vols, 1914).

A. Schlosser, in Allgem. dtsche Biogr., 10 (1879); E. Alker, P. H., ein Altwiener Komödiendichter (1923). H.B.G.

Hagberg, CARL AUGUST (*Lund 7 VII 1810; †Lund 9 I 1864), Swedish scholar, primarily famous for his magnificent translation of Shakespeare, which is still the standard one in Sweden. In his own writing he strongly attacked Swedish neoromanticism.

A. Österling, C. A. H. (1922); N. Molin, Shakespeare och Sverige intill 1800-talets mitt (1931). C.H.K.

Hage, J. VAN DEN: see OLTMANS.

Hagedorn, FRIEDRICH VON (*Hamburg 23 IV 1708; †ibid. 28 X 1754), German poet. Of Danish-German parentage, Hagedorn was educated in Hamburg and at Jena university, and served then in London as secretary to the Danish minister (1729–31). On his return to Hamburg he became secretary to an English company. He wrote fables and imitated in German the poetry of Anacreon, expressing himself in verse with fluency and elegance at a time when these qualities were rare in his compatriots.

Versuch einiger Gedichte (1729); Versuch in poetischen Fabeln und Erzählungen (1738); Sammlung neuer Oden und Lieder (3 vols, 1742–52).—Poetische Werke (5 vols, 1800).

H. Schuster, F. v. H. und seine Bedeutung für die deutsche Literatur (1882); G. Witkowski, Die Vorläufer der anakreontischen Dichtung in Deutschland und F. v. H. (1889). H.B.G.

Hagthorpe, JOHN (fl. 1627; *Chester-le-Street? 1584/5?; ∞Judith Wye; †after 1630), English poet, apparently the sea-captain who took part in Buckingham's Cadiz expedition (1625). Hagthorpe's Meditations are uninspired except for a few lyrics.

Divine Meditations, and Elegies (1622), selections ed. E. Brydges (1817); Visiones Rerum (1623). B.L.J.

Hai Gaon, title of Hai ben Sherira (*Pumbeditha 939; †ibid. 29 III 1038), Iraqi Hebrew religious writer and poet, was last Gaon (head of talmudical schools) of Babylonia, one of the greatest among them. He wrote commentaries on the Bible and the Talmud, and many expositions of legal subjects (in Arabic); many of these were later translated into Hebrew. A very large number of his responsa (replies to legal questions) is preserved. He wrote a (lost) lexicon of the language of the Talmud, and secular and liturgical poems.

S. Philipp, Beth Habchirah, II (1889); H. Brody, Studies of the Research Inst. for Hebrew Poetry, III (1936); Moral Instruction (in verse; ed. and tr. H. Gollancz, 1922). C.R.

Hailes, Sir David Dalrymple, Lord (*Edinburgh 28 X 1726; †ibid. 29 XI 1792), Scottish historian. Called to the Scottish Bar in 1748; 1766 judge of the Court of Session. Through Boswell he became a correspondent and friend of Dr Johnson, who revised his Annals.

Discourse on the Gowrie Conspiracy (1757); Memorials relating to the Reigns of James I and Charles I (1762–66); Ancient Scottish Poems (from the Bannatyne MS., 1770); Annals of Scotland, 1057–1371 (1776–79). J.K.

Hájek z Libočan, Václav (*Prague 9 III 1553), Czech chronicler, whose 'Chronicle' (1541) was a highly romanticized and tendentious (Catholic) account of Czech history. It was held in high esteem until the Czech national revival, when its shortcomings were exposed by Dobrovský and Palacký.

Kronika česká, ed. V. Flajšhans (4 vols, 1918 ff.). R.A.

Hakluyt, Richard (*London? 1553?; †23 XI 1616), English historian of discovery. Hakluyt appears to have been early interested in geography and discovery, and, feeling that the contributions of English mariners were underrated, devoted his life to recording them. His Principal Navigations contains stirring accounts of the voyages of Hawkins, Frobisher, Drake etc., for which he is still a principal source. His work, which gave fresh impetus to discovery and colonization, was continued by Samuel Purchas. The Hakluyt Society (founded 1846) publishes the writings of early discoverers.

Divers Voyages, touching the Discovery of America (1582); The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffiques and Discoveries of the English Nation (12 vols, 1598–1600).

E. W. O'F. Lynam, R. H. and his successors (1946). J.B.B.

Hakuseki: see Arai Hakuseki.

Halbertsma, Eeltje (*Grouw 8 X 1797; †ibid. 22 III 1858), renovator of Frisian literature. Influenced by Hebel's Alemannic folk-literature, he and his brother Justus in 1822 brought out a miscellany of Frisian poetry and prose, De lapekoer fen Gabe Skroar ('The rag basket of Gabe the tailor'), which soon attained great popularity and was translated into Dutch and German. He sympathized with Klaus Groth's efforts to revive a Low German literature and translated into Frisian some poems from his Quickborn.

G. A. Wumkes, Bodders yn de fryske striid (1926). W.E.C.

Hale, Sir Matthew (*Alderley, Glos 1 XI 1609; ∞Anne Moore, ∞after 1664 Anne Bishop; †ibid. 25 XII 1676), English lawyer and judge under Cromwell and Charles II, renowned for his impartial integrity and immense industry; he was involved in controversy with Henry More.

A Letter of Advice to his Grand-children (written c. 1673, pub. 1812); Difficiles Nugae (1674); Observations touching the Principles of Natural Motions (1677); History of the common law of England (1713, etc.). B.L.J.

Hálek, Vítězslav (*Dolínek 5 IV 1835; †Prague 8 X 1874), Czech poet, novelist and dramatist. Hálek came to Prague as a student and spent the rest of his life there. Comfortable financial circumstances enabled him to devote himself wholly to literature. He was one of the leading contributors to the almanach Máj which in 1858 introduced a new phase of the 19th-century Czech literary movement. It was at this time that Hálek's long and fruitful association with J. Neruda began. His sudden death caused contemporaries to lament the loss of 'a Czech Pushkin and Mickiewicz' but later generations have considerably modified this judgment.

Hálek's poetic beginnings were in the field of the Byronic lyrical epic (Alfred, 1858), but his more lasting poetical achievement is contained in his lyrical poems ('Evening songs', 1858–59 and especially 'Nature poems' [V přírodě], 1872–74) with their romantic and melodious treatment of nature and love. His ably constructed tales of country life deal with the tragedies and social problems of marriage, parenthood and kinship (Muzikantská Liduška, 1861). Less successful are his historical tragedies in verse.

Spisy, ed. J. Vlček and A. Hartl (11 vols, 1905–20); Spisy, ed. K. Hikl (10 vols, 1924–25).—Three Stories by Viteslav Halek . . .

together with 28 lyrical pieces by the same author, tr. Sir W. W. Strickland . . . (1886; repr. as Halek's Stories and Evensongs, New York, 1930).

L. Čech, in Literatura česká devatenáctého století, ed. by J. Hanuš and others (1907); J. Mukařovský, in Slovo a slovesnost, I (1935). R.A.

Hales, John (*Bath 19 IV 1584; †Eton 19 V 1656), English divine and philosopher, a member of Falkland's circle who wrote good prose. Assisting in Savile's Chrysostom, he became a fellow at Eton (1613–49) and was chaplain to Carleton at the synod of Dort (1618–19), but suffered under the Commonwealth. B.L.J.

The Golden Remains (1659); Works, ed. D. Dalrymple (3 vols, 1765).

J. Tulloch, Rational Theology in England in the 17th century (1872). J.R.B.

Ha-Levi, Judah: see Judah ben Samuel.

Halévy, Ludovic (*Paris 1 VII 1834; †ibid. 8 V 1908), French dramatist and novelist, elected to the French Academy in 1884. Halévy collaborated with Henri Meilhac in writing comedies of contemporary life and libretti for the operettas of Offenbach. His best-known novel is L'Abbé Constantin (1882).

Plays: Fanny (1868); Froufrou (1869).—Libretti: La Belle Hélène (1864); Barbe-Bleue (1866); La Vie Parisienne (1866); La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein (1867).—Le Théâtre de Meilhac et H. (8 vols, 1900–02).

F. Gaiffe, Le Rire et la Scène française (1932). T.W.

Haliburton, Thomas Chandler (*Windsor, Nova Scotia 1796; ∞1816 Louisa Neville (†1840), ∞1856 Sarah Owen; †1865), Canadian author. He was called to the bar in 1820, becoming a member of the legislative assembly in 1826 and a judge in 1829. In 1856 he retired and moved to England, obtaining a degree at Oxford (1858). He wrote historical and political books, but is important chiefly as a humorist.

The Clockmaker, or The Sayings and Doings of Sam Slick of Slickville (1836); A Reply to the Report of the Earl of Durham (1840); The Attaché, or Sam Slick in England (1843); Sam Slick's Wise Saws (1853). M.H.M.M.

Hall, Anna Maria, née Fielding (*Dublin 6 I 1800; ∞20 IX 1824 Samuel Carter Hall; †East Moulsey 30 I 1881), Irish author. She wrote miscellaneous works, mainly didactic and descriptive, several dealing with the Irish scene.

Sketches of Irish Character (1829); Lights and Shadows of Irish Life (1838); The Whiteboy (1845); Midsummer Eve (1848). R.McH.

Hall, Edward (*Northall ?, Salop 1498–99 ?; †London 1547), English historian, educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge; M.P. for Bridgnorth. He expressed in practice the glorification of the Tudors which is found in his chronicle and reflected in Shakespeare.

The Union of Lancastre and York (1548), ed. Sir Henry Ellis (1809). B.L.J.

Hall, James (*Philadelphia 19 VIII 1793; ∞1823 Mary Posey, ∞1839 Mrs Mary Alexander; †Cincinnati 5 VII 1868), American journalist and editor of a literary periodical.

Legends of the West (1832); Tales of the Border (1835); The Wilderness and the War Path (1846).

J. T. Flanagan, J. H., Literary Pioneer of the Ohio Valley (1941). H.L.C.

Hall, John (*Durham VIII 1627; †London 1 VIII 1656), English poet and prose-writer, educated at Durham Grammar School and St. John's College, Cambridge, a friend of Hobbes, Henry More and other men of letters. Hall shared an interest in education with Hartlib. His verse shows lyric talent and great metrical skill. He produced the first English translation of Longinus.

Verse: Poems (1647; ed. G. Saintsbury, Minor Poets of the Caroline Period, II, 1906); Emblems (1648).—Essays: Horae Vacivae (1646); The Advancement of Learning (1649).—Translations: Dionysius Longinus on the Height of Eloquence (1652, in prose); Hierocles upon Pythagoras (1657, in verse; with account of H. by John Davies of Kidwelly). B.L.J.

Hall, Joseph (*Bristow Park, Ashby-de-la-Zouche 1 VII 1574; ∞Elizabeth Winniff, or Wenyeve; †Norwich 8 IX 1656), English divine, prose controversialist and poet, renowned for his preaching. He distinguished himself at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (Fellow, 1595), in disputation, and held a lectureship in rhetoric for two successive years. Ordained at Colchester (1600), he refused the headship of Blundell's School for Hawstead Rectory, accompanied Sir Edmund Bacon to the Netherlands (1605), Doncaster to France (1616), James I to Scotland (1617) and was James' representative at the synod of Dort (1618). Hall wrote Anglican apologetics (1618–28) and later against 'Smectymnuus' and Milton. Consecrated bishop of Exeter (1627), suspected by Laud and assailed by Parliament, Hall became bishop of Norwich (1641) but suffered imprisonment and a fine. From 1643 he lived in retirement at Higham, writing, ordaining and preaching. Hall's prose Characters earned him the title of 'English Seneca'. His verse satire is effective, expressing a sound literary ideal. His sermons are very readable, showing a reaction to moral issues reminiscent of Shakespeare's.

VERSE: Virgidemiarum (1st 3 bks: 1597; 1598; 1602; 2nd 3 bks: 1598; 1599); The Poems of J. H., ed. A. Davenport (1949).—PROSE: Characters of Vertues and Vices (1608 etc.); Solomon's Divine Arts (1609); Mundus Alter et Idem (1605?), tr. J. H(ealey) (1609?), ed. H. Brown (1937); Hard Measure (1647).—Works (1625–62), ed. P. Wynter (1863).

G. Lewis, A Life of J. H. (1886); S. M. Salyer, 'Renaissance influences on H.'s Mundus', in Philol. Quart., 6 (1927).

B.L.J.

Hall, MAURITS CORNELIS VAN, pseud. FRANK FLORISZOON VAN ARKEL (*Vianen 4 II 1768; ∞1790 Elizabeth Chr. Klinkhamer, ∞1814 Christina M. Klinkhamer; †Amsterdam 19 I 1858), Dutch classicist writer of poetry and prose on antiquity, later also of humorous works; member of parliament and president of the Amsterdam court.

PROSE: Gedenkschriften van en door F. F. v. A. (1832); Herinneringen 1787–1813, ed. Th. Jorissen (1867).—POETRY: Gedichten (4 vols, 1818–60); Dichterlijk geschenk aan mijne kinderen (1854).

C. H. B. Boot, Het leven en de letterk. verdiensten van M. C. v. H. (1858); E. Cohen, Mr M. C. v. H. als letterkundige (1928).

J.W.W.

Hall, SAMUEL CARTER (*Geneva Barracks, Waterford 9 V 1800; ∞20 IX 1824 Anna Maria Fielding; †London 16 III 1889), Irish editor; an industrious but not an original literary figure; he wrote many works in collaboration with his wife.

Reliques of Moore (1844); Memoir of Moore (1879). R.McH.

Hall, THOMAS (*Worcester c. 22 VII 1610; †King's Norton 13 VI 1665), English clergyman scholar, educated at King's School, Worcester, Balliol and Pembroke. He suffered as a Presbyterian.

PROSE: Wisdom's Conquest (1651); The Pulpit Guarded (3 edns, 1651); Vindicae Literarum, The Schools Guarded (1654).—SATIRE: Comarium ἀκρομεια (1654). B.L.J.

Hallaj, HUSAIN BEN MANSUR (*Tur (Fars) c. 858; †26 III 922), Moslem dialectician, ecstatic and mystic martyr. Grandson of a Persian fire-worshipper, he first lived in retirement with Moslem sufi teachers (873–97), then travelled as a preacher in Persia, Turkestan and India, visited Mecca and from 908 onwards lived at Baghdad, attracting many disciples. There followed persecution and imprisonment (913–21) at the hands of orthodox zealots ending in his trial and brutal execution.

His writings in which Moslem, Christian and gnostic images are boldly and consummately synthesized consist (exc. his Tawasin) of scattered prose and verse fragments. He saw the saint as God Incarnate and regarded suffering as the road to perfect union with the divine will. In spite of his neglect of the external practices of Islam he was canonized by popular devotion. His literary influence is greatly felt in Persian and Turkish mystical poetry although he wrote in Arabic.

Kitab al Tawasin, crit. ed. and tr. L. Massignon (1913); Akhbar al Hallaj, crit. ed. and tr. L. Massignon and P. Kraus (1936).

L. Massignon, La Passion d'al Hosayn-ibn-Mansour al Hallaj, martyr mystique de l'Islam (2 vols, 1922; brilliant classical study), Quatre textes inédits relatifs à la biographie d'al Hosayn b. M. al Hallaj (1914), Essai sur les origines du Lexique Technique de la Mystique Musulmane (1922, with appendix).

W.A.el K.

Hallam, HENRY (*Windsor 9 VII 1777; ∞1807 Julia Elton; †London 21 I 1859), English constitutional historian and man of letters, whose three main works, scrupulously honest in intention and based on profound and accurate scholarship, still hold their own.

View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages (1818); Constitutional History of England from the Accession of Henry VII to the Death of George II (1827); Introduction to the Literature of Europe during the 15th, 16th and 17th Centuries (1837–39).

F. A. M. Mignet, 'H.', in Éloges Historiques (1864). R.M.H.

Halleck, FITZ-GREENE (*Guilford, Conn. 8 VII 1790; †ibid. 19 XI 1867), American poet. His business and literary career took place in New York. He wrote a series of popular verse satires with J. R. Drake; his most famous poem was an elegy at Drake's death.

Poems, by Croaker . . . (1819); Alnwick Castle, with Other Poems (1827); Young America: A Poem (1865).—The Poetical Works of F.-G. H. (1847).

N. F. Adkins, F.-G. H.: An Early Knickerbocker Wit and Poet (1930). H.L.C.

Haller, ALBRECHT VON (*Berne 16 X 1708; †Berne 12 XII 1777), German poet. Of patrician descent Haller studied medicine at Tübingen and Leipzig, visited England and France and was appointed a professor at Göttingen in 1736. Above all a scientist, Haller became the German authority on anatomy in the 18th century and was also eminent as a botanist. His poem Die Alpen, written after a tour of the Alps in 1728, is a landmark in German descriptive poetry in its sympathetic approach to the simple peasant and to nature in its wilder aspects.

Versuch schweizerischer Gedichten (includes Die Alpen, 1732); Gedichte, ed. L. Hirzel (1882); Tagebuch (2 vols, 1787).

A. Frey, A. v. H. und seine Bedeutung für die deutsche Literatur; E. Schmidt, 'A. v. H.', in Charakteristiken, I (1886); F. Vetter, Der junge H. (1909); R. R. Beer, Der grosse H. (1947). H.B.G.

Hallgrímsson, Jónas (*Hraun in Öxnadalur 16 XI 1807; †Copenhagen 26 V 1845), Icelandic poet and novelist. Hallgrímsson came of a gifted family and was brought up in an atmosphere conducive to the development of his poetic gifts. He studied natural science in Copenhagen and came under the influence of German and Danish romanticism. He was a co-founder in 1835 of the periodical Fjölnir and later a pioneer in the study of the geology of Iceland.

As a poet he chiefly drew his inspiration from the scenery of his native region in north Iceland. He also wrote love poems, many of them coloured by his own disappointments in love, and, occasionally, satirical verse. Patriotism is also prominent in his work. Hallgrímsson was one of the main supports of the romantic movement in Iceland and, as his Grasaferð (1847) shows, one of the pioneers of modern prose fiction in the country. As a poet he can best be compared with Heine.

Ljóðmæli (1847); Ljóðmæli og önnur rit (1883); Ljóðmæli; Í óbundnu máli, ed. T. Guðmundsson (1945).—Rit, ed. M. Þórðarson (5 vols, 1929–36).

Þ. Gíslason, J. H. (1903); H. K. Laxness, Um H., in Alþýðubókin (1929). R.G.P.

Hallmann, Johann Christian (*Breslau 1647?; †ibid. 1704), German dramatist, a less talented follower of Lohenstein. He aspires to the same kind of courtly art but, following the change in taste, cultivates a form intermediate between drama and opera, under Italian influence.

Trauer-, Freuden- und Schäfferspiele (1672?, 2nd ed. 1684).

H. Steger, J. C. H. (Diss. Leipzig, 1909); E. G. Billmann, Hallmanns Dramen (Diss. Berlin, 1940); Erik Lunding, Das Schlesische Kunstdrama (Copenhagen, 1940); H. Schöffler, Deutscher Osten im deutschen Geist (1940). L.W.F.

Halm, Friedrich, pseud. of Eligius Franz Joseph Freiherr von Münch-Bellinghausen (*Cracow 2 IV 1806; †Vienna 22 V 1871), Austrian dramatist, who in his lifetime threw Grillparzer into the shade, both in official life and with the popularity of his striking, though meretricious, plays. Of far finer quality are his few 'Novellen', which were published posthumously and in their compelling drive show the influence of Kleist.

Gedichte (1850).—Plays: Griseldis (1835; tr. Sir R. A. Anstruther, 1840); Camoens (1838); Imelda Lambertazzi (1842); Der Sohn der Wildnis (1843; Son of the Wilderness, tr. W. H. Charlton, 1868); Wildfeuer (1864); Der Fechter von Ravenna (1854; The Gladiator of Ravenna, tr. W. H. Charlton, 1861); Vor hundert Jahren (1859).—Novellen: Die Marzipanliese (1904); Das Haus an der Veronabrücke (1904); Die Freundinnen (1906).—Werke (8 vols, 1857–64); Nachlass, ed. F. Pachler and E. Kuh (4 vols, 1872); Auswahl, ed. O. Rommel (4 vols, 1909–14); Briefwechsel mit Enk von der Burg, ed. R. Schachinger (1890).

H. Schneider, H. und das spanische Theater (1909). H.A.P.

Halmael, Hendrik van (*Emmerich 1654; ∞1679 Janneke Swartepaert; ▯Amsterdam 8 VI 1718), Dutch playwright in the manner of Bredero and Asselijn; mennonite and merchant.

Zedemeester en Kantoorknecht (1698); Schijnheilig Weeuwtje (1711); Bedrieger erfgenaam bedroogen (1714).

J. A. Worp, in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. Taal- en Letterk., 8 (1888). J.W.W.

al-Hamadhani (*969; †1007), Arabic writer, and the creator of the maqama (a short story in rhymed prose). Al-Hamadhani's hero, a witty, unscrupulous vagabond, journeys from place to place and supports himself by the presents which his impromptu displays of rhetoric, poetry and learning seldom fail to draw from an admiring audience. The second character is the rawi or narrator who, continually meeting with the other, relates his adventures.

The Maqamat of Badi' al-Zaman al-Hamadhani, tr. W. J. Prendergast (1913, 1917). S.M.S.

Hamann, Johann Georg (*Königsberg 27 VIII 1730; †Münster 21 VI 1788), German philosophical writer. A restless spirit, Hamann, after travels in Holland, England and Russia, spent most of his life in Königsberg in diverse employments, including customs inspector and newspaper editor, and ended as the guest of the pious princess Gallitzin. Deeply religious and acutely conscious of sin, Hamann passionately opposed the rationalism of his age, claiming that not reason but the human heart leads to truth. He expressed his views in an obscure, turgid, oracular style, which earned him the appellation 'Magus im Norden'. Hamann exercised considerable influence upon Herder and through him upon the 'Sturm und Drang'.

Sokratische Denkwürdigkeiten (1759); Kreuzzüge des Philologen (1762); Selbstgespräch eines Autors (1773); Golgatha und Scheblimini (1784).—Schriften (4 vols, 1872–74).

J. Minor, J. G. H. in seiner Bedeutung für die Sturm- und Drangperiode (1881); R. Unger, Hamanns Sprachtheorie im Zusammenhang seines Denkens (1905) and H. und die Aufklärung (1911); F. J. Schmitz, The Problem of Individualism and the Crises in the Lives of Lessing and H. (1944). H.B.G.

Hamd Allāh-i Mustowfi (*Qazvin 1281–82), Persian historian, geographer and man of letters, is the author of Tarikh-i Guzideh (1330), a universal history, and Nuzhat al-Qulūb (1339), mainly a geographical work.

Tarikh-i Guzideh (Leyden, 1910; abbr. tr. E. G. Browne and R. A. Nicholson, 1913); Nuzhat al-Qulūb, geographical section ed. and tr. G. Le Strange (2 vols, 1915–19); zoological section ed. and tr. J. Stephenson (1928). E.Y.

Hamerling, ROBERT, pen-name of RUPERT JOHANN HAMMERLING (*Kirchberg am Walde 24 III 1830; †Stifting 13 VII 1871), Austrian narrative poet. Condemned to the restricted life of an invalid, he found compensation in highly coloured fantasy, producing a mephitic blend of the idealistic and the voluptuous.

Venus im Exil (1858); Sinnen und Minnen (1860); Ein Schwanenlied der Romantik (1862); Ahasuerus in Rom (1866); Der König von Sion (1869); Danton und Robespierre (1871); Die sieben Todsünden (1872); Amor und Psyche (1882).—NOVEL: Aspasia (3 vols, 1876; tr. M. J. Safford, 1882).—Stationen meiner Lebenspilgerschaft (1889); Sämtliche Werke, ed. M. Rabenlechner (16 vols, 2nd. ed. 1922).

P. Rosegger, Persönliche Erinnerungen an R. H. (1891); M. Rabenlechner, H., sein Leben und Werke (1896); Wien in den Tagebüchern und Dichtungen Hamerlings (1916). H.A.P.

Hamid al-Din, ABU BAKR OMAR (*Balkh; †1164), Persian man of letters, is the author of Maqāmat (1156; pr. Cawnpore 1852), a collection of 23 essays in rhymed prose on the model of Hariri and al-Hamadhani.

C. Rieu, Cat. of the Pers. MSS in the Brit. Mus., II (1881). E.Y.

Hamilton, ALEXANDER (*Nevis, Scotland 11 I 1757; ∞1780 Elizabeth Schuyler; †New York 12 VII 1804), American statesman. One of the founders of the American republic, he became secretary of the treasury. He supported the developing capitalistic economy.

The Federalist (with Madison and Jay, 1787–88); Report on Public Credit (1790); Report on Manufactures (1791); The Works of A. H., ed. H. C. Lodge (12 vols, 1904).

N. Schachner, A. H. (1946). H.L.C.

Hamilton, ANTHONY, COUNT (*Ireland c. 1646; †St Germain IV 1720), courtier and author. Governor of Limerick 1685; fought at the Boyne in 1690 and lived thereafter at James II's exiled court at St Germain. His Memoirs of his brother-in-law, the Comte de Grammont, are a vivid and gracefully written picture (no doubt part fiction) of life at the French and English courts.

Mémoires du comte de Grammont (1713; Eng. tr. 1714; ed. Sir Walter Scott, 1811); Contes de Féerie (1730–49; Eng. tr. 1760). J.K.

Hamilton, WILLIAM, of Gilbertfield (*Ladyland c. 1665; †Latrick 24 V 1751), Scottish poet. Hamilton served as a soldier, but spent most of his life as a laird and man of letters. He modernized Blind Harry's Wallace (1722); contributed miscellaneous poems in the vernacular to Watson's Choice Collection of Comic and Serious Scots Poems (1706), and in a verse correspondence with Allan Ramsay (usually printed with Ramsay's works) set a model for Burns's poetical epistles. J.K.

Hamilton, WILLIAM (*Bangour 1704; †Lyons 25 III 1754), Scottish poet. He was out in the Jacobite rebellion of 1745, escaped after Culloden and remained on the continent till pardoned in 1749. An insipid poet in the Augustan modes, but author of the fine ballad The Braes of Yarrow.

Contributions to Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellany (1724–27); Poems on Several Occasions (1748; 1760); Poems and Songs of W. H., ed. J. Paterson (1850). J.K.

Hamilton, SIR WILLIAM (*Glasgow 8 III 1788; ∞1828 Janet Marshall; †Edinburgh 6 V 1856), Scottish philosopher; professor of history at Edinburgh, 1821; professor of logic and metaphysics, 1836–56. He modified traditional formal logic; and his unprecedented learning made possible a new orientation in British philosophy. He brought British thought into contact with that of Kant and Hegel.

The Works of Thomas Reid, ed. Hamilton (1846, 1852, 1863); articles in The Edinburgh Review, pub. as Discussions on Philosophy and Literature, Education and University Reform (1852); Lectures on Metaphysics and Logic, ed. H. L. Mansel and J. Veitch (4 vols, 1858–60).

M. P. W. Bolton, The Scoto-Oxonian Philosophy (1867); J. S. Mill, Examination of Sir W. H.'s Philosophy (1865); W. H. S. Monck, Sir W. H. (1881); J. H. Stirling, Sir W. H.; being the Philosophy of Perception (1865); J. Veitch, Sir W. H.: The Man and his Philosophy (1883). J.K.

Hammarsköld, LARS (LORENZO) (*Tuna, Kalmar 5 IV 1785; †Stockholm 15 X 1827), Swedish librarian and author. One of the first constructive literary critics of Sweden and author of a creditable history of Swedish literature (Svenska vitterheten, 1818–19). He attacked prevailing French classicism and also started or collaborated in a number of pro-romantic literary periodicals. His letters form an important source for contemporary literary history: a selection are published in Bref rörande nya skolans historia, ed. G. Frunck (1886–91).

Valda humoristiska och poetiska skrifter (with biog. B. Norling, 1882).

E. Fahlbeck, Idéer och män (1936). C.H.K.

Hammond, WILLIAM (*St Alban's Court, Kent 1614), English poet, brother-in-law to Henry Sandys and connected with a number of poets. His own occasional verse is easy in style and readable in content.

Poems (1655), ed. G. Saintsbury, Minor Poets of the Caroline Period, II (1906). B.L.J.

Han YÜ (*768; †Ch‘ang-an 824), Chinese essayist and poet. Han obtained his degree in the official examinations of 792 but failed to secure a public post. In 796 he went to Pien-chou where he began his career as a teacher, with two disciples, Chang Chi and Li Ao. He returned to the capital in 801 as a teacher in the imperial schools. Then he became a censor, but offended emperor Tê-tsung and was banished to a provincial post. However, after his recall by emperor Hsien-tsung (806) he advanced steadily to high office. His famous protest against bringing the Buddha's bone to the capital brought a second banishment (819), but he was soon recalled.

He believed himself to have a divine mission to restore the position of Confucianism which Buddhism had usurped; he indeed regarded himself as the direct successor of Mencius (in the importance he gave to this philosopher he was a forerunner of the Sung neo-Confucians). Similarly he was the chief advocate of the movement for a return to the prose-style (ku-wên) of the Chou and Han dynasties. In his own writing he achieved a lucid, agreeable style; his dislike of ornament provoked the criticism that his verse was rhymed prose. Despite his contemporary reputation his works suffered neglect until the N. Sung dynasty, when, with the new impetus to the ku-wên movement, they were recovered by Ou-yang Hsiu.

Han Ch‘ang-li ch‘üan-chi: Ger. tr. E. v. Zach, Han Yü's Poetische Werke (Harvard 1952); other select trs in H. A. Giles, Chinese Poetry in English Verse (1898), Gems of Chinese Literature, II (2nd ed. 1923), W. Bynner, The Jade Mountain (1929), S. Jenyns, A Further Selection from the Three Hundred Poems of the T‘ang Dynasty (1944); see also E. Erkes, 'Das Mädchen vom Huashan', in Asia Major, IX (1933).

J. K. Rideout, 'The Context of the Yuan Tao and the Yuan Hsing', in Bull. School Or. Studies, XII (1948). A.R.D.

Han-fei-tzŭ, 'Master Fei of Han', title of prince Fei of Han (†Hsien-yang 233 B.C.), Chinese philosopher. His thought was not directed towards the ritually regulated society of his master, Hsün-tzŭ, but developed the 'legalist' school tenet of the central authority governing through a fixed body of law. He used Taoist doctrine, particularly from Lao-tzŭ, as the metaphysical basis of his teaching. Of the present book Han-fei-tzŭ, some chapters are later replacements of early losses, and the authenticity of others has been questioned.

Han-fei-tzŭ: The Complete Works of Han Fei Tzŭ, I (ch. 1–30), tr. W. K. Liao (1939); ch. 50, 'Learned Celebrities', tr. W. K. Liao, in Harvard Jour. Asiatic Studies, III (1938).

A. Waley, Three Ways of Thought in Ancient China (1939). A.R.D.

Hanka, VÁCLAV (*Hořiněves 10 VI 1791; †Prague 1861), Czech author. A gifted poet and scholar, Hanka was one of the enthusiastic young Czechs who contributed to the rebirth of Czech culture. His original poems show the distinct influence of Czech and South Slav folk poetry. Hanka is best known as the probable instigator and part-author of the forged manuscripts of Králové Dvůr and Zelená Hora which purported to contain Czech epics and lyrics from the early middle ages but were in fact romantic forgeries, inspired by the example of Chatterton and James Macpherson. Hanka was assisted in this venture by J. Linda and V. A.

Svoboda. The manuscripts were finally proved to be false in the 1880s by the philologist J. Gebauer, T. G. Masaryk and other scholars. The controversy as to their authenticity had by then become a cause célèbre. (See also FORGERIES.)

Písně, ed. J. Máchal (1918).—The manuscripts were published in facsimile by V. Vojtěch with transcription and notes by V. Flajšhans (1930); Eng. tr. A. H. Wratislaw, The Queen's Court Manuscript, with other ancient Bohemian poems, trans. from the original Slavonic into English verse (1852).

J. Hanuš, in Literatura česká devatenáctého století, I (2nd ed. 1911). On the manuscripts, F. M. Bartoš, Rukopisy Královédvorský a Zelenohorský (1946). R.A.

Hannay, JAMES (*Dumfries 17 II 1827; ∞1853 Margaret Thompson, ∞1868 Jean Hannay; †Barcelona 3 I 1873), Scottish journalist and novelist. He edited the 'Edinburgh Courant' (1860–64) and was British consul at Barcelona from 1868. Hannay is a sound literary critic; and in his two best novels, Singleton Fontenoy (1850) and Eustace Conyers (1855), he made a minor contribution to the fiction of the sea.

Lectures on Satire and Satirists (1854); Essays from the Quarterly (1861); Three Hundred Years of a Norman House (1866); Studies on Thackeray (1869). J.K.

Hannay, PATRICK (*Kircudbright ?; †at sea 1629 ?), Scottish poet. Author of miscellaneous poems, pleasing couplet instructions to maids and wives, and a highly coloured 'heroic poem', Sheretine and Mariana, in six-line stanzas.

A Happy Husband: or Directions for a Maid to chuse her Mate. Together with a Wives Behaviour after Marriage (1619); Elegies on the Death of Queen Anne (1619); The Nightingale, Sheretine and Mariana . . . Songs and Sonnets (1622).—Poems, ed. G. Saintsbury, in Minor Poets of the Caroline Period, I (1905). J.K.

Hansen, MAURITZ CHRISTOPHER (*Komperud, Modum 5 VII 1794; ∞1816 Helvig Leschly; †Kongsberg 16 III 1842), Norwegian novelist and short-story writer. The prolific concoctor of romantic novelettes and text-books of all sorts, whose duties as a schoolmaster and constant financial worries frustrated the proper development of his undoubted literary talents. He was the outstanding figure of a bleak period in Norwegian literary history.

Othar af Bretagne (1819); Noveller og Fortællinger, ed. C. N. Schwach (8 vols, 1855–58); Noveller i Udvalg, ed. H. Jæger (1882). R.G.P.

Happel, EBERHARD WERNER (*Kirchhain 12 VIII 1648; †Hamburg 15 V 1690), German author of 14 many-volumed novels, besides numerous historical and journalistic works. His Teutscher Karl (1689–90) and Academischer Roman (1690) are based on his own experiences; others romanticize contemporary history in different parts of the globe.

NOVELS: Der asiatische Onogambo (1673); Der Ungarische Kriegs-Roman oder Aussfürliche Beschreibung dess jüngsten Türckenkriegs . . . unter einer anmuhtigen Liebes- und Heldengeschichte auf Romanische Weise verfasset (1685–89); Der Academische Roman, ed. R. Schacht (1913).—HISTORY: Fortuna Brittannica oder Brittannischer Glücks-Wechsel (1689); Hibernia Vindicata (1691) etc.

T. Schuwirth, E. W. H. (Diss. Marburg, 1909); G. Lock, Der höfisch-galante Roman bei H. (1939); A. Hirsch, Bürgertum und Barock im deutschen Roman (1934). L.W.F.

Harambašić, AUGUST (*Donji Miholac 14 VII 1861; †Stenjevac 16 VII 1911), Croat poet and writer. He became a follower of A. Starčević's right wing nationalist movement and devoted much of his time to politics. His literary output was great, ranging from lyrics and patriotic poetry to children's poems and numerous translations from Slav writers and from Shakespeare.

Ruzmarinke (1883); Pjesničke pripovijesti (1889); Mali Raj (1891). S.C.

Harbaugh, HENRY (*nr Waynsboro, Franklin Co., Pa. 28 X 1817; ∞14 XII 1843 Louisa Goodrich, ∞14 XI 1848 Maria Louisa Linn; †Mercersburg, Pa. 28 XII 1867), Pennsylvania-German clergyman and poet of Swiss descent. In 1863 he became an influential professor of theology at the Mercersburg Seminary. He published the first and some of the best Pennsylvania-German verse.

Poems (1860); Hymns and Chants (1861); Harbaugh's Harfe, Gedichte in Pennsylvanisch-Deutscher Mundart, ed. P. Bausman (1870).—THEOLOGY: The Sainted Dead (1848); Heavenly Recognition (1851); The Heavenly Home (1853); The Birds of the Bible (1854); The Life of Michael Schlatter (1857); The True Glory of Woman (1858).

L. Harbaugh, Life of the Rev. H. H. (1900). E.R.

Harduyn, JUSTUS DE (*Ghent 11 IV 1582; †Oudegem 9 V 1641), Flemish poet, ordained priest in 1607. In his youth he wrote love poems in the manner of the Pléiade; later he turned some of them into religious poems. A few are as pure as medieval folk-songs. He is the most genuine poet of the 17th century in the Southern Netherlands.

De Weerliicke Liefden tot Roose-mond (1613; pub. anonymously), fac. ed. O. Dambre (1942); Goddelicke Lofsanghen (1620; ed. O. Dambre, 1933); Den val ende Opstand van David (1620); Goddelycke Wenschen (1629; after H. Hugo's Pia Desideria).

O. Dambre, De dichter J. de H. (1926) and 'J. de H.'s drievoudig testament', in Roeping (1943); E. Rombauts, 'J. de H.'s Goddelicke Lof-sanghen', in Feestbundel van H. J. van de Wijer, II (1944). A.M.B.W.

Hardy, ALEXANDRE (*c. 1570; †1632 ?), French dramatist. He was a 'hired poet' and perhaps actor in companies which performed principally at the Hôtel de Bourgogne (Paris) from c. 1600. In 1628 he claimed already to have written 600 plays: 34 survive and include 5 pastorales (a romantic Italianate play in a country setting), 3 'dramatic poems', 12 tragedies and 14 tragi-comedies. The two latter types presented violently melodramatic action on the stage. Though written in verse, Hardy's plays have theatrical, but small literary, value. Their main sources were near-contemporary Italian and Spanish poems and novels and translated Greek and Roman histories and romances. Hardy's type of undisciplined drama, written for a multiple décor, disappeared with the introduction of the unities.

DRAMATIC POEM: Théagène et Chariclée (1623).—TRAGEDIES: Didon; Scédase; Panthée; Coriolan; Mariamne; La Mort d'Alexandre.—TRAGI-COMEDIES: Alceste; Ariadne ravie; Cornélie; La Force du sang; Frégonde; Elmire.—PASTORALS: Alcée; Corinne; Le Triomphe d'Amour (all pub. 1624–28), ed. Stengel (5 vols, Marburg, 1883–84).

E. Rigal, A. H. (1889); H. C. Lancaster, A History of French Dramatic Literature in the 17th Century, I (1929); S. W. Deierkauf-Holsboer, Vie d'A. H. (Philadelphia, 1947). G.B.

Hardyng, JOHN (*1378; †1465 ?), English author of a metrical chronicle of England from earliest times to 1464.

The Chronicle of Iohn Hardyng together with The Continuation of Richard Grafton, ed. H. Ellis (1812).

C. L. Kingsford, 'The First Version of H.'s Chronicle', in Eng. Hist. Rev., 27 (1912) and English Historical Literature in the 15th Century (1913). R.W.B.

Hare, AUGUSTUS JOHN CUTHBERT (*Rome 13 III 1834; †Holmhurst 22 I 1903), English writer of gentle biographies and of talented guidebooks reinforced with copious extracts from other works.

Days near Rome (2 vols, 1875); Cities of Northern and Central Italy (3 vols, 1876); Memorials of a Quiet Life (3 vols, 1872–76); Story of Two Noble Lives [Lady Canning and Lady Waterford] (3 vols, 1893); Life and Letters of Maria Edgeworth (2 vols, 1894); Story of my Life (6 vols, 1896–1900), abbr. ed. M. Barnes (2 vols, 1952–53), R.M.H.

Haren, JHR. ONNO ZWIER VAN (*Leeuwarden 2 IV 1713; ∞1738 Sara A. van Huls; †Wolvega 2 IX 1779), Dutch poet, a friend of prince William IV and influential statesman; in 1760 banished from The Hague because of a family scandal. His poetry and prose never attained the traditional 18th-century smoothness, the style is harsh, interesting and genuine. He wrote a drama criticizing the Dutch East-India company, Agon, Sulthan van Bantam (1769), the play Willem I (1773) and the comedy Pietje en Agnietje (1779).

POETRY: Aan het Vaderland (1769; rev. ed. De Geuzen 1771), new versification by Bilderdijk (2 vols, 1785), ed. A. Stakenburg (1943); Herschijning (1776).—De dichterlijke werken van W. en O. Z. v. H., ed. Jer. de Vries (2 vols, 1824–26).

J. v. Vloten, Leven en werken van W. en O. Z. v. H. (1874); C. Busken Huet, in Litt. Fant. en Krit., 6; H. J. Polak, in Studiën (1888); J. A. F. L. v. Heeckeren, in Taal en Lett., 4; W. H. F. Mansfeldt, in De Gids (1920); E. du Perron, Schandaal in Holland (1939); A. Stakenburg, O. Z. v. H., De Geuzen (1943). J.W.W.

Haren, JHR. WILLEM VAN (*Leeuwarden 21 II 1710; ∞1737 Marianne Charles, ∞1759 Anna K. L. Natalis; †(suicide) St Oedenrode 4 VII 1768), Dutch poet and statesman, disciple of Voltaire in more fluent verse than that of his brother, Onno. Frustrated by a life of reverses only partly caused by his own stubbornness.

Het menschelijk leven (1760); Gevallen van Friso (1741, 2nd rev. ed. 1758); Leonidas (1742); Lof der vrede (1742); Extract of Mr v. H.'s Love of peace (1742).

J. Koopmans, in De Beweging, 3 (1907) and in De Nieuwe Taalgids, 15 (1922); H. J. L. van Haselen, W. v. Harens Gevallen van Friso (1922). J.W.W.

Harington, JOHN (fl. 1550; ∞1546 Ethelreda, daughter of Henry VIII, ∞1554 Isabella Markham), English politician and translator of Cicero, a confidential servant to Henry VIII and devoted to princess Elizabeth.

(Cicero) The Booke of freendshipe (1550; 1562; repr. 1904), ed. W. H. D. Rouse (1907). B.L.J.

Harington, SIR JOHN (*1561; †20 XI 1612), English miscellanist. Educated at Eton and Cambridge, Harington lost favour at court because of his Rabelaisian discourses on sanitation (1596) and his association (1597–1601) with the earl of Essex, though James I made him tutor to prince Henry. Harington's translation of Orlando Furioso reproduces the stanza but not the spirit of the original. His Apologie of Poetrie relies heavily upon the medieval conception of poetry as essentially allegorical. His epigrams are coarse and his ebullient humour is better illustrated by Nugae Antiquae.

Orlando Furioso (incl. 'a Briefe Apologie of Poetrie', 1591); A Briefe Apologie of Poetrie, ed. G. G. Smith, Elizabethan Critical Essays, vol. II (1904); A New Discourse of a Stale Subject, Ulysses upon Ajax (both 1596, both ed. P. Warlock and J. Lindsay, 1927); The Englishman's Doctor (1607); Elegant and Wittie Epigrams (1618); Nugae Antiquae (1769–75; ed. T. Park, 2 vols, 1804); A Tract on the Succession to the Crown, ed. C. Markham (1880); The Letters and Epigrams of Sir J. H., ed. N. E. McClure (1930).

Sir W. Raleigh, 'Sir J. H.', in Some Authors (1923); T. Rich, H. and Ariosto (1940); H. Brown, Rabelais in English Literature (1933). W.A.A.

al-Hariri (*nr Basra 1054; †Baghdad 1122), Arabic writer. He wrote also on philological subjects, but is famous chiefly for his collection of fifty maqamas (see al-Hamadhani), in which he brought to perfection this characteristic genre of Arabic literature. While he seems to be less happy than al-Hamadhani in the invention of his stories, he is inexhaustible in producing verbal tours-de-force. The protagonist in the stories is called Abu Zayd of Saruj.

V. Chauvin, Bibliographie des ouvrages arabes, IX (1905); F. Rückert, Die Verwandlungen des Abu Seid von Serug oder die Makamen des Hariri (1826; masterly Ger. tr.); Makamat, tr. T. Preston (1850); The Assemblies of al-Hariri, tr. T. Chenery (1867), 2nd vol. F. Skingass (1898). S.M.S.

Harison, William (*Winchester? 1685; †London 14 II 1712), English poet and diplomatist of Winchester and New College. A friend of Addison and Swift, he wrote in most of the 52 Tatlers between Jan. and May 1711.

Woodstock Park (1706; 1706 'revis'd'; repr. Dodsley's Collection, V, 1758). B.L.J.

al-Ḥarizi (Alcharisi), Judah ben Solomon (c.* 1165; †before 1235), Spanish Hebrew poet. He spent much of his life wandering about in Provence and in the Near East, working chiefly as translator of scientific works. His masterpiece is the Hebrew version of the Maqāmas of al-Ḥarīrī under the title of Maḥberoth Ithiel (ed. Chenery, 1872) in which he succeeded in reproducing all the linguistic artistry of the original. He then wrote a similar book in Hebrew, the Taḥkemoni (Constantinople 1578; ed. P. de Lagarde, 1883), consisting of 50 short stories in rhymed prose, with pieces in verse, mostly humorous; some discuss Hebrew literature. This became a model for later writings (e.g. Immanuel of Rome). He also wrote some liturgical poems.

K. Albrecht, Die Angaben über Harizi (1881); M. Schwab, Al-Harizi et ses pérégrinations (1881); G. Sarton, Introduction to the History of Science, II (1931); J. Schirmann, Die hebr. Übersetzung der Maqamen des Hariri (1930). C.R.

Harman, Thomas (fl. 1567), English writer on vagrancy who lived at Crayford, Kent, from 1547. He went to London to superintend publication of his treatise, which includes characters and a cant vocabulary.

A Caveat or Warening for Commen Cursetors (1567), ed. E. Viles and F. J. Furnivall (Early Eng. Text Soc., 1869), ed. A. V. Judges (1930). B.L.J.

Harpestræng, Henrik (†1244), Danish monk and physician. Little is known of him, except that he was the author of one of the first works in Danish, a book of medical herbs; some other medical books are also ascribed to him.

C. Molbech, H. H.'s danske Lægebog (1826); M. Kristensen, H., Gamle Urtebøger, Stenbøger og Kogebøger (1908–20); J. W. S. Johnson, Henricus Dacus (1914); P. Hauberg, H. H., Liber herbarum (1936). E.B.

Harpsfield, Nicholas (*London 1519; †ibid. 1575), English Roman Catholic theologian and ecclesiastical judge who was imprisoned in the Tower from 1559 until his death. He denounced the divorce of Catharine of Aragon. His life of More owes much to Roper and others of More's friends whom Harpsfield knew at Louvain 1550–54.

Life of Sir Thomas More, ed. R. W. Chambers and E. V. Hitchcock, The Tudor Lives of Sir Thomas More (Early Eng. Text Soc., 1932); A Treatise on the Pretended Divorce of Henry VIII and Catharine of Aragon, ed. N. Pocock (Camden Soc., 1877). B.L.J.

Harpur, Charles (*Windsor, N.S.W. 23 I 1813; †Eurobodalla, N.S.W. 10 IV 1868), Australian poet, noteworthy mainly as the first to apply himself to poetry in a spirit of dedication, trying, in the manner of English nature poets, to interpret aspects of his country.

Poems (1883; text dubiously ed.); Selected Poems (1944); Rosa (1948). F.T.M.

Harris, JOEL CHANDLER (*Eatonton, Ga. 9 XII 1848; ∞1873 Esther La Rose; †Atlanta, Ga. 3 VII 1908), American journalist. With realism and homely humour he recorded the Negro of the old South and the folk-lore of the Georgia plantation. He worked on the Atlanta Constitution and in this newspaper began his 'Uncle Remus' series.

Uncle Remus: His Songs and His Sayings (1881); Mingo and Other Sketches in Black and White (1884); Tales of the Home Folks in Peace and War (1898); Told by Uncle Remus: New Stories of the Old Plantation (1905); Uncle Remus and Brer Rabbit (1907).—J. C. H.: Editor and Essayist: Miscellaneous Literary, Political, and Social Writings, ed. Julia C. Harris (1931).

A. F. Harlow, J. C. H. (Uncle Remus): Plantation Storyteller (1941). H.L.C.

Harris, JOSEPH (*c. 1650; †London? c. 1715), English actor-dramatist, originally a seal-cutter who joined the King's Company at the Theatre Royal. His City Bride seems to owe much to Webster. Harris published four odes.

The Mistakes (1691; one scene by W. Mountfort); The City Bride (1696); Love's A Lottery and Love and Riches Reconcil'd (1699). B.L.J.

Harsdörffer, GEORG PHILIP (*Nürnberg 1 XI 1607; †ibid. 22 IX 1658), German poet. He is the literary representative of the South German middle class in the Free Cities, whose way of life was influenced by the culture of the courts. His Frauenzimmergesprächspiele (8 vols, 1641–49) inculcate social graces by narrative example, and in order to realise the milieu of this work he founded the 'Pegnitzorden' in 1644 with Johann Klaj. He was critical of Opitz, though he made use of his achievements. His manual of poetics, Nürnberger Trichter, became notorious. He published a number of collections of stories and some lyric poetry remarkable for its clever onomatopoeia.

Dianea, auss dem Italienischen des F. Loredano (1634); Poetischer Trichter, die deutsche Dicht- und Reimkunst in sechs Stunden einzugiessen (3 vols, 1648–52), ed. R. Marquier (1939); Schauplatz lust- und lehrreicher Geschichte (2 vols, 1650); Schauplatz jämmerlicher Mordgeschichte (2 vols, 1652).

W. Kayser, Klangmalerei bei H. (1932); A. Krapp, Die ästhetischen Tendenzen Harsdörffers (1904); K. A. Kroth, Die mystischen Wurzeln der ästhetischen Tendenzen Harsdörffers (Diss. Munich, 1921); G. A. Narciss, Studien zu den Frauenzimmergesprächspielen (1928); J. H. Scholte, 'Nürnberger Dichterschule', in P. Merker and W. Stammler, Reallexikon; B. Marckwardt, Geschichte der deutschen Poetik, I (1937). L.W.F.

Harsha, properly HARSHAVARDHANA, emperor of Kanauj (A.D. 606–47), was the patron of Bāna and the author of three dramas, Ratnāvalī ('the pearl necklace'), Priyadarsikā and Nāgānanda. Harsha was held in high esteem. Bāna says that his gifts in poetry could hardly find expression in words, and the famous poet Jayadeva puts him in the same rank as Bāna and Kālidāsa.

R. Mookerji, H. (1926). H.G.R.

Hart, HEINRICH (*Wesel 30 XII 1855; †Tecklenburg 11 VI 1906), German critic. He will always be remembered, and confused, with his brother Julius (see PART III), both leaders of the naturalistic movement. Both were members of the progressive literary club 'Durch', contributors to the fundamental anthology of naturalistic poetry Moderne Dichtercharaktere (1885) and co-editors of Kritische Waffengänge (1882–84). His poetic work is only of historical interest.

VERSE: Weltpfingsten (1872); Das Lied der Menschheit (fragm., 4 vols, 1887–1906).—PLAYS: Sedan (1882); Der Sumpf (1885).—VARIOUS: Fünf Novellen (1888); Peter Hille (1905).—Ges. Werke, ed. J. Hart (4 vols, 1907–08).

L. H. Wolf, Die aesthetische Grundlage der Literaturrevolution der achtziger Jahre: Die Kritischen Waffengänge der Brüder Hart (1922). R.W.L.

Harte, FRANCIS BRETT (*Albany, N.Y. 25 VIII 1836; ∞1862 Anna Griswold; †London, England 5 V 1902), American novelist, writer of short stories and humorous verse. An Easterner who exploited the literary wealth of the growing West, he lived most of his life in New York and in Europe. At nineteen he went with his mother to California; here he entered journalism, came into sudden fame with his Luck of Roaring Camp (1870), the first widely popular story of Western local colour. After leaving California in 1871, he continued to write, but with repetition and lack of inspiration.

Plain Language from Truthful James (The Heathen Chinee) (1870); Stories of the Sierras (1872); A Millionaire of Rough-and-Ready (1887).—Poetical Works of Bret Harte (1896); The Writings of Bret Harte (19 vols, 1896–1914).

G. R. Stewart Jr., Bret Harte: Argonaut and Exile (1931); H. C. Merwin, The Life of Bret Harte (1911). H.L.C.

Hartleben, Otto Erich (*Clausthal 3 VI 1864; †Salò, Italy 11 II 1905), German poet, short-story writer and playwright. Originally educated to become a lawyer, he proved completely unsuitable for that as well as any other profession. He is one of the bohemians of German literature, a man with great gifts, but a total lack of will and energy to apply them. In his rare moments of sobriety he succeeded in composing a few delightfully fresh and original lines, or a short story which took its main effect from buoyant sneering at bourgeois morality.

Verse: Meine Verse (1895; 2nd enlarged ed. 1905).—Plays: Angele (1890); Hanna Jagert (1893; Eng. tr. S. E. Holmes, 1913); Die sittliche Forderung (1897); Rosenmontag (1900; Love's Carnival, tr. R. Bleichmann, 1904).—Stories: Die Geschichte vom abgerissenen Knopf (1893); Vom gastfreien Pastor (1895).—Ges. Werke, ed. F. F. Heitmüller (3 vols, 1908).

C. Flaischlen, O. E. H. (1896); A. Eloesser, 'O. E. H.', in Biogr. Jahrbuch, X (1907); F. Hock, Die Lyrik Hartlebens (1931); H. Lücke, O. E. H. (1941). R.W.L.

Hartley, David (*Luddendon, Halifax VI 1705; ∞1730, o|o 1735; †Bath 28 VIII 1757), English philosopher. Hartley was one of the English empiricists, and his famous Observations on Man sets out his 'doctrine of vibrations'. He explained mental and moral activity as originating in sensation and developing by mechanical association.

Observations on Man, his frame, his duty, and his Expectations (2 vols, 1749).

S. T. Coleridge, Biographia Literaria (1817); G. S. Bowes, H. and James Mill (1881). B.H.

Hartlib, Samuel (*Elbing? 1596/1600; †Holland? 1662), Polish merchant who patronized scholars, whose mother was apparently English. Hartlib came to England c. 1628, entering the circle of Milton, Boyle, Petty and the 'Invisible Society' which started c. 1645. He published Comenius (1637 and after) and translated him (1640–41), and wrote on husbandry. B.L.J.

Description of the Famous Kingdom of Macaria (1641), repr. in Harleian Misc., I (1808).

H. Dircks, Biographical Memoir (1865); G. H. Turnbull, S. H. (1920). J.R.B.

Hartlieb, Johannes (fl. 1439–63), court physician to Albrecht III of Bavaria; noteworthy prose stylist in his translations of the medieval Alexander-book, Historia de preliis (many MSS and early prints), Andreas Capellanus' Tractatus Amoris, Caesarius v. Heisterbach's Dialogus miraculorum, etc.

Alexanderbuch, ed. R. Benz (1924); Caesarius, ed. K. Drescher (1929). F.P.P.

Hartmann, Moritz (*Duschnik, Bohemia 15 X 1821; †Oberdöbling 13 V 1872), Austrian writer and journalist, of Jewish parentage. His extreme views and trenchant political verse made life impossible for him in Austria. After cosmopolitan experiences he returned to Vienna 1868 and edited the Neue Freie Presse, enlarging its sphere of influence. Of his consistently estimable writings, his short stories, with their richly varied backgrounds, may be mentioned.

Verse: Kelch und Schwert (1845); Neuere Gedichte (1847); Reimchronik des Pfaffen Mauritius (1849); Schatten (1851); Adam und Eva (1851); Zeitlosen (1858).—Prose: Tagebuch aus Languedoc und Provence (1853); Erzählungen eines Unsteten (2 vols, 1858); Bilder und Büsten (1860); Novellen (3 vols, 1863); Märchen nach Perrault (1867).—Gesammelte Werke, ed. L. Bamberger and W. Vollmer (10 vols, 1873–74); Ausgewählte Werke, ed. O. Rommel (1910); Revolutionäre Erinnerungen, ed. H. H. Houben (1919); Ausgewählte Briefe, ed. R. Wolkan (1921).

O. Wittner, M. Hartmanns Leben und Werke (1907). H.A.P.

Hartmann von Aue (c. 1170–1215), Swabian poet whose epics prepare the way for Gottfried v. Strassburg and Wolfram v. Eschenbach. He was ministerialis to an unidentified lord 'von Aue' (whose death he mourns, about 1195), attended a monastery school and went on a crusade (1197). Works: lyrics and a Büchlein (a dispute between heart and body) by 1190, Erec, Gregorius and Der arme Heinrich by 1195, crusader songs 1196–98 and Iwein by 1203. Sources: Chrétien de Troyes' Erec and Yvain; an anon. Vie du pape Grégoire; for D. a. H. an exemplum. The technique of adaptation is free translation with systematic refinement of characterization and motive, and enhancement of milieu (with consequent loss of epic pace). Critics have been troubled by his return to an Arthurian theme in Iwein. (Gregorius is a legend involving the rejection of chivalry; in Der a. H. (an almost independent work) a brilliant knight is smitten with leprosy in punishment for his lack of Christian humility and saved only by a miracle.) After the crusader songs Hartmann simply reaffirmed his faith in chivalry and formal Christian observance: his is indeed the 'classical' German statement of its philosophy. Gottfried praises Hartmann as the greatest living writer of epic (Tristan 4621 ff.): 'in elegant and thoughtful elaboration he reveals the true meaning of the tale he retells.' The modern reader finds, beside these, homelier virtues. He had many imitators and is the source of a play by Gerhart Hauptmann (D. a. H.) and a novel by Thomas Mann (Greg.).

Ed. F. Bech, H. v. A. (3 vols, 3rd ed. 1893). —Lyric: Des Minnesangs Frühling, ed. K. Lachmann–C. v. Kraus (1944).—Erec, M. Haupt (1871); Iwein, G. E. Benecke–K. Lachmann (5th ed. 1926; dictionary by Benecke, 3rd ed. 1901); Gregorius, H. Paul (5th ed. 1919); Der a. Heinr., E. Gierach (1925), J. Knight-Bostock (1941). J. Fourquet, Hartm. d'Aue, Érec, Iwein (1944) gives excerpts from Chrétien and H. with a comparison. R. Fink, H.s epische Dichtungen (1939; prose tr.). C. H. Bell, Peasant Life etc. (1931; incl. tr. of D. a. H.). F.P.P.

Hartog, Henri (*Rotterdam I VIII 1869; †ibid. 25 II 1904), Dutch novelist and writer of short stories, schoolmaster; described life in the working-class districts in the naturalistic manner.

Sjofelen (1904, intro. L. v. Deyssel); autobiographical notes in De Jonge Gids (1897). J.W.W.

Hartzenbusch, Juan Eugenio (*Madrid 1806; †ibid. 1880), Spanish dramatist, poet and critic. He studied in the Jesuit school of San Isidoro and began life as a cabinet-maker working in the shop of his German father. He died a member of the Spanish Academy and a retired director of the national library. His most successful play, Los amantes de Teruel (1837), was performed at the height of Spanish romantic drama. Force of passion together with verse often conveying a melancholic medieval atmosphere makes it the best of several Spanish plays on this theme. A good drama, though less famous, is La jura de Santa Gadea (1845), based on an episode of the Cid. His plays of magic, La redoma encantada (1839) and Los polvos de la madre Celestina (1840), have considerable interest. Of his many translations Schiller's La campana is notable. His editions of Spanish classics are still valuable.

Colec. Escrit. Cast., 54, 63, 68 and 77; Obras escogidas (Leipzig, 1873); The lovers of Teruel, tr. Henry Thomas (1938).

E. Hartzenbusch, Bibliografía de H., formada por su hijo (1900); A. Fernández Guerra, 'Prólogo', in Colec. Escrit. Cast., 54; A. S. Corbière, J. E. H. and the English Theater (Philadelphia, 1927); J. Sarrailh, 'L'histoire et le drame romantique d'H.', in Bull. Hisp., 38 (1936). R.M.N.

Harvey, Christopher (*Bunbury ? 1597 ?; ∞Margaret; †Clifton-on-Dunsmore III or IV 1663), English clergyman and poet whose Schola Cordis . . . in Forty Seven Emblems (1647), based on van Haeften, has been attributed to Quarles. Harvey's The Synagogue (1640, enlarged 1647) has often been reprinted with Herbert's The Temple, which it resembles.

Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (1874) B.L.J.

Harvey, Gabriel (*Saffron Walden 1545; †ibid. 1630), English scholar and critic. Vain and quarrelsome, Harvey was never popular, but his learning and ability were generally recognized, and he exercised some influence. He belonged to those who thought that the future of English literature lay in close imitation of Latin, and claimed the invention of the English hexameter. He forced his friend Spenser for a time into this mould and later expressed disapproval of The Faerie Queene. He is also remembered for his violent paper war with Nashe and Greene. As a creative writer he possesses little merit, but his incidental critical comments on his contemporaries are often interesting.

Foure Letters and certaine Sonnets (1592), ed. G. B. Harrison (1922); Pierces supererogation (1593); The Trimming of Thomas Nashe (1597; ?by Harvey).—Complete works, ed. A. B. Grosart (3 vols, 1884–85); The Letter Book of G. H., ed. E. S. L. Scott (1884); Marginalia, ed. G. C. Moore Smith (1913). J.B.B.

Hasebroek, Johannes Petrus, pseud. Jonathan (*Leiden 6 XI 1812; ∞1847 Jkvr. Anna M. J. van Tets; †Amsterdam 30 III 1896), Dutch parson, poet and essayist, a friend of Beets from his student days. Together with the novelist Elizabeth J. Hasebroek, his sister, he turned the vicarage at Heilo into a literary 'salon' for Geertruida Toussaint, Beets, Hofdijk. He wrote a collection of essays inspired by Charles Lamb, Waarheid en Droomen (1840), which is still read.

Verse: Poëzij (1836); Windekelken (1859).—Prose: Studiën en Schetsen (1860).

E. J. Potgieter, Kritische Studiën, I; J. ten Brink, Geschiedenis Noord-Ned. letteren, I (1904, with biblio.); J. H. J. Willems, J. P. H. (1939). J.W.W.

Hasdeu, Bogdan Petriceiu (*Cristinesti, Bessarabia 16 II 1836 (? or 1838); ∞1864; †Câmpina 1907), Rumanian philologist, historian, poet and playwright. Hasdeu was educated at Kharkov and served in the Russian army whence he deserted when part of Bessarabia was re-annexed to Moldavia (1856) and became a Rumanian citizen. Deputy in 1857 and professor of history at Jassy university he went to Bucharest in 1864; he was appointed professor of comparative philology in 1873 and general director of the state archives in 1878. The death of his only daughter Julia was a great blow and made him take up spiritualism. He spent his last years working on a huge etymological dictionary but only finished the first three volumes which covered the letter 'A'.

Historical: Istoria toleranţei religiose in România (1865); Ion Vodă cel Cumplit (1865, 2nd ed. 1894); Istoria critica a Românilor (1875).—Philological: Cuvânte din Bătrâni (3 vols, 1870–81); Dict. limbei istorice şi poporane a Românilor (2 vols, I 1886, II 1892); Geneologia popoarelor balcanice (1894).—Verse: Rasvan Vodă (1869, 2nd ed. 1892); Poezii (1873); Trei crai de la răsărit (1879).

N. Iorga, Oamenii cari au fost (1911); I. Dragomirescu, Ideile şi faptele lui H. (1913); N. Apostolescu, H. şi Tocilescu (1913); A. Busuioceanu, Figurii şi carţi (1923); L. Marian, H. şi Russia (1925); L. Marian, H. şi Eminescu (1927). A.V.W.

Hasegawa Futabatei: see Futabatei Shimei.

Hassan ibn Thabit (†674), Arabic poet, of Medina. He started his poetical career before the rise of Islam, but is best known as the poet of the Prophet. He also served the first caliphs. S.M.S.

Hassaurek, Friedrich (*Vienna 8 X 1831; †Paris 3 X 1885), German-American poet; Lincoln's ambassador in Ecuador. From 1866 to 1882 he was the brilliant editor of the Cincinnatier Volksblatt.

Novel: The Secret of the Andes (1879).—Verse: Gedichte (1877).—Various: Four Years among Spanish-Americans (1867).

W. L. Wright Jr., in Dict. Am. Biog., VIII (1932). E.R.

Hassler, Hans Leo: see Schein, Johann Hermann.

Hataî, pseud. of Shah Ismail (*1486; †Ardabil 1524), Turkish poet, founder of the Safavid dynasty in Persia (1501), where he instituted Shiism as the state religion. His poems written in Azeri Turkish preach the Shii teaching in a varied style, a blend of religious emotion and political propaganda.

MSS not ed.; for a selection see: V. Minorsky, 'The Poetry of Shah Isma'il I', in Bull. School Or. Af. Studies, X (1942). F.İ.

Hātif of Isfahān, Sayd Ahmad (†Qum 1784), Persian poet, owes his fame mainly to his tarji' band, a mystical poem of remarkable beauty.

Divan-i Hātif (Tehran, 1933); tr. of tarji' band, in E. G. Browne, A Literary History of Persia, III (1928). E.Y.

Hatim al-Ta'i (c. 600), pre-Islamic Arabic poet. He is considered a paragon of generosity and is as such the subject of various romances in Persian and other Islamic languages. S.M.S.

Hattori Ransetsu: see Ransetsu.

Hätzlerin, Clara (fl. 1452–76), Augsburg professional scribe. One of her 'works', the so-called Liederbuch der C. H., is the most important 15th-century songbook: mainly Meistergesang, but also narrative, lyric and didactic poems, anonymous and by known writers—Teichner, Suchenwirt, Oswald von Wolkenstein etc.

Liederb. d. C. H., ed. C. Haltaus (1840), who believed C. H. to be a nun, part authoress and collector. F.P.P.

Hauch, Johannes Carsten (*Frederikshald 12 V 1790; ∞1829 Frederikke Elisabeth Brun Juul; †Rome 4 III 1872), Danish poet, playwright and novelist. The impressions he received as a child in Norway, where his father was a Danish government official, were of great importance to him later in life. Goethe and Shakespeare, and his admiration of Oehlenschläger, made him a convert to the romantic movement, but after Oehlenschläger had severely criticized his first poetic attempts he gave up poetry and became a distinguished zoologist. After many troubles he resumed his poetic attempts and became one of the great writers of early romanticism.

Hauch's dramas are often sinister, tragic and philosophic. His historical novels, inspired by Sir Walter Scott, reflect Hauch's philosophy of resignation and his contempt for superficial values. Hauch was greatest as a lyric poet, and his best poetry is the expression of a manly and heroic mind which despised the easy way, never sought fame or popularity and believed only in an ultimate righteousness.

Verse: Lyriske Digte (1842); Lyriske Digte og Romancer (1861).—Plays: Dramatiske Værker (3 vols, 1828–30); Svend Grathe (1841); Marsk Stig (1850); Søstrene paa Kinnekullen (1849); Tycho Brahes Ungdom (1852).—Novels: Vilhelm Zabern (1834); Guldmageren (1836); En polsk Familie (1839); Slottet ved Rhinen (1845); Robert Fulton (1853), tr. P. C. Sinding (1868).—Essays: Æsthetiske Afhandlinger og Recensioner (3 vols, 1855–69).—Memoirs: Minder fra min Barndom og Ungdom (1867); Minder fra min første Udenlandsrejse (1871).—Samlede Romaner og Fortællinger (7 vols, 1873–74); Samlede Digte (2 vols, 1891); Udvalgte Skrifter, ed. P. Schjærff (3 vols, 1926–29).

F. Rønning, J. C. H. (1890); H. og Ingemann, en Brevveksling (1933); K. Galster, C. H.'s Barndom og Ungdom (1930); K. Galster, C. H.'s Manddom og Alderdom (1935). E.B.

Hauenschild, Richard Georg Spiller Von: see Waldau, Max.

Hauff, Wilhelm (*Stuttgart 29 XI 1802; ∞1827; †ibid. 18 XI 1827), German writer, whose short career included editing Cotta's Morgenblatt. His easy success, winning personality and early death made him in some degree a legendary figure. He had the fluency of the born story-teller, but for all the easy charm of his fairy-tales his work was unoriginal; his 'Novellen' deriving from Tieck and Hoffmann, and his historical novel from Scott.

Mitteilungen aus den Memoiren des Satans (1826); Märchen: Almanach auf das Jahr 1826 (Tales, tr. Sybil Thesiger, 1905); Der Mann im Monde (1826); Lichtenstein (1826; tr. R. J. Craig, 1897); Phantasien im Bremen Ratskeller (1827; The Wine-Ghosts of Bremen, tr. E. Sadler and C. R. L. Fletcher, 1889); Jud Süss (1827); Die Bettlerin vom Pont des Arts (1827; tr. M. A. Faber, 1873); Das Bild des Kaisers (1827; tr. M. A. Faber, 1873).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. Gustav Schwab (36 vols, 1830 ff.); ed. O. Heuschele (4 vols, 1929); Neues aus Hauffs Lebenskreis, ed. K. Stenzel (1938).

H. Hofmann, W. H. (1902); H. Tidemann, W. H. in Bremen (1929). H.A.P.

Haughton, William (fl. 1598), English dramatist who collaborated with Day, Chettle and Yarington. He was sole author of the popular comedies, English-Men for my Money and Grim the Collier. Mentioned in Henslowe's Diary for 5 XI 1597, he is not heard of after Sept. 1602. B.L.J.

English-Men for my Money (1616), ed. W. W. Greg (1912), ed. A. C. Baugh (1917); Grim the Collier of Croydon (1662), repr. Tudor Facs. Texts (1912).

W. J. Lawrence, 'Englishmen for my money', in Rev. Eng. Studies (1925). J.R.B.

Haugwitz, August Adolf von (*Übigau 1645; †ibid. 1706), German dramatist. A follower of Gryphius and Lohenstein, he was a titled dilettante interested in the theatre and in historical studies. Besides some lyric poems he wrote a Maria Stuarda (1683) in the style of Gryphius; his Soliman (1684) treats the same subject as Lohenstein's Ibrahim Bassa.

Schuldige Unschuld oder Maria Stuarda Königin von Schottland (1683); Prodromus Poeticus oder Poetischer Vortrab (1684, includes dramas).

O. Neumann, Studien zum Leben und Werk des A. A. v. H. (Diss. Greifswald 1938); Huebner, Der Lausitzer Dichter A. A. v. H. (Progr. Trarbach 1885, Neuwied 1893); E. Lunding, Das schlesische Kunstdrama (Copenhagen 1940). L.W.F.

Haverkorn, Willem (*1753?; †Meerhuizen 29 IX 1826), Dutch playwright and poet, secretary and treasurer of the Amsterdam theatre (1795–1829).

Plays: Robbert de Vries (1777); Aleid van Poelgeest (1778); Claudius Civilis (1779).—Verse: Hilvarenbeek (1783); Poëzij (1784). J.W.W.

Haverschmidt, François, pseud. Piet Paaltjens (*Leeuwarden 14 II 1835; ∞1863 Jacoba J. M. Osti; †(suicide) Schiedam 19 I 1894), Dutch parson, humorous poet and prose writer. He wrote good sketches, Familie en Kennissen (1876), but used Heine's verse-technique for mild, student-like humour, inimitably pure in tone: an attempt at escape by the born hypochondriac who finally gave up the struggle.

Snikken en grimlachjes (1867), Sanglots et sourires, Fr. tr. F. L. A. de Jagher (n.d.).

J. ten Brink, Geschied. Noord-Ned. letteren, 3 (1904, with biblio.); J. Dyserinck, F. H. (1908); A. A. van Rijnbach, in Tijdschr. Ned. Taal en letterk, 51; P. van Valkenhoff, 'F. H. 1835–1935', in Boekenschouw, 29 (1935); K. H. de Raaf, 'F. H. en Piet Paaltjens', in De Schouw, 3 (1944). J.W.W.

Havius, Jacobus (*1637; †1680), Dutch playwright, god-child of Cats whose housekeeper his mother had been. He wrote a single drama after a story in Cats' Trouringh, Zariades en Odatis ofte geluckige droomliefde (1658). A.M.B.W.

Havlíček Borovský, Karel (*Borová 21 X 1821; †Prague 29 VII 1856), Czech critic, poet and journalist. In his student days in Prague (from 1838) Havlíček developed the two sentiments that were to govern his life—liberal rationalism and Czech patriotism. Expelled from a seminary as a free-thinker, he took up a tutor's post in Russia, to which country he was attracted by the pan-Slav sentiments that he shared with many young Czech intellectuals of the time. What he saw there disappointed him: his Russophile enthusiasm was damped by the tyranny of the tsarist regime. His impressions of his Russian sojourn were collected in his 'Pictures from Russia' which first appeared as articles in Czech journals. In the 1840s he was active as journalist and politician (he was a member of the Austrian Reichsrat), calling for constitutional reform and Czech national rights. These activities brought him into conflict with the Austrian authorities who in 1851 exiled him to Brixen in South Tirol. He returned home, infected with consumption, in 1855.

His literary achievement rests on his witty verse epigrams and satirical poems (Křest Svatého Vladimíra, 1876; 'Tyrolese Elegies', wr. 1852, pub. 1861; 'King Lávra', wr. 1854, pub. 1870) and on his rejuvenation of Czech prose style. In this latter respect he profoundly influenced later Czech critics and essayists.

Politické spisy, ed. Z. Tobolka (5 vols, 1900–03); Básnické spisy, ed. L. Quis (3 vols, 1906–08).—The Conversion of St Vladimir, tr. E. Altschul (1930.)

T. G. Masaryk, K. H. (1896); K. Nosovský, K. H. (2nd ed. 1932). R.A.

Hawes, STEPHEN (*c. 1475; †before 1530), English poet whose surviving work is dated 1504 to 1512. His most celebrated poem, The Pastime of Pleasure (written in 1506) unites the veins of romantic and didactic allegory: the lover-hero spends most time being instructed in school-learning. The literary possibilities of the form are, however, demonstrated not by Hawes but by The Faerie Queene.

The pastime of pleasure (1509), ed. W. E. Mead (1928).

J. M. Berdan, Early Tudor Poetry (1920). G.K.H.

Hawker, ROBERT STEPHEN (*Stoke Dameril, Devon 3 XII 1803; ∞1823 Charlotte Rawleigh, ∞1864 Pauline Kuczynski; †Plymouth 15 VIII 1875), English poet and antiquary, of marked poetic fervour, who gave antique colouring to his work, deceiving Dickens, Scott and Macaulay.

Quest of the Sangraal: Chant the First (1864); Cornish Ballads and other Poems (1869); Footprints of Former Men in Far Cornwall (1870).—Poetical Works, ed. Wallis (1899).

C. E. Byles, Life and Letters (1905); Rev. Sabine Baring-Gould, Memoir (1875).

In Mortimer Collins, Sweet and Twenty (3 vols, 1875) Canon Tremaine is drawn from Hawker. R.M.H.

Hawkesworth, JOHN (*1715 ?; †London 16 XI 1773), English miscellaneous writer —dramatist, reviewer, translator: co-founder with Johnson of The Adventurer (1752–54) to which he contributed about 72 essays: editor of Swift and of Cook's Voyages.

Edgar and Emmeline: a Fairy Tale (in 2 acts, 1761); Almoran and Hamet, an Oriental Tale (2 vols, 1761); ed. Account of Voyages undertaken by order of his present Majesty for making Discoveries in Southern Hemisphere (1773). R.M.H.

Hawkins, HENRY (*London 1572 ?; †Ghent 18 VIII 1646), English Jesuit, who studied at Rome, was imprisoned in England and translated Latin, Italian and French religious works. His own pious verse is above mediocrity.

Partheneia Sacra (1633). J.J.Y.L.

Hawkins, WILLIAM (*Oakington ? 1605; †Hadleigh VI 1637), English schoolmaster and clergyman, who wrote Latin verse, and a lyrical drama acted in Hadleigh school.

Apollo Shroving (1626), ed. H. G. Rhoads (1936). B.L.J.

Hawthorne, NATHANIEL (*Salem, Mass. 4 VII 1804; ∞1842 Sophia Peabody; †Plymouth, N.H. 19 V 1864), American short-story writer and novelist. His youth was solitary and introspective, but at Bowdoin College he made friends, including Longfellow and Franklin Pierce. From 1825 to 1837 he spent at Salem, writing. His first novel, Fanshawe (1828), is weak, but he gained recognition with Twice-Told Tales (1837). He worked in the Boston Custom House; lived a few months at Brook Farm; married and lived at 'Old Manse', Concord; returned to Salem as governor of the port. Here he wrote his most famous novel, The Scarlet Letter (1850), evoking the gloomy guilt-stained atmosphere of 17th-century Puritan New England. His next great novels appeared within two years: The House of the Seven Gables (1851) tells of an ancestral curse, The Blithedale Romance (1852) points satirically to his contemporaries at Brook Farm. After writing a campaign biography for President Pierce, he was sent abroad as U.S. consul. Rome was the setting for his last novel, The Marble Faun (1860), composed, he said, of 'figures in a dream'. He left four unfinished novels. In his hundred-odd tales and his four great novels Hawthorne achieved high artistic excellence and won the homage of Poe, Melville and James.

Mosses from an Old Manse (1846); The Snow-Image and Other Twice-Told Tales (1852); Tanglewood Tales for Girls and Boys (1853); The Dolliver Romance (1876); Doctor Grimshawe's Secret (1883).—The Complete Works of N. H. . . ., ed. G. P. Lathrop (12 vols, 1883); H.'s Short Stories, ed. N. Arvin (1946). —The American Notebooks of N. H., ed. R. Stewart (1932).

G. E. Woodberry, H. (1902); Henry James H. (1879); N. Arvin, H. (1929). H.L.C.

Hay, John Milton (*Salem, Ind. 8 X 1838; ∞1874 Clara Stone; †New Hampshire 1 VII 1905), American poet and historian; private secretary to Lincoln and ambassador to Great Britain. His literary recognition rests on his western dialect poems, Pike County Ballads (1871) and his ten-volume biography of Lincoln.

Jim Bludso of the Prairie Belle, and Little Breeches (1871); Castilian Days (1871); Abraham Lincoln: A History (with J. G. Nicolay, 1890).
T. Dennett, J. H.: From Poetry to Politics (1933). H.L.C.

Hayashi Razan, pseud. of Hayashi Tadashi, also called Dōshun (*Kaga VIII 1583; †Edo (=Tokyo) 6 III 1657), Japanese scholar and writer. A Confucianist and adviser to the shoguns Tokugawa Ieyasu and Iemitsu, he published extensively on philosophical, religious and historical subjects, and attacked Buddhism and Christianity.

Hai-yaso (1606; Ger. tr. H. Müller, in Mon. Nipponica, II, 1939). E.B.C.

Hayashi Shunsai, pseud. of Hayashi Jo, also called Hayashi Gahō (*Kyoto 1618; †Edo (=Tokyo) 1 VI 1680), Japanese writer, son of Hayashi Razan, compiled numerous historical works for the shogun, Tokugawa Iemitsu.

Nihon ōdai ichiran 1663; Fr. tr. H. J. Klaproth, 1835); Honchō tsugan (1670). E.B.C.

Haydon, Benjamin Robert (*Plymouth 26 I 1786; ∞1821 Mary Hymans; †London 22 VI 1846), English painter of vast heroic canvasses, admired by Wordsworth, Scott, Keats and other romantics.

The Judgment of Connoisseurs upon Works of Art compared with that of Professional Men, in reference more particularly to Elgin Marbles (2 vols, 1816).—Autobiography and Journals, ed. Tom Taylor (1853; reissued with preface by Aldous Huxley, 1926).
F. W. Haydon, H., his Correspondence and Table Talk (with memoir, 1876); C. Olney, B. R. H. (1952). R.H.M.

Hayley, William (*Chichester 29 X 1745; ∞1769 Eliza Ball, ∞1809 Mary Welford; †Felpham 12 XI 1820), English versifier, biographer of Cowper and friend of Blake, whose poetry marks the nadir of 18th-century decadence.

Triumph of Temper (1781); Philosophical Essay on Old Maids (3 vols, 1785); Life of Milton (1794); Life of Cowper (1803); Memoirs of Hayley, ed. J. Johnson (1823).—Poetical Works (3 vols, 1785).
M. Bishop, Blake's H. (1951). R.M.H.

Hayne, Paul Hamilton (*Charleston, S.C. 1 I 1830; ∞1852 Mary Michel; †Groveton, Ga. 6 VII 1886), American poet. One of the writers of the Old South who founded Russell's Magazine, he supported the Confederacy and after the civil war retreated to Georgia to write poetry.

Poems (1855); The Mountain of the Lovers (1875); The Broken Battalions (1885); A Collection of Hayne Letters, ed. D. M. McKeithan (1944).
A. C. Gordon Jr., in Dict. Amer. Biog. (1932). H.L.C.

Haywood, Mrs Eliza Fowler (*1693 ?; †London 25 II 1756), English novelist whose voluminous output includes tales of trials and triumphs of virtue, and chronicles of contemporary scandals thinly veiled as fiction.

Love in Excess, or the Fatal Enquiry (1724); Memoirs of a certain island adjacent to Utopia (1725); Secret History of Present Intrigues (1727); Female Spectator (1744–46); Collected ed. of novels, plays, poems (1724); Secret Histories, Novels and Poems (1725). R.M.H.

Hazlitt, William (*Maidstone 10 IV 1778; ∞1808 Sarah Stoddart, o|o1822; ∞1824 Mrs Bridgewater; †London 18 IX 1830), English essayist and critic. Hazlitt's father hoped that William would follow him as a Unitarian minister but this idea was given up and Hazlitt worked for a while as a painter, and eventually devoted his considerable mental energy to public lecturing and journalism. His essays spring from the desire to entertain and to teach: didacticism stiffens the discursive general essay while humour and anecdote enliven the lecture. In prose Hazlitt achieved a control and sophistication he lacked in life, though his mask of honesty and urbanity often disguises violent prejudice. His marriages were unhappy, so was his love for Sarah Walker; he was diffident and moody and suffered from unscrupulous attacks in the press; but his capacity for friendship and for every kind of human activity—from metaphysics to prize-fights—brought him happiness.

Complete Works, ed. P. P. Howe (mainly essays, 20 vols and index, 1930–34); Liber Amoris and Dramatic Criticisms (1948).
P. P. Howe, The Life of W. H. (1928 rev. ed.); C. M. Maclean, Born Under Saturn (1943). B.H.

Head, Sir Francis Bond (*Higham, Kent 1793; ∞1816 Julia Somerville; †Croydon 20 VII 1875), English author whose books give spirited accounts of travel, rough riding, and engineering feats.

Rough Notes of Journeys in the Pampas and Andes (1826); Life of Bruce (1830); Bubbles from the Brunnens of Nassau: by an Old Man (1834); Fortnight in Ireland (1852); The Horse and his Rider (1860); Stokers and Pokers (railway construction and maintenance in N.W.; 1849); High and Dry (construction of tubular bridges; 1849). R.M.H.

Head, RICHARD (*Ireland 1637; †1687), English miscellaneous prose writer, who wrote most of Part I of The English Rogue. Almost murdered in childhood in the Irish Rebellion (1641), he was drowned crossing to the Isle of Wight.

B.L.J.

The English Rogue described in the life of Merton Latroon (1665, repr. 1928); The Floating Island (1673); Canting Academy . . . a compleate Canting Dictionary (1673).

J.R.B.

Healey, JOHN (†1610), English translator, whose version of The City of God has been criticized as too copious, but remained unique until 1871. His Epictetus is terse.

Epictetus his Manuall (1610; adds Theophrastus his Morall Characters, 1616; 1636); St Augustine, Of the Citie of God (1610; 1620), ed. R. V. G. Tasker (1945). B.L.J.

Hearn, LAFCADIO (*Santa Maura, Greece 27 VI 1850; ∞1891 Setsuko Koizumi; †Tokyo, Japan 26 IX 1904), American journalist who drifted to the United States after a meagre education in France and England. He wrote for newspapers, mainly on the tropics and exotic primitive lore. He was sent to Japan by Harper's Magazine, married a Japanese woman and became a citizen. Most notable are his twelve books on Japan which attempt to interpret the Orient to the occidental mind.

Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan (1894); Japanese Fairy Tales (1898–1903); Japan: An Attempt at Interpretation (1904); The Writings of L. H. (16 vols, 1922).

V. McWilliams, L. H. (1946); E. Bisland, The Life and Letters of L. H. (2 vols, 1906).

H.L.C.

Hearne, THOMAS (*White Waltham, Berks VII 1678; †Oxford 10 VI 1735), English antiquary who, as under-librarian of the Bodleian, catalogued MSS and coins, edited many early English chronicles and curious tractates, and kept an outspoken diary.

Reliquiae Bodleianae: or some genuine remains of Thomas Bodley (1703); Itinerary, ed. J. Leland (9 vols, 1710–12).—The Lives of Leland, Hearne and Wood, ed. W. Huddesford (1772); Remarks and Collections of T. H., ed. C. E. Doble (11 vols, 1885–1921).

R.M.H.

Heavysege, CHARLES (*Liverpool, England 1816; †Montreal 1876), Canadian poet and dramatist. He went to Canada in 1853 and settled in Montreal where he became a journalist.

The Revolt of Tartarus (1852); Sonnets (1855); Saul, a drama (1857).

M.H.M.M.

Hebbel, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH (*Wesselburen (Holstein) 18 III 1813; †Vienna 13 XII 1863), German dramatist, poet, short-story writer, critic, literary theorist. The son of a stone-mason, Hebbel grew up in dire poverty, which left deep marks on his outlook and his writings. He was mainly self-educated, but owed much to the patronage of a woman novelist, Amalia Schoppe. He studied for a time at Heidelberg and Munich, began to develop his original theories of tragedy about 1839, and wrote his first play, Judith, in 1840. In 1842 he visited Copenhagen and received from king Christian VIII a travelling scholarship, which took him to Paris and Italy. In Paris he wrote the greater part of Maria Magdalena (1843), a realistic tragedy of common life which foreshadows Ibsen. His travels were embarrassed by perpetual financial difficulties, and by the strains caused by his long-standing liaison with Elise Lensing, a woman eight years older than himself. His visit to Italy (1844–45) was of little importance in his development, but in 1845 he went to Vienna. Here he married a well-known actress, Christine Enghaus, and settled down for the remainder of his life, in easier circumstances than hitherto. In Vienna he wrote a series of important plays, all (except for Agnes Bernauer) in verse: Herodes und Mariamne (1850), Agnes Bernauer (1852), Gyges und sein Ring (1856), Die Nibelungen (1862)—a trilogy—and the unfinished Demetrius (originally planned as a continuation of Schiller's uncompleted work). He also wrote a number of minor plays, of which Julia (1851) is probably the best, several short stories, none of them very satisfactory, lyric poems, an epic poem (Mutter und Kind, 1859), a great deal of criticism and dramatic theory, and extremely interesting letters and diaries. His view of life is gloomy and harsh: he believes that tragedy is the inevitable outcome of individual existence, for the strong or remarkable individual is bound to come into conflict with the 'Idee'—'the moral centre which conditions everything'—and to be crushed in the conflict. Moreover, he generally deals with characters whose psychological processes are excessively complicated and often savage. He is a thinker of great interest and considerable originality, and his dramas usually display much subtlety of technique and a remarkable knowledge of stagecraft. He is undoubtedly one of Germany's greatest dramatists.

Plays: Genoveva (1841); Der Diamant (1841); Ein Trauerspiel in Sizilien (1847); Der Rubin (1849); Michel Angelo (1850); Epilog zur Genoveva (1851).—Stories: Erzählungen und Novellen (1855).—Poems: Gedichte (1842); Neue Gedichte (1848); Gedichte, Gesamt-Ausgabe (1857).—Sämtliche Werke. Historisch-kritische Ausgabe, ed. R. M. Werner (24 vols, 1901–07.).

T. M. Campbell, The life and works of F. H. (1919); E. Kuh, Biographie F. H.s (1912); E. Purdie, F. H. (1932); G. Brychan Rees, F. H. as a dramatic Artist (1930). A.H.J.K.

Hebel, Johann Peter (*Basel 11 V 1760; †Schwetzingen 22 IX 1826), German dialect poet. The son of linen-weavers, Hebel was enabled by patrons to study theology. He took orders, taught at Lörrach and Karlsruhe and became head of the ecclesiastical school authority of Baden, 1819. Goethe considered him among the greatest dialect poets. By using the Alemannic dialect of his country home he idyllically recreated the atmosphere and scenes of his youth, with loving humour and a certain naïve anthropomorphism. His poems are delightful because genuine through and through; as are his prose tales, which set out to provide wholesome fare for simple readers.

Alemannische Gedichte (1803); Schatzkästlein des rhein. Hausfreundes (1811); Rheinischer Hausfreund, oder allerlei Neues an Spass und Ernst (1814 ff.).—Sämtliche Werke, ed. A. Sütterlin (4 vols, 1911); Briefe, ed. W. Zentner (1939).

A. Altwegg, J. P. H. (1935); S. Löffler, J. P. H., Wesen und Wurzeln seiner dichterischen Welt (1944); H. Bürgisser, H. als Erzähler (1929). H.A.P.

Heber, Reginald, bishop of Calcutta (*Malpas 21 IV 1783; ∞1807 Amelia Shipley; †Trichinopoly 2 IV 1826), English writer whose hymns and poems show gentle poetic talent which vast diocesan labours, mirrored in his smoothly written accounts of his Indian journeys, left little time to develop.

Journey throu India from Calcutta to Bombay: Journey to Madras and Southern Provinces (1826).—Poetical Works (1841).

G. Smith, Bishop Heber (1895); A. Heber, Life (2 vols, 1830, with corres.). R.M.H.

Hecataeus (*Miletus before 525 B.C.), Greek historian and geographer; played a prominent part in the Ionian revolt against Persia (500–494). Author of Genealogies, dealing mainly with legendary history, and of Ges Periodos (voyage round the world), which included a map. He is the most important of the early Ionian logographers, out of whose 'accounts' grew not only history and geography, but also narrative fiction. Much used and criticized by Herodotus.

F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griech. Historiker, I (1923).—J. Wells, 'The Genuineness of the Ges Periodos of Hecataeus', in Jour. Hell. Studies, 29 (1909); L. Pearson, Early Ionian Historians (1939); J. O. Thomson, History of Ancient Geography (1948). R.B.

Hecker, Willem (*Groningen 12 V 1817; ∞1846 Cornelia Reyers; †Delft 15 I 1909), Dutch poet; 1855 professor of history at Groningen. He wrote satires against De Gids, Beets and the almanac poets.

Hippokreen ontzwaveling (1838); Quos ego (1844).

H. Hermans, in Groninger Volksalmanak (1910); J. Huizinga, in Academia Groningana (1914). J.W.W.

Hedāyat: see Hidāyat.

Hedberg, Frans (*Stockholm 2 III 1828; †ibid. 8 VI 1908), Swedish author. After being an indifferent actor, Hedberg proceeded to write, translate and adapt some 300 plays; they were extremely popular during the '50s and '60s, but are now quite out of date. His poems (Dikter, 1866 and Efterskörd, 1898) are mainly symbolic interpretations of nature; his short stories (Svart på hvitt, 3 vols, 1876–79) realistically depict bourgeois Stockholm, and his skerries tales (Stockholmslif och skärgårdsluft, 1887) follow the same lines as Strindberg's Hemsöborna.

G. Rydell, Adertonhundratalets historiska skådespel i Sverige före Strindberg (1928). C.H.K.

Hedborn, Samuel (*Heda 14 X 1783; †Askeryd 26 XII 1849), Swedish clergyman and poet; zealous follower of Atterbom. Much of his verse was unoriginal, but his best lyrics on popular subjects had an unaffected charm. After 1812 he turned to hymn-writing, with emphasis on simple, straightforward and unpretentious piety.

Samlade skrifter, ed. P. D. A. Atterbom (2 vols, 1853).

T. Fogelqvist, En lyrikers livsöde (1937). C.H.K.

Heelu, Jan van, alias Jan van Leeuwe, Dutch late-13th-century poet. His description of the battle of Worringen in 1288 between Brabant and Guelders, preceded by a history of Brabant in two volumes, is partly a romance of chivalry, partly a chronicle in verse.

Ed. J. F. Willems (1836). J.J.M.

Heemskerk, JOHAN VAN (*Amsterdam 1597; †27 II 1656), Dutch poet and writer, member of the supreme court, attorney of the East India Company. He wrote a great number of love songs, translated even more and is best known for his Batavische Arcadia (1647). It is a pastoral novel of a peculiar kind since the amorous adventures of shepherds and shepherdesses give way to folk-lore treated in scholarly fashion. He was also a prolific translator from French and English.

Inleidinghe tot het ontwerp van een Bataafsche Arcadia (1637); Batavische Arcadia, ed. W. P. Wolters and H. C. Rogge (n.d.).

Jan ten Brink, 'Sidney en de Arcadias', in Letterk. Opstellen, II; D. H. Smit, J. v. H. (1933); R. W. Zandvoort, 'J. v. H. als vertaler en navolger van Philip Sidney', in Nieuwe Taalgids, 37 (1942). A.M.B.W.

Heere, LUCAS DE (*Ghent 1534; †Paris ? 1584), Dutch painter and poet. In his Hof en Boomgaard der Poesiën (1565) old genres of the Rederijkers alternate with the new ones as odes, epigrams and sonnets (the first in Dutch literature), partly adaptations of Clément Marot. Heere also wrote Psalmen Davids in verse and a Corte Beschryvinghe van Engeland, Schotland ende Irland which is important because of its folk-lore.

Corte Beschryvinghe, ed. T. Chotzen and M. Draak (1937).

M. Rudelsheim, in Oud-Holland, XXI; S. Eringa, La Renaissance et les rhétoriqueurs néerlandais (1920); W. A. P. Smit, Dichters der Reformatie (1939). J.J.M.

Hegel, GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH (*Stuttgart 27 VIII 1770; †Berlin 14 XI 1831), German philosopher; from 1818 professor in Berlin. Hegel was the last to attempt a synthesis of metaphysics, logic, law, history and science, classified in three main departments: logic, philosophy of nature and philosophy of mind, held together by the identity of thought and reality. His 'philosophy of history' (he coined the term Geschichtsphilosophie) is based on the triple 'dialectic' sequence of thesis, antithesis and synthesis; it culminates in the apotheosis of the state ('God walking upon earth') as the fountain-head of all moral and social values, not bound by international law and always overriding the interests of the individual.

Hegel's influence has been very wide (Bosanquet, Collingwood, Croce, Gentile); his greatest disciples in the field of applied Geschichtsphilosophie were Friedrich Julius Stahl (1802–61), the theorist of Prussian conservatism, and Karl Marx, the founder of dialectic materialism.

Neue Kritische Gesamtausgabe, ed. J Hoffmeister (32 vols, 1952 ff.; standard ed.); Philosophy of History, tr. J. Sibree (1857); Philosophy of Fine Art, tr. B. Bosanquet (1886); Science of Logic, tr. W. H. Johnston and L. G. Struthers (1929); Philosophy of Right, tr. T. M. Knox (1942).

E. Caird, H. (1883; best monograph in English); W. T. Stace, The Philosophy of H. (1924). S.H.S.

Hegemon OF THASOS (5th century B.C.), the originator of parody as a literary form; his Gigantomachia and other such works were successful in competition at Athens.

T. Kock, Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, I (1880); P. Brandt, Corpusculum poesis graecae epicae ludibundae, I (1888). E.W.H.

Hegesippus: see JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS.

Hegius (VAN HEEK), ALEXANDER (*c. 1430; †Deventer 27 XII 1498), German humanist, from 1474 head of the Deventer school. His fame rests on his abolition of the medieval curriculum. Erasmus was, and many humanists claimed to be, his pupil. His Oposcula (Deventer 1501–02) include hymns to the Virgin in Latin hexameters.

A. Roersch, L'humanisme belge (1910). F.P.P.

Heiberg, JOHAN LUDVIG (*Copenhagen 14 XII 1791; ∞1831 Johanne Luise Pätges; †ibid. 25 VIII 1860), Danish critic, playwright and poet. He was the son of P. A. Heiberg and Thomasine Gyllembourg and after their separation he lived with an aunt and K. L. Rahbek. He studied at Copenhagen, 1819–22 he lived with his father in Paris and was Danish lector at Kiel from 1822 to 1825. Here he became an adherent of Hegel's philosophy. From 1825 he settled in Copenhagen where, at his zenith, he became the dictator of literary taste. For a time he was the director of the royal theatre. He was a gifted dramatic critic and an intellectual aristocrat, with a contempt for the common herd, more concerned with form than content.

Heiberg attempted to revivify Danish drama by importing French vaudeville, but he also wrote some romantic plays, such as Elverhøj and Syvsoverdag, in which there is an interplay between the worlds of poetic reality and of pedestrian reality. His finest dramatic achievement is the apocalyptic comedy En Sjæl efter Døden ('A Soul after Death'), the satire of which is directed against the 'average' citizen, whose soulless existence Heiberg despised. His best poetry is in his plays and in his Hegelian poems of reflexion, especially Protestantismen i Naturen.

PLAYS: Marionetteater (1814); Tycho Brahes Spaadom (1819); Julespøg og Nytaarsløjer (1816); Kong Salomon og Jørgen Hattemager (1825); Aprilsnarrene (1825); Recensenten og Dyret (1826); De Uadskillelige (1827); Elverhøj (1828); De Danske i Paris (1832); Nej (1836); Alferne (1835); Syvsoverdag (1840).—VERSE: Poetisk Kalender (1819); Nye Digte (1841); Gadeviser (1849).—ESSAYS and VARIOUS: Om den menneskelige Frihed (1824); Om Vaudevillen som dramatisk Digtart (1826); Udsigt over den skønne danske Litteratur (1831): Om Filosofiens Betydning for den nyere Tid (1833); Intelligensblade (4 vols, 1842–44).—Skuespil (7 vols, 1833–41); Digte og Fortællinger (2 vols, 1834–35); Prosaiske Skrifter (3 vols, 1841–43); Breve fra og til J. L. H. (1862); Poetiske Skrifter i Udvalg, ed. Carl S. Petersen (3 vols, 1931–32).

P. Hansen, Om J. L. H. (1867); Johanne Luise Heiberg, Et Liv, gjenoplevet i Erindringen (1891–92); J. Clausen, Omkring det Heibergske Hus (1934); Heibergske Familiebreve, ed. M. Borup (1943); Fra det Heibergske Hjem. Johan Ludvig og Johanne Luise Heibergs indbyrdes Brevveksling, ed. A. Friis (1940); Breve og Aktstykker vedrørende J. L. H. (5 vols, 1946–50). E.B.

Heiberg, JOHANNE LUISE, née Pätges (*Copenhagen 22 XI 1812; ∞1831 Johan Ludvig Heiberg; †ibid. 21 XII 1890), Danish actress, playwright and authoress. She was the leading lady of the royal theatre of Copenhagen, but her literary merits are less dependent upon her entertaining, harmless vaudevilles than upon her fascinating memoirs.

PLAYS: En Søndag paa Amager (1848); Abekatten (1849); En Sommeraften (1853).—MEMOIRS: Et Liv, gjenoplevet i Erindringen (4 vols, 1891–92, new ed. 1945).

C. Bergsøe, J. L. H. (1896); R. Neiiendam, J. L. H. En Analyse (1917). E.B.

Heiberg, PETER ANDREAS (*Vordingborg 16 XI 1758; ∞1790 Thomasine Buntzen; †Paris 30 IV 1841), Danish poet and playwright. After restless, youthful years, Heiberg settled in Denmark as an employee of the notary of Copenhagen. In his prose works, particularly Rigsdalersedlens Hændelser (1789–93), his plays and poems, many of them written privately for his club friends, he satirized the haughtiness of nobility, nepotism and Danish snobbery of German manners and language. His radical ideas were inspired by the French Revolution, and his satires against the Danish government and the king eventually resulted in a legal action against him. In 1799 Heiberg was sentenced to exile, and he spent the rest of his life in Paris. His critical and satirical prose is often good journalism, and his best poems are full of searing irony.

PROSE: Holger Tyske (1789); De Vonner og de Vanner (1792).—PLAYS: Poverty and Wealth (in Eng., 1799); Samlede Skuespil, ed. K. L. Rahbek (4 vols, 1806–19).—Udvalgte Skrifter (1884).

Johanne Luise Heiberg, P. A. H. og Thomasine Gyllembourg (1883); Breve fra P. A. H., ed. J. L. Heiberg (1883); C. Thaarup, P. A. H. (1883); Henrik Jæger, En gammel Kærlighedshistorie (1891); H. Schwanenflügel, P. A. H. (1891). E.B.

Heine, HEINRICH, originally HARRY (*Düsseldorf 13 XII 1797; ~1825; ∞Paris 31 VIII 1848 Eugenie (Mathilde) Mirat; †Paris 17 II 1856), German poet. Of Jewish parentage, Heine was launched in a commercial career by his uncle Salomon Heine, with whose daughter Amalie he fell unavailingly in love. His uncle then enabled him to study law at Bonn and (1821) Berlin, where he published his first poems and moved in literary circles. The success of the Reisebilder (1826) enabled him to leave law for writing, and after travels and the vain hope of a professorship in Munich he finally settled in Paris 1831, interpreting the French to the Germans and the Germans to the French. After 1848 he gradually became paralysed, showing great courage during years in the 'Matratzengruft', and consoled by 'Mouche' (Elise Konnitz). Beginning in the romantic tradition, Heine rapidly came to be regarded as a leader of Young Germany. Abroad his fame equalled Goethe's: in Germany he was at once admired and mistrusted. A brilliant chameleon, unsparing in mockery—he gave reason for mistrust. His tone was individual, sometimes to the verge of pose. Whilst he could write lyrics of pure feeling, or simple ballads, with consummate mastery, the ironical twist, the calculated shock, was never far away. Prose he fired with lightness, speed and wit; most characteristically in the feuilleton or sketch. Sometimes showy, he was never dull; if even his journalistic writings still hold far more than mere historical interest, it is by virtue of the constant play of a mercurial intelligence.

Gedichte (1822); Tragödien nebst einem lyrischen Intermezzo (1823); Buch der Lieder (1827); Französische Zustände (1833); Die Romantische Schule (1836); Der Salon (4 vols, 1834 ff.); Atta Troll (1843); Neue Gedichte (1844); Romanzero (1851).—Complete Works, tr. C. G. Leland and others (12 vols, 1891–1905); Sämtliche Werke, ed. E. Elster (7 vols, 1887–90); Werke, ed. O. Walzel (10 vols, 1910–15).—Briefe, Gesamtausgabe, ed. F. Hirth (4 vols, 1948–51); Gespräche, ed. H. H. Houben (1926).

Biogs by H. G. Atkins (1929); H. Walter (1930); M. Brod (1934); P. Beyer, Der junge H. (1911); W. Victor, Mathilde (1931); S. Vacano, H. und Sterne (1922); Ilse Weidekampf, Traum und Wirklicheit in der Romantik und bei H. (1932); E. Brauweiler, Heines Prosa (1915); A. Spaeth, La pensée de H. (1946); J. A. Hess, Heine's view of German traits of character (New York, 1929). H.A.P.

Heinrich der Glichezare (fl. c. 1180–85), Alsatian (cleric?), author of Reinhart Fuchs. (Source: an antecedent of the extant Roman de Renart.) Beside the social satire implicit in characters and episodes the German poet has possibly added anti-Hohenstaufen features. The work cannot have been a success, either in its original version (of which fragments only are preserved) or in a considerably later revision (two 14th-century MSS). A Low German translation of the Dutch Reinke de Vos on the other hand was often printed (from 1498); Gottsched's prose translation (1752) was utilized by Goethe (1794). Doubts have been raised whether 'der Glichezare' ('the dissembler') is part of the poet's name.

Reinhart Fuchs, ed. K. Reissenberger (2nd ed. 1908), G. Baesecke (1925); F. Prien–A. Leitzmann, Reinke de Vos (1925). F.P.P.

Heinrich Julius, Duke of Brunswick (*Schloss Hessen 16 X 1564; †Prague 30 VI 1613), German dramatist. His marriage to Elizabeth of Denmark brought him into contact with English players at the Danish court, whom he invited to Wolfenbüttel in 1593. He engaged the troupe of Thomas Sackeville in 1596. His love of display and interest in the arts had already led him to attempt dramatic writing himself to contribute to court entertainment. His Vincentius Ladislaus and Von einem ungeratenen Sohn foreshadow baroque comedy and tragedy respectively.

Works, ed. W. L. Holland, in Bibl. lit. Ver. Stuttgart, XXXVI (1855); selected plays, ed. J. Tittmann (1880); Vincentius Ladislaus, ed. R. Froning, in Kürschner's Dt. Nat.-Lit., XXII (1892) and W. Flemming, in Dt. Lit. in Entw., Barockkomödie (1931); Buler und Bulerin, ed. W. Flemming, in Dt. Lit. in Entw., Schauspiel der Wanderbühne (1931).

A. Diephold, Orationes et epicediae (Helmstedt, 1614); F. Brüggemann, Versuch einer Zeitfolge der Dramen des Herzogs H. J. v. Braunschweig (1926); W. Pfützenreither, H. J. und der norddeutsche Späthumanismus (Diss. Münster, 1936); A. H. J. Knight, H. J. Duke of Brunswick (1948); A. Cohn, Shakespeare in Germany (1865). L.W.F.

Heinrich von dem Türlin (fl. 1215–20), Austrian burgher poet, compiler of Die Krone, an enormous but utterly trivial hotch-potch of episodes from French and German Arthurian tales, frightening in its proximity to the medieval classics. His Mantel (evidently the Lancelot story) is a fragment. He was without influence.

Ed. F. Scholl (1852); excerpts and a summary in Kürschner's Dt. Nat.-Lit., Vol. IV, ii; O. Warnatsch, Der Mantel (1883). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Freiberg (fl. 1290), German poet. Saxon by birth; burgher. For a Bohemian noble, Reinmunt v. Lichtenburg, he wrote a sequel to Gottfr. v. Strassburg's Tristan, following Eilhart v. Oberg and Ulrich v. Türheim for the story. It has been found 'not unworthy' as a sequel; in its own rights it compares well with the poetry of 1300. A poem on the Legend of the Cross and (doubtfully) two other works are ascribed to him.

Ed. A. Bernt (1906); C. v. Kraus, Studien zu H. v. F. (Münchener S. B., 1941). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Laufenberg (fl. 1415–58), principal German hymn-writer of the 15th century; Swiss by birth, priest of Freiburg i. Br.; also one of many versifiers of the Speculum humanæ salvationis (1437).

Ph. Wackernagel, Das dt. Kirchenlied, II (1864). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Meissen: see FRAUENLOB.

Heinrich von Melk (fl. 1160), Austrian satirist; lay-brother of Melk abbey (?). His poems, Von des tôdes gehugede (= memento mori) and the Priesterleben, are a fanatical call to repentance. Much of the indictment is common form, but he paints graphic scenes (a priest and his light o' love counting the takings, for example); his references to the stately dance, love songs (trûtliet) and gallantry of the nobility are invaluable.

R. Heinzel, H. v. M. (1867; ed. and study); complete also in Kürschner's Dt. Nat.-Lit., IX. F.P.P.

Heinrich von Morungen (nr Sangerhausen; fl. 1196–98; †1222), Thuringian minnesinger; ministerialis attested at the court of margrave Dietrich of Meissen, the later patron of Walther v. d. Vogelweide. He finally retired to the monastery of St Thomas in Leipzig, became something of a legend and usurped the title-rôle in the ballad of the returning crusader, der edle Moringer. He wrote, with the exception of one outstanding Tagelied (q.v.), Minnesang only, following the Provençal rather than the German poets, though the influence of Heinrich v. Veldeke has been noted. His influence on Walther is certain. He is the most lyrical of the minnesinger: for depth and range of feeling, imagery and resourcefulness in verse forms he is probably superior to them all.

Ed. C. v. Kraus (1925); Minnesangs Frühling, ed. K. Lachmann–C. v. Kraus (1944); Der edle Moringer, ed. J. Meier (Dt. Lit. in Entw.-Reihen, Balladen, I, 1935); appreciation and some translations in M. F. Richey, Essays on Med. Germ. Love Lyric (1943). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Mügeln (*Mügeln nr Oschatz c. 1320; †1372), German poet, one of the 'Twelve Masters' and best known for his Meistergesang and fables. Of burgher birth, he was court poet to Charles IV in Prague and to Rudolf IV of Austria; to the former his major work, Der Meide Kranz (1355; based on Alain de Lille's Anticlaudianus), is dedicated. Further: translations from Valerius Maximus and Nicholas of Lyra; Latin and German drafts of a Hungarian chronicle. He is a useful guide to the state of pre-renaissance learning; his style is ornate.

Dt. Liederdichter, ed. K. Bartsch–W. Golther (1928); H. Arens–A. Hübner, Frühe dt. Lyrik (1935); Der Meide Kranz, ed. W. Jahr (1908). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Neustadt (fl. 1312), Viennese physician and author of the first German version of the Historia Apollonii, enormously extended to include adventures freely derived from the court epic and Byzantine tales (with some contemporary satire), and of the devotional Von Gottes Zukunft which, starting with Alain de Lille's Anticlaudianus, goes on to adapt parts of the Legenda Aurea and, in one MS., the Visio Philiberti.

Werke, ed. S. Singer (1906). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Nördlingen (fl. 1332), lay preacher in Nördlingen and (after flight to Avignon in 1335) from 1338 in Constance and Basel. Translated the revelations of Mechthild v. Magdeburg into High German and was correspondent and adviser of Margarethe Ebner. F.P.P.

Heinrich von Rugge (fl. 1175–91), Swabian minnesinger, ministerialis in the service of the count palatine of Tübingen. His Minnesang is conventional. Interesting is his Leich (q.v.) in which commemoration of the dead (Frederick Barbarossa and his fellow-crusaders), a call to the Cross and reflections on courtly love enter an uneasy alliance.

Dt. Liederdichter, ed. K. Bartsch–W. Golther (1928). F.P.P.

Heinrich von Veldeke (fl. 1170–90), German poet, ministerialis of the counts of Looz (Limburg). His Eneide, based on the Roman d'Eneas (c. 1160) of an unnamed Norman poet, established standards of description, characterization, diction and verse, besides transmitting a body of classical lore. It was 'lost' from 1170, recovered and completed towards 1190 at the Thuringian court. Eneide and Servatius (a legend—unimportant) come down to us in a Middle Rhenish koine. Heinrich's lyrics (in the Limburg dialect ?) are light in texture; Gottfried v. Strassburg's extravagant praise (Tristan 4723 sq.) seems, disconcertingly, to cover them too. (See Eilhart v. Oberg.)

Eneide, ed. O. Behaghel (1882); Sinte Servatius, ed. G. van Es (1948); excerpts from Eneit and Servatius complete in Kürschner's Dt. Nat.-Lit., IV, i.—Lyrics: Minnesangs Frühling, ed. K. Lachmann–C. v. Kraus (1944).

G. Jungbluth, Untersuchungen zu H. v. V. (1937; denies him Servatius); Th. Frings and G. Schieb, Drei V.-Studien (1947). F.P.P.

Heinse, Johann Jakob Wilhelm (*Langewiesen, Thuringia 16 II 1749; †Aschaffenburg 22 VI 1803), German novelist. After studying at Jena and Erfurt Heinse was assisted by Gleim and then by Georg Jacobi at Düsseldorf. In 1780 he went to Italy, returning in 1781. Ardinghello, the result of his Italian journey, made him famous. After 1786 Heinse, by then a Roman Catholic, served the archbishop of Mainz. Deeply interested in the ancients and in renaissance Italy Heinse wrote with passion and penetration, though without discipline. His eroticism foreshadows the romantics' attitude to women. He translated Ariosto and Tasso.

Sinngedichte (1771); Ardinghello und die glückseligen Inseln (1787).—Sämtliche Schriften (10 vols, 1838); Werke (10 vols, 1902–26).

J. Schober, J. J. W. H. Sein Leben und seine Werke (1882); E. Utitz, J. J. W. H. und die Ästhetik zur Zeit der deutschen Aufklärung (1906); A. Leitzmann, W. H. in Zeugnissen seiner Zeitgenossen (1938). H.B.G.

Heinsius, Daniel (*Ghent 9 I 1580; ∞1617 Ermgard Rutgers; †Leyden 25 II 1655), Dutch philologist and poet, professor at Leyden. Of his contemporary European fame as a poet and scholar little has survived. His Poemata (1605) is trash, his Latin prose is sometimes elegant, more often however over-ornate. Of his poems in Dutch, Lof-sanck van Jesus Christus (1615) deserves to be mentioned as an early example of baroque poetry.

Iambi (1602); Auriacus (1602); Nederduytsche Poemata (1622); Rerum ad Sylvam Ducis . . . anno 1629 gestarum historia (1631); Herodes Infanticida (1632); Operum historicorum collectio (1673); numerous eds of classical writers.
D. J. H. Ter Horst, D. H. (1934); W. A. P. Smit, De dichter Revius (1928); Th. Weevers, 'The Influence of H. on Two Genres of the German Baroque', in Jour. Eng. Ger. Philol., 37 (1938) and 'Some Aspects of H.'s Influence on the Style of Opitz', in Mod. Lang. Rev., 34 (1939); G. A. v. Es, Barokke lyriek van Protestantsche dichters (1946); J. E. Sandys, History of Classical Scholarship, II (1908); E. G. Kern, The Influence of H. and Vossius upon French Dramatic History (1949).
J.J.M.

Heinsius Jr., Nicolaes (*1656; †1718), Dutch novelist, studied medicine, exiled for manslaughter, court physician to Christina of Sweden, from 1695 at Kuilenburg, where he published his well-written picaresque novel, Den Vermakelijken Avonturier (1695, Ger. tr. 1714, Eng. 1730, Fr. 1729, Ital. (from the French) 1732). He also adapted Don Clarazel de Gontaruos (1697) from Du Verdier's Le Chevalier hipocondriaque. He was influenced by the Spanish and French novels, especially Scarron.

J. H. Scholte, Een letterkundige overgangsvorm omstreeks 1700 (1912); W. J. C. van Hasselt, 'N. H.', in Dietsche Warande, VI (1864); Jan ten Brink, Dr N. H. jr., een studie over den Hollandschen Schelmenroman der 17de eeuw (1885). A.M.B.W.

Heinzelin von Konstanz (c. 1300), Swiss author of rhymed disputes on (a) knight and cleric as lovers, (b) 'The two Johns' (Baptist and Evangelist)—both inconclusive. The so-called 'Konstanzer Minnelehre' (a regula amoris and a more personal tale of courtship, in verse), formerly attributed to him, is earlier, author probably 'Johann von Konstanz'.

Ed. F. Pfeiffer (1852; all three works), Die Minnel., ed. K. Löffler (1927) and F. E. Sweet (1933). See Heinzelin and 'Johannes v. K.', in W. Stammler, Dt. Lit. des MAs, Verfasserlex., II (1936). F.P.P.

Heinzen, Karl (*Grevenbroich, Rhineland 22 II 1809; ∞1839 Louise Henriette Ida Lisette Schiller; †New York 12 XI 1880), German-American poet and politician. After a stormy personal and political life he settled in New York, where he edited Der Pionier (1854–79), as a fiery crusader for free thought and reform.

Gedichte (1841; 3rd ed. 1867); Lustspiele (1839); Die preussische Bureaukratie (1844); Die Rechte und Stellung der Weiber (1852); Thomas Paine (1855); Mankind the Criminal (1864); Erlebtes (1864–74); Teutscher Radikalismus in Amerika (4 vols, 1867–79); Lessons of a Century (1876).—Prose selections in tr. in J. C. Legge, Rhyme and Revolution in Germany (1918).
O. P. Schinnerer, 'K. H.', in Jahrbuch Deutsch-Am. Hist. Ges. von Illinois, XV (1915); C. Wittke, Against the Current, the Life of K. H. (1945) and 'K. H.'s Literary Ambitions', in Monatshefte f. dt. Unterricht (Wis., 1945).
E.R.

Hektor, Enno (*Dornum 21 XI 1820; †Nürnberg 31 I 1874), East Frisian playwright. His comedies, satirizing the peasant life of his homeland, are of folklorist interest. Of his occasional lyrics the song In Ostfreesland is't an'n besten is best known.

Harm Düllwuttel auf der Bürger-Versammlung (1849); Harm up'n Dorn'mer Markt (2nd ed. 1859); Harm Düllwuttel un all wat mehr is, ed. F. W. van Ness (1906).
C. Borchling, in Niederdt. Jahrb., 28 (1902).
G.C.

Hektorović, Petar (*Stari Grad, Hvar 1487; †13 III 1572), Dalmatian writer, of aristocratic family. He translated Ovid and composed a number of poems which have not survived. He also wrote the most original of all contemporary works, Ribanje i ribarsko prigovaranje (1555), describing an excursion with Dalmatian fishermen, in which his renaissance humanism comes warmly alive under the touch of numerous realistic details of everyday life, mingled with idyllic natural descriptions and the inclusion of popular poems.
S.C.

Helgesen, Poul (*Varberg c. 1485; †c. 1535), Danish theological and historical author and pamphleteer. Little is known about his early life, except that in 1517 he was a monk in the Carmelite order. Himself an ecclesiastical reformer he turned vehemently against the Lutheran movement and became the chief defender of the Roman Catholic church in Denmark. His polemic writings are numerous, full of violent invectives. Nothing is known of his later fate, but his historical chronicle, the so-called Skibbykrønike, was found in a Danish church in 1650.

Skrifter af Paulus Helie (7 vols, 1932–48).
C. Olivarius, De vita et scriptis Pauli Eliæ (1741); L. Schmitt, Der Karmeliter Paulus

Heliä (1893); J. O. Andersen, Paulus Helie (2 vols, 1936–38); Paul-Erik Hansen, P. H.'s historiske Forfatterskab (1943). E.B.

(H)eliade-Radulescu, Ion, pseud. of Eliad Ion (*Târgovişte 1802; †Bucharest 1872), Rumanian writer. His Societatea Literara (1827), his Societatea Filarmonica (1833) with its training school for dramatic art and his daily Curierul Românesc (1829–48) with its literary supplement Curierul de ambe sexe (1837–41) helped and encouraged many young writers. After the 1848 revolution he lived in Paris and London, but returned to Bucharest in 1854. He produced many translations. His poetry, except the ballad Sburătorul, is poor but his prose is eloquent in places and his satire biting.

Din scrierile lui Eliad in prosa şi poezie (1836); Souvenirs et impressions d'un proscrit (1850); Mémoires sur l'histoire de la régénération roumaine ou sur les évènements de 1848 (1851); Istoria Românilor din Dacia şi România (1861); Echilibru intre antitese sau spiritul şi materia (1869); Satire şi fabule (1884); Istoria critica universala (3 vols, 1893). A.V.W.

Helie, Paulus: see Helgesen, Poul.

Heliodorus (fl. 3rd century A.D. ?), Greek writer; a native of Emesa in Syria, perhaps later bishop of Tricca in Thessaly. His Aethiopica or romance of Theagenes and Charicleia, the longest of the Greek romances, shows considerable psychological insight and narrative skill. Much read by the Byzantines, it was translated into many languages in the 16th and 17th centuries.

R. M. Rattenbury, T. W. Lumb and J. Maillon, Héliodore, les Éthiopiques (3 vols, 1935–43; with Fr. tr.); Eng. tr. by T. Underdowne (1587), rev. F. A. Wright (1923).

E. Rohde, Der griechische Roman und seine Vorläufer (3rd ed. 1914; epoch-making and indispensable); R. M. Rattenbury, 'Heliodorus bishop of Tricca', in Proc. Leeds Philos. Soc., I (1927); E. H. Haight, Essays on Ancient Fiction (1936); R. Helm, Der antike Roman (1948); B. Lavagnini, Le origini del romanzo greco (1921), repr. in Studi sul romanzog reco (1950); V. Hefti, Zur Erzählungstechnik in H.s Aethiopica (1950). R.B.

Hellanicus (*Mitylene c. 480 B.C.; †end of 5th century B.C.), Greek historian, wrote on Greek regional history, Persian history and the Trojan War. Particularly important were his chronological works on the priestesses of Hera at Argos and on the victors at the Spartan Carneia. He was probably used by Thucydides.

F. Jacoby, Die Fragmente der griechischen Historiker, I (1923).

L. Pearson, Early Ionian Historians (1939); F. Jacoby, Atthis (1949). R.B.

Heller, Yomtob Lipmann (*Wallerstein, Bavaria 1579; †Cracow 7 IX 1654), Hebrew religious writer and poet. His main work is a very full commentary on the Mishnah (see Judah the Prince). He was a student of grammar, mathematics and philosophy, and an independent spirit who dared occasionally to contradict tradition. He also wrote a poetic chronicle of the 1648 Cossack massacres.

Tosefoth Yomtov (Prague, 1614–17.—Extract: 'Iqqar T. Y., by Meshullam b. Joel Katz, 1790).—The Chronicle, ed. S. Bernstein, in Sefer ha-Dema'oth, III (1924); Megillath Eyvah (ed. with Ger. tr. 1818; autobiography). C.R.

Helmers, Jan Frederik (*Amsterdam 17 III 1767; ∞Catharina Wessels; †ibid. 26 II 1813), Dutch poet, broker and mason; an important figure in the resistance movement against the French occupation of the Netherlands with his courageous publication of De Hollandsche Natie (1812; French tr. La Nation hollandaise, A. Clavareau, 1825) in which genuine patriotism is expressed in false metaphors and rhetorics. He also wrote the drama Dinomaché (1798).

Verse: Socrates (1790); Gedichten (2 vols, 1809–10); Nagelaten Gedichten (2 vols, 1815).

C. Busken Huet, 'De School van Bellamy', in Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, 24; J. Koopmans, in De Nieuwe Taalgids, 8 (1913); E. Roche, La censure hollandaise pendant la domination française (1923); J. Haantjes, in De Nieuwe Taalgids, 41 (1946). J.W.W.

Helmold of Bosau (c.* 1125; †c. 1177), German chronicler. As priest in Bosau (Holstein) he wrote his Cronica Slavorum (ed. B. Schmeidler, 1909), one of the most important historical works of his time, especially for the expansion against the Slavs. F.J.E.R.

Helps, Sir Arthur (*Streatham 10 VII 1813; ∞Bissel Fuller; †London 7 III 1875), English man of letters, editor of Queen Victoria's Highland Journal, who attempted history, drama, fiction and mildly reflective works on social questions.

Thoughts in Cloister and Crowd (1835); Friends in Council (1847); Conquerors of the New World (2 vols, 1848); Realmah (1868); Correspondence, ed. E. A. Helps (1917). R.M.H.

Helvétius, Claude-Adrien (*Paris I 1715; †Paris 26 XII 1771), French philosophical writer. A wealthy financial official, he supported Diderot in the publication of the Encyclopédie, to which he contributed articles. He applied Condillac's philosophy of sensationalism to sociology and saw enlightened self-interest as the basis of society.

De l'esprit (1758); De l'homme (1772); Le Bonheur (poem, 1772).—Œuvres (14 vols, 1795); Les plus belles pages d'Helvétius (1909).
A. Keim, H. (Paris, 1907); R. Mondolfo, Le teori morali e politiche di C. A. H. (Bologna, 1924). G.B.

Hemachandra (*Gujarāt A.D. 1088), the greatest of all the early Jain writers, was a grammarian, a writer on poetics and ethics, and author of a long poem on the lives of the 63 leading men of the Jain faith. He was a minister of the Gujarātī monarch Jayasinha Siddharāja (A.D. 1094–1143) and converted his successor, Kumārapāla. He is largely responsible for the fact that Gujarāt is a stronghold of Jainism today.

H. Jacobi, 'Jainism', in Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics. H.G.R.

Hemans, Felicia Dorothea, née Browne (*Liverpool 25 IX 1793; ∞1812 Alfred Hemans; †Dublin 16 V 1835), English poet. A writer of great facility, she achieved wide popularity for her narrative poems, lyrics and hymns; her admirers included Wordsworth and Freiligrath.

The Siege of Valencia (1823); The Vespers of Palermo, a tragedy (1823); The Forest Sanctuary and other poems (1825); Records of Woman (with other poems, 1828); Songs of the Affections (1830).—Works (with a memoir by her sister, 7 vols, 1839); Poetical Works, ed. W. M Rossetti (1873; repr. 1914). R.F.

Heming, or Hemminge, William (*London 1602; †between 1637 and 1651), English poet and dramatist, educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford. His comedy, The Coursing of the Hare (acted 1632–33), was burnt by Warburton's cook. Heming's couplets in his Elegy are often wittily competent.

Plays: The Fatal Contract (1653), ed. O. Junge (1912); The Jewes Tragedy (1662), ed. H. A. Cohn, Bang, XL (1913).—Verse: The Time Poets, ed. J. J. Parry, in Jour. Eng. Ger. Philol., XIX (1920); Elegy on Randolph's Finger, ed. G. C. Moore Smith (1923). B.L.J.

Hemingburgh, Walter de (fl. 1300), English chronicler, was sub-prior at Gisburn, Yorkshire. His Chronicon de Gestis Regum Angliae comes down to the end of the reign of Edward I.

Ed. H. C. Hamilton (2 vols, 1848–49). R.R.R.

Hemmingsen, Niels (*Lolland? 1513; ∞1547?, ∞1552 Marine Madsdatter, ∞1583 Birgitte Lauridsdatter; †Roskilde 23 V 1600), Danish theological author. A pupil of Melanchthon at Wittenberg, he returned to Denmark in 1542, became a professor and, in 1572, vice-chancellor of Copenhagen university. His writings include a number of dogmatic Lutheran works in both Latin and Danish. During the Lutheran heresy hunt Hemmingsen, himself the leading Lutheran authority, was accused of crypto-Calvinism and discharged.

De methodis (1555); Enchiridion theologicum (1557); Catechismi quæstiones (1560); Liffsens Vey (1570); Pastor (1562); De lege naturæ (1572); Postilla (1561); Demonstratio (1571); Syntagma (1574).
J. H. Paulli, Dr. N. H.'s Pastoraltheologie (1851). E.B.

Hémon, Louis (*Brest, France 12 X 1880; †Chapleau, Ont. 8 VII 1913), French novelist, chiefly known for his great contribution to the literature of French Canada in his novel Maria Chapdelaine. Although he spent only 18 months in Canada, he succeeded in this work in capturing the essence of the life and aspirations of the habitant and défricheur (the clearer of new land in forested areas of Quebec). Originally published serially in Le Temps of Paris in Jan.–Feb. 1914, the novel immediately attracted attention in Canada and its influence in Canada has been immense, not least in its demonstration that the simple rural life of Quebec could provide material for an excellent work of art by a powerful creative mind of 'old France'.

Lizzie Blakeston (1908); Maria Chapdelaine, ed. with pref. by E. Bontrone and L. de Montigny (1916), tr. W. H. Blake (1916), A. Macphail (1917).
C. Le Goffic, Le Bouclier Canadien-français (1928); A. McAndrew, L. H., sa vie et son œuvre (1936); L. de Montigny, La Révanche de Maria Chapdelaine (1937). B.K.S.

Hemsterhuis, François (*Franeker 27 XII 1721; †The Hague 7 VII 1790), Dutch philosopher and essayist; clerk to the 'Raad van State' (Council of State), a friend of princess Gallitzin from 1774 and through her acquainted with Goethe, Hamann, Jacobi and others. He was a philosopher of international standing who expressed his thoughts in fascinating dialogues.

Lettre sur les désirs (1770); Lettre sur l'homme et ses rapports (1772); Sophyle ou de la philosophie (1778); Aristée ou de la divinité (1779);

Lettre de Dioclès à Diotime sur l'athéisme (1787). —Œuvres (3 vols, 1846–50).

R. C. Bakhuizen v. d. Brink, in Studiën en Schetsen, 2; L. Brummel, F. H. (1925); J. E. Poritzky, F. H. (1926); J. Romein, in Erflaters van onze beschaving, 3; L. Brummel, in Algemeen Nederl. Tijdschr. v. Wijsbegeerte, 34 (1940). J.W.W.

Hendrik van Gent (*Ghent c. 1217; †Doornik? 1293), Dutch philosopher, became canon at Doornik in 1267, archdeacon of Bruges in 1276 and of Doornik in 1278. From 1277 he taught theology at Paris. His main works are Quodlibeta (1518) and Summa theologiae (1520); he also wrote commentaries on Aristotle's Physica and Metaphysica. In the controversy between Aristotelianism and Augustinism he sided with the latter. A man of great authority in his own lifetime, he was already completely forgotten by the early 14th century; neither could the interest the 17th-century Servites took in his writings revive them.

Phil. tripartitis doctrinarum et rationum, ed. Angelus Ventura (1701).

H. Rüssmann, Zur Ideenlehre der Hochscholastik (1938); J. Paulus, H. de G. (1938); E. Dwyer, Die Wissenschaftslehre H.s v. G. (1933); R. Braun, Die Erkenntnislehre H.s v. G. (1916); H. Schoellgen, Das Problem der Willensfreiheit bei H. v. G. (1927); P. Bayerschmidt, Die Seins- und Formmetaphysik bei H. v. G. (1941). J.J.M.

Henjō, pseud. of Yoshimine no Munesada (*816; †Kyoto 3 II 890), Japanese poet.

Eng. tr. of selected poems in A. Miyamori, Masterpieces of Japanese Poetry, I (1936). E.B.C.

Henley, William Ernest (*Gloucester 23 VIII 1849; ∞1878 Anna Boyle; †Woking 11 VI 1903), English poet, critic and dramatist whose fervid temperament coloured both his provocative incisive criticism and his impressionist, technically accomplished poetry.

Plays (with R. L. Stevenson): Deacon Brodie (1890); Admiral Guinea (1892); Beau Austin (1897).—Book of Verses (1888); For England's Sake (1900); In Hospital (1903).—Criticism: Views and Reviews (1890); essay in centenary ed. of Burns (1901).—Works (7 vols, 1908).

L. C. Cornford, W. E. H. (1913). R.M.H.

Hennebo, Robert (*Leiden 1685; †ibid. 1737), Dutch poet, soldier, innkeeper, speculator and actor, wrote better burlesque verse than his contemporaries.

Klagte van Jacob Veenhuize (1716); Idem en De Lof der Jenever (1723); Verzamelde dichtwerken (1721). J.W.W.

Henri d'Andely, 13th-century French poet. Learned and witty, he wrote three satirical works that survive, notably the short Lai d'Aristote. He eulogized the deceased scholar Philip of Paris, surnamed the Chancellor (†1236).

Works, ed. A. Héron (1881); Dit du Chancelier Philippe, ed. P. Meyer, in Romania, I (1872); Battle of the Seven Arts, ed. L. J. Paetow (1914); Lai d'Aristote, ed. M. Delbouille (1951). M.F.L.

Henri de Mondeville (fl. c. 1300), French writer. Surgeon to Philip IV and Louis X, he taught at Paris and Montpellier and began in 1306 the first systematic treatise on surgery to be written in France. The French translation (1314) of the Chirurgia is of considerable philological interest (ed. A. Bos, 1897–98). F.W.

Henry VIII, king of England (*Greenwich 28 VI 1491; †Westminster 28 I 1547). Carefully educated, by Skelton among others, he encouraged lyric verse in which he had a good talent. One of his Latin prose books, Assertio septem sacramentorum (1521), earned him the papal title of Fidei Defensor.

Miscellaneous Writings (Golden Cockerel Press, 1924). B.L.J.

Henry, Matthew (*Iscoyd, Flintshire 18 X 1662; ∞1687 Katherine Hardware, ∞1690 Mary Warburton; †Nantwich 22 VI 1714), English nonconformist divine and Bible commentator, whose Exposition was hailed by all denominations as a service to theological studies.

Exposition of Old and New Testaments (5 vols, 1708–10); Miscellaneous Writings (with memoir, 1809).—Collected Works (1726).

Sir J. B. Williams, Memoirs (extensive use of diaries, 1865); W. Tong, Account of Life of M. H. (1716). R.M.H.

Henry, O[liver], pseud. of William Sydney Porter (*Greensboro, N.C. 11 IX 1862; ∞1887 Athol Estes, ∞1907 Sara Coleman; †New York 5 VI 1910), American short-story writer. Accused of embezzling funds in the Texas bank where he had been teller, he fled to Central and South America. When he returned, he served three years in the penitentiary; there he began writing the stories which later became so popular. During his short lifetime he dashed off for various newspapers over 600 stories, combining buoyancy, humour, irony and wit with his famous trick ending.

Cabbages and Kings (1904); The Four Million (1906); The Trimmed Lamp (1907)

Heart of the West (1907); The Voice of the City (1908); Roads of Destiny (1909); Rolling Stones (1912); Waifs and Strays (1917).—The Complete Works of O. H. (1937); Best Short Stories of O. H. (1945).

C. A. Smith, O. H. Biography (1916); S. Leacock, The Amazing Genius of O. H. (1916); R. H. Davis and A. B. Maurice, The Caliph of Bagdad (1931). H.L.C.

Henry of Avranches (†c. 1262), court poet, also known as Archpoet and as Master Henry the Versifier. He was associated with John and Henry III of England and the emperor Otto IV and is found in England, Germany, Italy and France. His miscellaneous poems range from lives of saints (such as Guthlac and Francis) to poems addressed to various patrons.

J. C. Cox and J. P. Heironimus, The Shorter Latin Poems of Master H. of A. relating to England (1935; with biblio.). F.J.E.R.

Henry of Huntingdon (*1084?; †1155), archdeacon; author (several recensions 1130–1154) of a Latin chronicle of English history (55 B.C.–A.D. 1154) and miscellaneous works.

Historia Anglorum, ed. T. Arnold (1879); Eng. tr. T. Forester (1853). R.W.B.

Henry of Settimello, 12th-century Italian poet. His learning and his ability in rhetorical composition were such that the bishops of both Florence and Volterra made him their chancellors. His sudden and mysterious dismissal from both posts inspired him to compose between 1192 and 1194 a long complaint against fortune and eulogy of philosophy after the manner of Ovid and Boethius.

Enrico da Settimello: Elegia, ed. G. Cremaschi (1949).

H. R. Patch, The Goddess Fortuna (1927); K. Strecker, 'Henricus Septimellensis', in Studi Medievali (1929); N. Coffari, 'Fortune and Fate in the Elegia', in Romanic Review, 39 (1938). R.R.R.

Henryson, ROBERT (fl. 1475), Scottish poet; schoolmaster at Dunfermline. Like Chaucer, Henryson is a verse rhetorician and a master of beast-fable; but in both his continuation of Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde and his Fabillis, the natural settings, the macabre, the whimsical humour and the spirit are distinctively Scots. Less versatile and volatile than Dunbar, Henryson is a finished stylist within the limitations of his verse genres. In The Testament of Cresseid, noble sentiment and pathos transcend the traditional rhetorical terms in which he works; in the Fabillis, well-worn tales are brought to fresh, comic and dramatic life. Henryson's fine sense of form is apparent alike in the Testament and the short, beautifully turned pastourelle Robene and Makyne.

Orpheus and Eurydice, in Chepman and Myllar, The Porteous of Noblenes (1508); The Morall Fabillis of Esope, compylit in eloquent, & ornate Scottis meter (1571; 1577); The Testament of Cresseid (1593; pr. earlier in Thynne's Chaucer, 1532); Robene and Makyne, in Ramsay's Ever Green (1724).—Poems and Fables, ed. David Laing (1865), ed. G. Gregory Smith (3 vols, 1906–14), ed. H. Harvey Wood (1933).

J. M. Ross, Early Scottish History and Literature (1884); T. F. Henderson, Scottish Vernacular Literature (1898); M. W. Stearns, R. H. (1949; rev. J. Kinsley, in Medium Aevum, 1949). J.K.

Henty, GEORGE ALFRED (*Trumpington 8 XII 1832; ∞1853 Elizabeth Finucane; †Weymouth Harbour 16 XI 1902), English writer of boys' books of adventure, often with a historical basis.

The Cat of Bubastes (1889); One of the 28th: a Tale of Waterloo (1889); A Jacobite Exile (1894); With Roberts to Pretoria (1902).

G. Manville Fenn, G. A. H. (1907). R.M.H.

Heraclides Ponticus (*_c._ 390; †310 B.C.), Greek philosopher, a pupil of Plato. He contributed to cosmology and astronomy and a great number of other subjects. His literary skill was praised in antiquity, but very few fragments now survive.

C. and T. Muller, Fragmenta Hist. Graec., II (1841–70).

T. Gomperz, Greek Thinkers, I, IV (1901–12); Sir Thomas Heath, Aristarchus of Samos (1913). D.J.F.

Heraclitus OF EPHESUS IN IONIA (fl. c. 500 B.C.), Greek philosopher, nicknamed 'the Dark'. Anaximander and other Ionians sought to understand the changing universe by finding its original stuff: Heraclitus found a basis for knowledge in the fact of change itself. Nature is seen as a process of cyclical transformation of fire into other substances, and the task of man is to understand the moral order that governs the transformations—an order which is eternal and 'common to all'. The surviving fragments of his work are oracular and obscure. His influence was great, particularly on Plato and the Stoics.

H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, I (6th ed. 1952).

J. Burnet, Early Greek Philosophy (4th ed. 1945; with tr.); O. A. Gigon, Untersuchungen zu H. (1935); W. Jaeger, Theology of the Early Greek Philosophers (1947). D.J.F.

Heraud, JOHN ABRAHAM (*Holborn 5 VII 1799; ∞1823 Ann Baddam; †London 20 III 1887), English poet and dramatist, author of two grandiose epics, some tragedies and lesser poems, and dramatic critic of The Quarterly.

VERSE: Tottenham (1820); Descent into Hell (1830); Judgment of the Flood (1834).—PLAY: Videna: a tragedy (1854).
E. Heraud, Memoirs of J. A. H. (1898).
R.M.H.

Héraut Berry (LE): see LE BOUVIER, GILLES.

Herbert, EDWARD, 1st Lord Herbert of Cherbury (*Eyton, Salop 3 III 1582/3; ∞Oxford ? Mary Herbert 28 II 1598/9; †London 5 VIII 1648), English courtier, diplomat, philosopher, poet, historian and autobiographer. At University College, Oxford from 1595 to 1600, Herbert was created K.B. at James I's coronation, became sheriff of Montgomeryshire (1605), frequented court, was in the company of Jonson and the wits, spent much time on the continent and was created Baron Herbert in 1629. Believing only in toleration, Herbert could not take sides wholeheartedly in the civil war, for which his reputation has suffered. Surrendering Montgomery Castle (1644), he submitted to Parliament (1645) and received a pension. The simple structure and diction of his verse comes from great concentration and skill. Herbert has been regarded chiefly as the originator of English deism, though he insists on the validity of revelation.
B.L.J.

Occasional Verses (1665); Poems, ed. J. C. Collins (1881), ed. G. C. Moore Smith (1923); Autobiography (1764), ed. Sir S. Lee (1886); The Life and Reigne of King Henry the Eighth (1649).
C. Güttle, E. Lord H. von C. (1897); B. Willey, 'Lord H. of C.', Essays and Studies (1942); J. H. Hanford, 'Lord H. C. and his son', Hunt. Lib. Quart. (1942); H. R. Hutcheson, Lord H. of Cherbury's 'De Religione Laici' (1944).
J.R.B.

Herbert, GEORGE (*Montgomery 3 IV 1593; ∞Edington 5 III 1628/9 Jane Danvers; †Bemerton 1 III 1632/3), English poet and divine, brother of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, who distinguished himself at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became a fellow (1616), prelector of rhetoric (1618), and public orator to the University during the years 1620–27. He seems to have retired to the Chelsea house of his step-father, Sir John Danvers, late in 1625, becoming ordained deacon in 1626. Abandoning his hopes of worldly preferment and experiencing a sincere conversion, he lived with relations and friends, among them Nicholas Ferrar, until he was appointed rector of Fulston St Peter's with Bemerton, Wilts (26 IV 1630) and ordained priest. Here for the last three years of his life Herbert lived piously, repolishing his verse, mitigating the extravagance of his conceits and ensuring that what might have begun as metrical experiment became a justifiable organic expression of a sincere purpose. He wrote like an excellent classical scholar, inspired, in English, clear, majestical and economical, combining a strength like Milton's, a bite like Dryden's, with the tension of the metaphysical sonnet and the felicities of Elizabethan lyrists. B.L.J.

The Temple (1633), ed. A. B. Grosart (1891), ed. F. Meynell (1927); Works, ed. W. Pickering and S. T. Coleridge (2 vols, 1835–36); The Complete Works, ed. A. B. Grosart (3 vols, 1874); The English Works, ed. G. H. Palmer (3 vols, 1905–07), ed. F. E. Hutchinson (1941).
I. Walton, Life (1670); N. Ferrar, Two Lives, ed. J. E. B. Mayor (1855); G. H. Palmer, A Herbert Bibliography (1911); J. Bennett, Four Metaphysical Poets (1934); F. E. Hutchinson, 'G. H.', in 17th century Studies (1938); L. C. Knights, 'G. H.', in Scouting (1944); M. M. Mahood, Poetry and Humanism (1950).
J.R.B.

Herbert, MARY, Countess of Pembroke (*Penshurst ? c. 1555 ?; ∞VI 1577 Henry Herbert; †Crosby Hall 25 IX 1621), English poet, a patron of literature at her husband's seat, Wilton, who shared a metrical translation of the Psalms with her brother, Sir Philip Sidney, and revised his Arcadia, written for her (1593 and 1599). She translated Garnier's Antonie (1592); her Lay of Clorinda was attributed to Spenser.

The Psalms of David (Nos 44–150), ed. A. Feuillerat, Sidney's Works, III (1923).—TRANSLATIONS: The Discourse of Life and Death (Mornay, 1592); The Tragedie of Antonie, ed. A. Luce (1897).
F. B. Young, Mary Sidney (1912)
B.L.J.

Herbert le Duc DE DAMMARTIN (fl. c. 1180–87), French epic poet, author of Foulque de Candie, a continuation of the Aliscans story, with a love affair between Foulque and the Saracen princess Anfelise and a siege of Candie forming the central action. A later addition in alexandrines relates an attack on Babylon (i.e. Cairo) by the Christians and Foulque's erstwhile adversary Thibaut.

Foulque de Candie, ed. O. Schultz-Gora (3 vols, 1909–36).
F.W.

Herbort von Fritzlar (fl. 1210–17), Hessian cleric responsible for the first German adaptation of Benoît de Sainte Maure's Roman de Troie, written for landgrave Hermann of Thuringia (†1217). The influence of Gottfried von Strassburg on style and characterization is evident. Contemporaries do not mention him; there are few MSS (see Konrad v. Würzburg).

Only ed. G. K. Frommann (1837); meagre excerpts but full analysis in J. Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit., IV, i.

G. Ehrismann, Gesch. d. dt Lit. . . . des MAs (II 2 i, 1927) with a survey of European versions of the tale of Troy to about 1500; H. Menhardt, in W. Stammler, Dt. Lit. d. Mittelalters, Verfasserlexikon, II (1936; full account and reference to H.'s possible authorship of a Pilatus). F.P.P.

Herckmans, Elias (*Amsterdam 1596; †Recife 1644), Dutch poet and seafarer. His poetry is influenced by Huygens; he wrote historical plays and a long poem, Der Zeevaert Lof (1634), illustrated with etchings (one by Rembrandt).

Slach in Vlaanderen (1624); Tyrus belegeringhe en ondergang door de laatste veroveringhe van Alexander de Groote (1627).

J. A. Worp, 'E. H.', in Oud-Holland, XI (1893). A.M.B.W.

Herculano de Carvalho e Araújo, Alexandre (*Lisbon 28 III 1810; †Val de Lobos 13 IX 1877), Portuguese novelist, poet and historian; a militant liberal; director of the Ajuda library; editor of O Panorama. A man of high integrity and independence of judgment, Herculano was one of the greatest and most influential intellectual figures in 19th-century Portugal. A scrupulous scholar in his histories and in his editions of medieval Portuguese texts (Portugaliae Monumenta Historica, 1856–73), he had earlier excelled in the historical novel. In all his writings he stands out as one of the supreme masters of modern Portuguese prose.

Verse: A harpa do crente (1838); Poesias (1850).—Novels: O bobo (1843); O monasticon: Eurico, o presbítero (1844); O monge de Cister (1848); Lendas e narrativas (1851).—History: História de Portugal (4 vols, 1846–1853); História da origem e establecimento da inquisição em Portugal (3 vols, 1854–59).—Opúsculos (1872–1908).—Obras completas (33 vols, n.d.).

C. Portugal Ribeiro, A. H., a sua vida e a sua obra (1933); V. Nemésio, A mocidade de H. (1937); A. J. Saraiva, H. e o liberalismo em Portugal (1949). T.P.W.

Herder, Johann Gottfried (*Mohrungen (E. Prussia) 25 VIII 1744; ∞1773 Caroline Flachsland; †Weimar 18 XII 1803), German critic. After studying theology at Königsberg Herder became a pastor in Riga. His Fragmente with their evolutionary view of literature caused a stir. In 1769 he resigned and travelled to France by sea. His Journal of this voyage is a fascinating document of the man and his mind. In Strasbourg he met Goethe (Sept. 1770), whose mind he greatly stimulated by his fertile ideas. In 1771 he became court chaplain at Bückeburg. His essays Von deutscher Art und Kunst influenced the 'Sturm und Drang'. In 1776, through Goethe's mediation, Herder was made court chaplain and superintendent in Weimar. Here he spent the rest of his life (apart from a journey to Italy in 1788), at variance with Goethe at first and in close harmony with him from 1783 to 1790, when a serious breach occurred. In his last years he waged an unsuccessful campaign against Kant's philosophy.

Herder's earlier works considerably influenced his contemporaries and his later writings, though less immediately successful, had far-reaching effects. A critic of perception with a sense of continuity and perspective, he formulated the view that history is a process resembling organic growth.

Verse: Der Cid (1803).—Drama: Brutus (1774).—Anthologies: Volkslieder (1778; title since 2nd ed. Stimmen der Völker in Liedern, 1807); Lieder der Liebe (1778).—Various: Über die neuere deutsche Literatur (Fragmente) (1767); Kritische Wälder (3 vols, 1769); Abhandlung über den Ursprung der Sprache (1772); Von deutscher Art und Kunst (1773); Ursachen des gesunkenen Geschmacks (1775); Älteste Urkunde des menschlichen Geschlechts (2 vols, 1774–76); Auch eine Philosophie der Geschichte zur Bildung der Menschheit (1774); Vom Geist der ebräischen Poesie (1782); Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit (4 vols, 1784–91); Adrastea (6 vols, 1801–03).—Sämtliche Werke (45 vols, 1805–20), ed. B. Suphan (33 vols, 1877–1913).

Karoline Herder, Erinnerungen aus dem Leben Herders (2 vols, 1820); E. G. von Herder, J. G. v. Herders Lebensbild (6 vols, 1846); R. Haym, H. (2 vols, 1880–85); E. Kühnemann, Herders Leben (2nd edn. 1912); H. Meyer-Benfey, H. und Kant (1904); C. Siegel, H. als Philosoph (1907); A. Bossart, H., sa vie et son œuvre (1916); G. Weber, H. und das Drama (1922); T. Litt, Kant und H. als Deuter der geistigen Welt (1930); A. Gillies, 'H. und Ossian', in Neue Forschung, 19 (1933); B. v. Wiese, H. (1939); A. Closs, 'Wurzeln der Romantik im Reifeschaffen Herders', in Helicon, 3 (1940); H. Reisiger, H.: Selbstzeugnisse und Berichte (1942); J. W. Eason, H. in Germany (1945); A. Gillies, H. (1945). H.B.G.

Heredia, José María de (*Santiago de Cuba 31 XII 1803; †Mexico City 7 V 1839), Cuban poet. Though a national hero, he spent most of his literary life in Mexico and the U.S.A. He is usually grouped with Bello and Olmedo but is nearer romanticism than they. In form, he is frequently neo-classical, and his strong moralizing strain also recalls the 18th-century outlook which survived longer in the Spanish-speaking world. Nevertheless in his best-known poems (En el teocalli de Cholula, Himno al sol and, above all, Niágara), there is a distinctly romantic stamp, marked by a slightly extravagant diction. Heredia's extreme sensibility is not always adequately represented by his bold but not altogether convincing imagery.

Poesías (New York, 1825; and many subsequent eds; inc. The Odes of Bello, Olmedo and Heredia), ed. E. C. Hills (N.Y. and London, 1920).—Translations: Selections from the Poems of Don J. M. H. . . by J. Kennedy, (La Habana, 1844). E.Sa.

Heredia, José Maria de (*Fortuna Cayafère, Cuba 22 XI 1842; †Bourdonné 3 X 1905), French poet. Heredia's father was Spanish, his mother French. He studied at the Ecole des Chartes and was librarian at the Arsenal. He was a friend of Leconte de Lisle and the outstanding exponent of the parnassian theory of poetry. The whole of his published output is contained in Les Trophées, a volume of 118 sonnets and a few longer pieces (1893). He was a master of the sonnet, which he conceived as a highly wrought miniature, brilliantly coloured and technically impeccable. His poetry is marked by a wealth of detailed erudition, and a rare feeling for the civilizations of the past and for landscape.

A. Fontaines, J. M. de H. (1905); E. Langevin, J. M. de H., études et sources (1907); M. Ibrovac, J. M. de H., La vie et l'œuvre and Les sources des Trophées (2 vols, 1923). M.G.; J.P.R.

Herger: see Spervogel.

Herman the Lame (*1013; †24 IX 1054), German scholar, was the son of Count Wolferad of Alshausen and a monk of Reichenau. His chief work was a chronicle to the year 1054, but he also wrote didactic poetry, hymns, a martyrology and treatises on the Astrolabe.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 143; Musica, ed. H. Ellenwood (1936). R.R.R.

Hermes, Johann Timotheus (*Petznick (Pomerania) 31 V 1738; †Breslau 24 VII 1821), German novelist. Hermes was a pastor, a teacher, then an army chaplain before settling as professor of theology at Breslau. He imitated the novels of Richardson and Fielding, achieving his chief success with the sentimental yet realistic Sophiens Reise.

Miss Fanny Wilkes (2 vols, 1766); Sophiens Reise von Memel nach Sachsen (5 vols, 1769–73); Für Töchter edler Herkunft (3 vols, 1787); Für Eltern und Ehelustige (5 vols, 1789); Anne Winterfeld (1801).

G. Hoffmann, J. T. H. (1911); K. Muskalla, Die Romane von H. (1912). H.B.G.

Hermes Trismegistus, fictitious divine author of a body of religious writings in Greek, dating in their present form from the second half of the 3rd century A.D. With their strange jumble of vulgarized platonism, traditional polytheism, Egyptian theology, Babylonian astrology, and the quest for personal salvation, the texts reveal to us the background of popular religion against which neo-platonism and Christianity grew.

A. D. Nock and A. J. Festugière, Hermès Trismegiste (2 vols, 1945); W. Gundel, Neue astrologische Texte des H. T. (Abh. bayer. Ak. N.F. 12, 1936); W. Scott, Hermetica (4 vols, 1924–36; text, Eng. tr. and comm.).

J. Kroll, Die Lehren des H. T. (1914); G. Heinrici, Die Hermesmystik und das Neue Testament (1918); F. Bräuninger, Untersuchungen zu den Schriften des H. T. (1926); R. Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen (3rd ed. 1927); J. Geffcken, Der Ausgang des griechisch-römischen Heidentums (2nd ed. 1929); H. Gressmann, Die orientalischen Religionen im hellenistisch-römischen Zeitalter (1930); C. H. Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935); A. J. Festugière, La révélation d'Hermès Trismegiste (2 vols, 1944–49); F. Cumont, Lux Perpetua (1949). R.B.

Hernández, José (*Pueyrredón 10 XI 1834; †nr Buenos Aires 1894), the chief poet of gaucho literature (q.v.). Hernández had first-hand experience of life on the estancias and created his gauchos out of real understanding of the type. His two long narrative and reflective poems reproduce (without sentimental idealization) the rough nobility of a fast-disappearing type which had its roots in the colonial origins of Argentinian nationality and was the symbol of the old population contrasted with the new immigrant. This nostalgic note is reflected in the pathetic story of Martín Fierro which preserves, as nearly as we are now likely to recover them, the linguistic and cultural peculiarities of the gaucho.

El Gaucho Martín Fierro (1872; The Gaucho M. F., tr. W. Owen, 1935); La vuelta de M. F. (1879). E.Sa.

Herne, JAMES A. (*Cohoes, N.Y. 1 II 1839; ∞1866 Helen Western, 0|0; ∞1878 Katherine Corcoran; †New York 2 VI 1901), American playwright and actor. A pioneer of stage realism, he wrote homely folk drama and sombre studies of social problems.

Shore Acres and Other Plays (1928; incl. Margaret Fleming, The Reverend Griffith Davenport, Sag Harbor); The Early Plays of J. A. H., ed. A. H. Quinn (1940). H.L.C.

Hero, Greek mathematician from Alexandria (prob. 2nd century B.C.). He made also important discoveries in physics and invented the jet turbine (steam). He has left an amusing account of automatic machines, including an automatic puppet show and a machine for issuing holy water.

V Prou, Les Théâtres d'Automates (1877); A. G. Drachmann, 'Hero's adjustable syphons', in Jour. Hell. Stud., 52 (1932) and 'Hero's screwcutter', ibid., 56 (1936). T.B.L.W.

Herodas (3rd century B.C.), writer of Greek mimiamboi, mimes in an iambic metre, intended perhaps for reading and recitation. In Pornoboskos a brothelkeeper pleads against a client; his oily unscrupulousness is neatly revealed in the contrast between the legal form and the mundane subject. Elsewhere we see women in intimate conversation, visiting a temple or a fashionable shoemaker; a mother has her son whipped by his tutor; a jealous mistress is persuaded not to punish her slave lover. Enhypnion contains a dream-narrative through which Herodas symbolized his aspiration to be a modern Hipponax. The poems are commended by the subtle, rather acid skill of their portraits.

Ed. J. A. Nairn (1904); W. Headlam and A. D. Knox (1922; with tr.); A. D. Knox (Loeb Libr. 1929, with Theophrastus' Characters). E.W.H.

Herodian, AELIUS HERODIANUS (fl. late 2nd century A.D.), Greek grammarian. Son of Apollonius Dyscolus, born in Alexandria, taught in Rome. Author of many grammatical works, of which the principal was his General Prosody. Being more accessible and simpler than those of his great predecessors, they became canonical in later antiquity.

A. Lentz, Herodiani technici reliquiae (2 vols, 1867–70); A. Hilgard, Excerpta ex libris Herodiani technici (1887); A. Ludwich, Herodiani technici reliquiarum supplementum (1891).

J. E. Sandys, Hist. of Class. Scholarship, I (3rd ed. 1921). R.B.

Herodotus (*Halicarnassus, Ionia 490/480; †Thurii ?, Italy 430/425 B.C.), Greek historian. Born of an eminent local family; the epic poet Panyasis was his uncle or cousin. As a young man, Herodotus was involved in a conspiracy against Lygdamis, the tyrant of Halicarnassus, and had to go into exile in Samos, from which his mother's family may have come. Later he took part in the expulsion of Lygdamis, but had again to leave for political reasons. This time he sought a new home in the west, as one of the founders of the Athenian colony of Thurii in 444. In the earlier part of his life he not only travelled widely in Greece proper, where he had connexions particularly at Athens and Delphi, but made trips to the Black Sea, Asia Minor, Syria, Babylon, Egypt and Cyrene. The purpose of these journeys is uncertain: it may have been trade.

The unifying theme of Herodotus' history of the Persian wars (in 9 books) is the conflict between Greece and the principal Asiatic power, which he recounts in detail from Croesus' conquest of the Greek cities of Asia Minor in the middle of the 6th century to the capture of Sestos in 478. But the treatment is discursive in the extreme, including much ethnological and anecdotal matter.

Herodotus' sources were largely oral. In his travels he questioned and listened to all manner of men, Greeks and barbarians alike, though he knew no language but Greek. Of the earlier Greek 'logographers', in whose footsteps he was following, the only one whom he mentions by name is Hecataeus of Miletus. Like all ancient historians, except perhaps Thucydides, he is uncritical in his attitude towards his sources. Yet he does not vouch for the truth of everything he repeats: he can often stand aside and leave the reader to judge.

His conception of historical causality is at bottom a religious one. Offence against the order of the universe is avenged by divine power. Hence Herodotus asks not so much 'what is the cause of this or that event?' as 'who is to blame for it?'. He has much in common with his contemporary Sophocles.

He has an unbounded curiosity and is a master of narrative style. But he has an additional interest today, in that he preserves information on the habits and beliefs of ancient peoples in Greece and the east which we are only now able to appreciate. He deserves to be called 'the father of anthropology' as much as 'the father of history'.

C. Hude, Herodoti Historiae (2 vols, 3rd ed. 1927); A. H. Sayce and R. W. Macan, H. (6 vols, 1883–1908; text and comm.); H. Stein, Herodotos (5 vols, 4th–6th ed. 1893–1908; Ger. comm.); B. A. van Groningen, H.' Historiën (5 vols, 1946 ff.; with Dutch comm.); W. W. How and J. Wells, A Commentary on H. (2 vols, 1912); tr. A. D. Godley (4 vols, 1925), G. Rawlinson (repr. 1935), G. C. Macaulay (repr. 1914); J. E. Powell (2 vols, 1949; the most accurate).

J. E. Powell, A Lexicon to H. (1938); A. Hauvette, Hérodote, historien des guerres médiques (1894); G. B. Grundy, The Great Persian War (1901); J. B. Bury, The Ancient Greek Historians (1909); W. Aly, Volksmärchen, Sage und Novelle bei Herodot (1921); J. Wells, Studies in H. (1923); T. R. Glover, Herodotus (1924); W. Spiegelberg, The Credibility of H.' Account of Egypt (1927); F. Focke, Herodot als Historiker (1927); P. E. Legrand, Hérodote, Introduction (1932); M. Pohlenz, Herodot (1937); J. E. Powell, The History of H. (1939); J. Myres, H.: the Father of History (1953). R.B.

Héroët, Antoine (*Paris 1492?; †Digne 1568), French poet who wrote in Marot's vein, was esteemed by the Pléiade poets and protected by Marguerite d'Angoulême. He became bishop of Digne (1552). He developed the platonic conception of love in L'Androgyne and in his chief work, La Parfaicte Amye. In the literary dispute known as the Querelle des femmes (or des amies) he championed woman as a pure and elevated being in contradistinction to her detractors such as B. de La Borderie (L'Amye de court, 1541) and Rabelais (in his Tiers Livre). See Fontaine, C., Papillon, A.

L'Androgyne (wr. 1536, pub. 1542); La Parfaicte Amye (1542).—Œuvres poétiques, crit. ed. F. Gohin (2nd ed. 1943).

A. Lefranc, Écrivains français de la Renaissance (1914). G.B.

Herp, Henricus (*Erp? in Brabant; †Malines 22 II 1478), Dutch mystic. Originally a follower of the Modern Devotion, he later joined the Franciscans whose provincial he eventually became. He wrote Spieghel der Volcomenheit, a treatise on mystical theology, strongly reminiscent of Ruusbroec; by way of the Latin version it was translated into several European languages.

Spieghel, ed. L. Verschueren (2 vols, 1931).

L. Verschueren, 'Leven en werken van H. H.', in Coll. Neerl. Franc., II (1931); M. M. J. Smits van Waesberghe, Het verschilpunt van de opheffing des geestes bij Jan van Ruusbroec en H. H. (1945). J.J.M.

Herrera, Fernando de (*Seville 1534; †Seville 1597), Spanish poet and humanist. He lived at Seville where he devoted himself to literature. His only passion was a platonic one for Leonor de Millán, countess of Gelves, his Laura. His love poetry is elegant, Italianate, slightly monotonous in quantity, but excellent in small doses. His two great patriotic odes on Lepanto and on king Sebastian's death employ biblical imagery toi mply that the Spaniards, in victory or defeat, are the new chosen people. The style of his poems is half way between Garcilaso's and Góngora's. He published only a selection of his poems (Algunas obras) in 1582; the posthumous edition of 1619 contains many more, with curious variants in those common to both editions. His literary theories are explained in his learned commentary on Garcilaso (1580), a landmark in Spanish aesthetic history; he emphasized elegance and fitness, classicism. His prose history of the world has not survived, but he published an account of the Cyprus war and Lepanto (1572) and some meditations on the life and death of Thomas More (1592). He had his own system of punctuation, spelling and even typography; he was Spain's most thorough man of letters.

Obras de Garci Lasso de la Vega con anotaciones (1580); Controversia sobre sus anotaciones a las obras de Garcilaso, ed. J. M. Asensio (1870); Bibl. Autores Esp., XXXII (repr. of 1619 ed.); Algunas obras, ed. A. Coster (Paris, 1908); Poesías (reprint of Algunas obras), ed. V. García de Diego (1914); Rimas inéditas, ed. J. M. Blecua (1948); Relación de la guerra de Chipre, ed. M. Salvá and P. Sainz de Baranda (Colección de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, XXI, 1852); Tomás Móro, ed. F. López Estrada, in Arch. Hispalense 39/41 (1949).

A. Coster, F. de H. (el Divino) Paris, 1908); R. O. Jones, 'El Tomás Moro de F. de H.', in Boletín de la Real Academia Española, 30 (1950). E.M.W.

Herrera, Gabriel Alonso de (*Talavera de la Reina 147–; †after 1539), Spanish writer on agriculture. He studied at Granada, travelled in Europe, held a chair at Salamanca and was chaplain to Ximenes (Cisneros). His Obra de agricultura (1513) became a standard work, which underwent many revisions by other hands. The first edition contains some excellent prose and deserves a modern edition.

Agricultura general (4 vols, 1818), ed. A. Burgos (1858). E.M.W.

Herrera y Reissig, Julio (*Montevideo 9 I 1875; †18 III 1910), Uruguayan poet of the modernista movement. Influenced by Rubén Darío in Buenos Aires, across the river, Herrera became the leader of a new poetic movement in his own city. It was the extravagant side of the movement that attracted him, and he adopted an ivory-tower attitude and set out to astonish the vulgar and, even more, the critics and cognoscenti. Perhaps the most experimental of the modernistas, he invented new words and gave old ones new meanings and used and introduced strange figures and images into his verse. Metrically he is firmly established in the new musicality of the movement, and is consequently dull. Nowadays his poetry is unsurprising, but there is no doubt that he anticipated by at least ten years some of the developments of later 'experimental' poetry in France and Spain. In feeling, Herrera's work is characterized by a melancholy heartlessness. During his life his verse was published only in periodicals.

Obras completas (5 vols, 1913); Los parques abandonados (1919); Las pascuas del tiempo (1920); Los peregrinos de piedra (Paris, 1923); Seis relatos (1929); Obras Completas (Madrid). E.Sa.

Herrera y Tordesillas, ANTONIO DE (*Cuéllar 1559; †Madrid 1625), Spanish historian. He spent some years in Italy, then became historiographer for Castile and the Indies. He wrote about a great variety of historical topics, including his famous general history of the Indies. His work is generally accurate but diffuse. He also translated part of Tacitus' Annals.

Historia de lo sucedido en Escocia y Inglaterra (1589); Historia general de los hechos de los castellanos en las islas y tierra firme del mar Océano (1601–15; 1934), The General History of the vast Continent and Islands of America, commonly called the West Indies, tr. J. Stevens (6 vols, 1725–26). E.M.W.

Herrick, ROBERT (*London? 24 VIII 1591; †Dean Prior X 1674), English clergyman and poet who harmonized in his verse and life a matter-of-fact religious sincerity with an enjoyment of mundane affairs and a re-creation of a classical bucolic spirit. Apprenticed (1607) to his uncle, Sir William Herrick, the goldsmith, he broke away (1613), entering St John's College, Cambridge. After some years in London, friendly with Jonson and court wits, Herrick took orders, accompanying Buckingham as chaplain to the Isle of Rhé (1627). Vicar of Dean Prior (1629) until ejected (1647), he apparently lived mostly in London till 1662 when he returned to Dean Prior. Excelling as an epigrammatist and lyrist, Herrick was a superb master of technique. B.L.J.

Hesperides (1648, includes Noble Numbers); Works, ed. T. Maitland (2 vols, 1823); The Complete Poems, ed. A. B. Grosart (3 vols, 1876), G. Saintsbury (2 vols, 1893), A. W. Pollard (2 vols, 1891), H. Wolfe (4 vols, 1928).

F. W. Moorman, R. H. (1910); F. Delattre, R. H. (1912); L. Mondel, R. H. (1927); E. Blunden, Votive tablets (1931); E. J. M. Easton, Youth Immortal (1934). J.R.B.

Herschel, SIR JOHN FREDERICK WILLIAM (*Slough 7 III 1792; ∞1829 Margaret Stewart; †Hawkhurst 11 V 1871), English astronomer who wrote on many scientific subjects and translated from the Iliad and Schiller.

Preliminary Discourse on Study of Natural Philosophy (1830); Outlines of Astronomy (1849); Essays (1857); Familiar Lectures on Scientific Subjects (1867).

A. M. Clerk, The Herschels and Modern Astronomy (1895). R.M.H.

Hertz, HENRIK (*Copenhagen 25 or 27 VII 1798; ∞1850 Louise Josephine von Halle; †ibid. 25 II 1870), Danish poet and playwright. At Copenhagen Hertz studied law, and his first plays were published under various pseudonyms. He was a close friend of J. L. Heiberg and his family, and to him also perfection of form was more important than content. In his early Gengangerbreve ('Letters of a Ghost'), he took a number of contemporary poets to task for their sins against artistic form.

Hertz wrote several light comedies in a bourgeois setting and some romantic plays. In Denmark Svend Dyrings Hus, a refined pastiche, based on medieval ballad motifs, was most appreciated, in England King René's Daughter gained an immense popularity. His poems are often a clever imitation of style, but they are always harmonious, and sometimes have an undertone of melancholy and resignation.

PLAYS: Hr. Burchard og hans Familie (1826); Amors Genistreger (1830); Sparekassen (1836); Svend Dyrings Hus (1837); Kong Renés Datter (1845; King René's Daughter, tr. T. H. Martin, 1850); Ninon (1848).—VERSE: Gengangerbreve (1830); Lyriske og dramatiske Digte (2 vols, 1841–44); Digte (4 vols, 1851–62).—NOVEL: Stemninger og Tilstande (1839).—Breve til og fra Henrik Hertz, ed. P. Hertz (1895).—Dramatiske Værker (18 vols, 1854–73).

H. Kyrre, H. H., Liv og Digtning (1916). E.B.

Hertz, WILHELM (*Stuttgart 24 IX 1835; †Munich 7 I 1902), German poet, who, first influenced by Uhland, belonged to the circle of Munich poets. Combining the virtuosity of that circle with the imagination of a scholar, he made medieval German and Romance epics accessible to his contemporaries through translations and re-interpretations.

Gedichte (1859); Lanzelot und Ginevra (1860; tr. C. Bruce, 1865); tr. Das Rolandslied (1861); tr. Marie de France (1862); Hugdietrich's Brautfahrt (1863); tr. Aucassin und Nicolette (1865); Bruder Rausch, ein Klostermärchen (1882); Spielmannsbuch: Novellen in Versen aus dem 12. und 13. Jh. (1886).—Gesammelte Dichtungen (1900); Gesammelte Abhandlungen, ed. F. v. d. Leyen (1905).
R. Weltrich, W. H. (1902). H.A.P.

Hervás y Cobo de la Torre, JOSÉ GERARDO DE (†1742), Spanish satirist, priest and professor at Salamanca. Under the pseudonym of Jorge Pitillas he published his famous verse satire against bad writers (1742). Here the influence of Latin authors and of Boileau is combined with Spanish satirical models. He also used the pseudonym of Don Hugo Herrera de Jaspedós.

Sátira contra los malos escritores de este siglo, in Bibl. Autores Esp., 61; L. A. de Cueto, 'Bosquejo histórico-crítico de la poesía castellana en el siglo 18', ibid.
R.M.N.

Hervás y Panduro, LORENZO (*Horcajo, Cuenca 1735; †Rome 1809), Spanish philologist. After the expulsion of the Jesuits (1767) he lived mainly in Italy. He is considered the founder of comparative philology. In his Catálogo he examined the peculiarities of 300 languages, the relationship between them (e.g. Malay and Polynesian) and their relation to ethnography. He drew up grammars for 40 languages.

Catálogo de las lenguas de las naciones conocidas (6 vols, 1800–05); Idea dell' Universo (21 vols, Rome, 1778–87); Escuela española de sordomudos o arte para enseñarles a escribir y hablar el idioma español (2 vols, 1795); Viaje estático al mundo planetario (4 vols, 1793–94).
C. Viñas, 'H. y P. y la filología comparada', in Filosofía y Letras, 17, 18 (1917); A. González Palencia, 'Nuevas noticias bibliográficas del Abate H. y P.', in Miscelánea conquense (1929).
R.M.N.

Hervey, JAMES (Hardingstone, Northants 26 II 1713; †Weston Favell 25 XII 1758), English clergyman whose platitudinous reflections, written in pompous style but marked by genuine appreciation of nature, achieved wide but transitory popularity.

Meditations and Contemplations, 2 vols (1745–47); Dialogues between Theron and Aspasio (3 vols, 1755).—Collected Works (with Life by Birch, 6 vols, 1769). R.M.H.

Hervey, JOHN, Lord Hervey of Ickworth (*15 X 1696; ∞1720 Mary Lepell; †Ickworth 5 VIII 1743), English politician and man of letters, writer of defamatory memoirs of court of George II and literary duellist with Pope.

Letter from a Nobleman at Hampton Court to a Doctor of Divinity (1733; Pope's reply, Letter to a Noble Lord, 1733); Verses to the Imitator of Horace (with Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, 1733); Memoirs of the reign of George II (3 vols, ed. Croker, 1848).
Lord Hervey and his Friends, ed. Earl of Ilchester (1950). R.M.H.

Herwegh, GEORG (*Stuttgart 31 V 1817; †Baden-Baden 7 IV 1875), German revolutionary poet, whose stirring verse helped precipitate the 1848 revolution, and brought him a short burst of glory, too soon extinguished by his own acts of folly. An empty, ineffectual man, but a careful and occasionally effective poet.

Gedichte eines Lebendigen (2 vols, 1841–44; 12th ed. 1896); Einundzwanzig Bogen aus der Schweiz (1843); Neue Gedichte (1878).—Werke, ed. H. Tardel (3 vols, 1909); Briefe von und an H., ed. M. Herwegh (1896); Briefwechsel mit Marie d'Agoult ('Au printemps des dieux'), ed. M. Herwegh (Paris, 1929); Aus Herweghs Nachlass, ed. V. Fleury (1911).
V. Fleury, Le poète G. H. (1911); E. Baldinger, H.: die Gedankenwelt der Gedichte eines Lebendigen (1917); B. Kaiser, Der Freiheit einer Gasse (1947). H.A.P.

Herxen, DIRC VAN (*1381; †21 III 1457), Dutch poet and writer, from 1410 head of the Brethren of the Common Life at Zwolle. His sermons, letters and translations are lost; a number of tracts in Latin and two songs in the vernacular are still extant.

P. H. J. Knierim, D. v. H. (1926); A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance (1925) and The Brethren of the Common Life (1950). J.J.M.

Herzen (Russ. GERTSEN), ALEXANDER IVANOVICH (*Moscow 6 IV 1812; ∞1838; †Paris 21 I 1870), Russian author. Illegitimate son of a wealthy landowner, he had a good education and entered Moscow university at the beginning of the 1830s. Here he formed, together with the subsequent poet Ogarëv, a group of radical-minded students, interested in social and political problems. Later he was exiled to the north and worked there as an official. In 1839 he returned to Moscow and St Petersburg, and in January 1847 he left Russia for abroad whence he waged a relentless war against serfdom and autocracy. In 1852 he settled in London where, in June 1853, he opened a Russian printing press for 'illegal' literature. Here he printed between 1857 and 1865 his radical newspaper Kolokol ('The Bell'), which was regularly smuggled into Russia, and the periodic miscellany, Polyarnaya zvezda ('The Polar Star', 1855–69). His influence among the Russian radicals was enormous, but after the reforms of 1861 began to decline. His contacts with the progressive minds of Europe ranged from Garibaldi and Mazzini to Proudhon, Kossuth, Louis Blanc etc. The last two years of his life he spent mostly in Geneva.

Herzen's life can be divided into two parts: before and after he had left Russia. With his Russian period coincide his early philosophic and scientific essays, his aphoristic narrative Dr. Krupov, and above all his psychological novel à thèse, Kto vinovat ('Whose Fault', 1847) in which the influence of George Sand is unmistakable. During his stay abroad Herzen became disappointed with the bourgeois mentality of the West and gave vent to his disappointment in a number of essays and articles, above all in his book, S togo berega ('From the other Shore', 1851). In polemical disputes he had few equals, as one can gather from his Pis'ma staromu tovarishchu ('Letters to an Old Comrade', 1869), the comrade being M. Bakunin, with whose anarchism he disagreed. Sceptical about the future of socialism in the West, Herzen tried to work out his own agrarian type of socialism based on the patriarchal community of the Russian peasants—the mir—as distinct from the proletarian socialism of Marx and Engels. This agrarian socialism was largely responsible for the growth of the narodnichestvo or the 'populist' movement in Russia and was echoed by the Russian 'social revolutionaries' as late as 1905 and 1917. In addition Herzen wrote a number of articles and pamphlets in French in order to acquaint western Europe with what was going on in Russia. Yet the crown of his writings is his brilliant collection of memoirs, Byloe i dumy (1861–67), one of the great works in Russian prose.

Sochineniya Gertsena (10 vols, Geneva 1875–79); Polnoye sobranie sochineniy Gertsena (22 vols, 1915–25); Kto vinovat (1921); Izbrannye (1945); Byloe i dumy (1946); Izbrannye filosofskie proizvedeniya (1946). The Memoirs of Herzen, tr. J. Duff (2 vols, 1923); Past and Thoughts, tr. C. Garnett (5 vols, 1924–26).

There are numerous monographs and studies of Herzen: V. Baturinsky (1904); S. Vetrinsky (1908); A. Veselovsky (1909); V. Bogucharsky (1912); V. Friche (1920); Ivanov-Razumnik (1920); K. Levin (1922); J. Steklov (1923); I. Novich (1937); N. Antsiferov (1945); N. S. Derzhavin (1947) etc. Of great importance is Literaturnoye nasledstvo, 39 and 40, dealing with Herzen (1941).

O. von Sperber, Die sozialpolitischen Ideen A. Herzens (1894); M. von Meysenbug, Memoiren einer Idealistin (1903); T. Passek, Iz dal'nikh let (1905–06); T. G. Masaryk, The Spirit of Russia (1919); R. Labry, A. I. Herzen (1929); E. H. Carr, The Romantic Exiles (1933). J.L.

Hesdin: see ACART DE HESDIN.

Hesiod, Greek poet, from Ascra in Boeotia, where his father had settled after an unsuccessful career at Cyme in Aeolis. Hesiod quotes Homer and is quoted by Archilochus; his date therefore is probably at the very end of the 8th century B.C. His hexameter poetry is a rival to Homeric poetry and he defeated a Homeric poet at a contest in Euboea. Three works survive under his name: Works and Days, Theogony, Shield of Heracles (the last probably a school piece of the late 7th century). The Works (to which the Days, a catalogue of lucky and unlucky days, are appended) is a speech of advice to his brother Perses to follow justice and agriculture rather than sharp practice and commerce; the Theogony gives a genealogy of the gods, goddesses and heroes of Greece. Hesiod thus stands midway between the anonymous poetry of Homer, to whom he is indebted for metre and much of his style and vocabulary, and the autobiographical poetry of Archilochus whom he heralds by addressing his brother in his contemporary Boeotian setting. He also anticipates Ionian philosophy by starting his Theogony with Chaos and Eros and by personification of abstract ideas. He is indebted to eastern sources in the legend of Uranus etc.

A. Rzach, Hesiodi carmina (1913); H. G. Evelyn-White, H. (1926, with tr.); T. A. Sinclair, H.: Works and Days (1932, with comm.); F. Jacoby, Theogonia (1930).

O. Gigon, Ursprung der griech. Philosophie (1944); R. D. Barnett, 'H. and Kumarbi', in Jour. Hell. Stud., 65 (1945); A. R. Burn, The World of H. (1936). T.B.L.W.

Hessus (KOCH ?), HELIUS EOBANUS (*Helgehausen 6 I 1488; †Marburg 4 X 1540), German humanist. 'Brilliant but bibulous', Hessus, for most of his life a leading light at Erfurt, wrote facile, often artistic Latin verse and was considered by many the foremost poet of his age. He translated the Iliad and the Psalms into Latin hexameters.

Bucolicon (1509); Heroides christianae (1514–32); Noriberga illustrata (1532), ed. J. Neff

(1896); Psalterium (1538); Sylvae (1539); Ilias (1540); Epistolae familiares (1543).
J. Camerarius, Narratio de Eob. Hesso (1553), ed. Kreyssig (1843); G. Schwertzell, H. E. H. (1874); C. Krause, H. E. H. (2 vols, 1879). D.G.D.

Hesteau, Loys (*Blois c. 1560; †after 1624), French poet. His youthful poems show the influence of Ronsard. Much later he composed the 'hermetic' poems—quasi-scientific verse on alchemy in a necessarily recondite style—which make him an interesting occultist poet.

Les Œuvres poétiques (1578); La Vérité de la physique minérale (1620); La Table d'Hermès expliquée par sonnets (1620); Traité du sel secret (1621); L'Azoth des philosophes (1624).
A. M. Schmidt, La Poésie scientifique en France au 16e siècle (1939). G.B.

Hexham, John of (fl. 1180), English chronicler and prior of Hexham. He wrote a continuation of the Latin chronicle of Symeon of Durham, covering the years 1130–54. His work is particularly valuable for the ecclesiastical history of northern England and seems to embody personal knowledge of some of the later events he describes.

Ed. J. Raine, Priory of Hexham, I (Surtees Soc., 1864). S.J.L.

Heye, Jan Pieter (*Amsterdam 1 III 1809; ∞1850 Maria M. van Voorst; †ibid. 24 II 1876), Dutch poet, surgeon, co-founder of De Muzen, contributor to De Gids. His poems, his activities in the cause of music and his important social work all aimed at popular education; in addition he wrote intimate, homely verse.

Zangen der liefde (1843); Kinderliederen (3 vols, 1844–45); Sprookjes (3 vols, 1846–47); Al de Volksdichten (2 vols, 1865); Innigst leven eens dichters (2 vols, 1873–74); Poezie op den levensweg (1876).
E. van Renesse, J. P. H. (1909); L. Wirth, Een eeuw kinderpoëzie (1926); D. L. Daalder, Wormcruyt met suycker (1950). J.W.W.

Heylin, Peter (*Burford 1600; ∞Oxford 1628 Laetitia Highgate, or Heygate; †London 8 V 1662), English theologian, historian and writer of books on geography, who went through vicissitudes in the civil war period, but attacked L'Estrange's Life of Charles I (1656). Heylin wrote much of Mercurius Aulicus, the royalist news-sheet (1643–44). His Examen Historicum attacked Fuller and Sanderson (1658–59).

Microcosmus, or A Little Description of the Great World (1621); The History of St George of Cappadocia (1631; 1633); Ecclesia Restaurata; or, the History of the Restoration (1661), ed. J. C. Robinson, with the life by J. Barnard (1849). B.L.J.

Heym, Georg (*Hirschberg 30 X 1887; †drowned in the Havel 16 I 1912), German poet. The modern big city is the centre of his poetry, but the treatment shows how different his conception was from that of the naturalists. While they had tried to include the modern town amongst the subjects worthy of poetic praise, Heym's visions of frightening solitude in the midst of crowds of people and masses of stone foreshadow the nightmares of expressionism, in subject matter as well as in poetic diction.

Verse: Der ewige Tag (1911); Umbra Vitae (1912); Marathon, ed. B. Möllhausen (1914); Gesammelte Gedichte, ed. C. Seelig (1947; with biog. and biblio.).—Various: Der Athener Ausfahrt (tragedy, 1907); Der Dieb (short story, 1913).
H. Greulich, G. H., Leben und Werk (1931); H. Urner, 'G. H.', in Die Sammlung, II (1947). R.W.L.

Heynlin: see Johannes a Lapide.

Heyns, Maria (*Schoonhoven 1621), Dutch poet, wrote a collection of short stories in prose alternating with poetry, De Bloemhof der doorluchtige voorbeelden (1647), adding edifying meditations to these 'lofty histories'. A.M.B.W.

Heyns, Zacharias (*Antwerp 1566; ∞1592? Anne Hureau; †Zwolle 1638?), Dutch printer-publisher and Protestant poet in the Rederijker tradition. He wrote a few collections of emblems, translations (Du Bartas's Semaine and Joh. v. Capua, Voorbeelsels der Oude Wijse, 1623) and a number of allegorical plays, among them Dry Hooft-deucheden, written for the lodge 'Het wit Lavendel' at Amsterdam, of which he was factor.

C. P. Burger, De Amsterdamsche boekdrukkers en uitgevers in de 16e eeuw, IV (1915); J. te Winkel, Ontwikkelingsgang der Nederl. Letterk., III (1923); J Koopmans, in Taal en Letteren, XII (1902). J.J.M.

Heyrick, Thomas (*1650?; †VIII 1694), English poet and divine, educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge. Some of his Miscellany Poems (1691) are dull, others interesting.

The New Atlantis (with reflections on The Hind and the Panther, 1687); Miscellany Poems (1691; includes The Submarine Voyage: a Pindarick poem). B.L.J.

Heyse, Paul (*Berlin 15 III 1830; †Munich 2 IV 1914), German 'Novellen' writer, critic and translator. His father and grandfather were well-known philologists, and he himself wanted to be a lecturer in Romance languages. But in 1854 he was invited by the king of Bavaria to stay in Munich. So he became, together with Geibel, the centre of the Munich school of German poets, standing for traditionalism and continuity against the young literary movements of the time, naturalism and impressionism. The distrust of new ideas is the basic weakness of Heyse's work. His lasting merit is one of preservation: he was the first to collect 'Novellen' on a large scale (Deutscher Novellenschatz, 24 vols, 1871), and to develop a valuable theory of this literary form (known as his 'falcon theory'). His translations from the English, Spanish and Italian opened the way to new experiences for German readers. Heyse was the first German writer to receive, in 1910, the Nobel prize for literature; in the same year he was ennobled.

Novellen: L'Arrabiata (1855; L'Arrabiata and other Stories, tr. M. Wilson, 1867); Das Mädchen von Treppi (1858; The Maiden of Treppi, tr. A. W. Hinton, 1874); Andrea Delfin (1859; Eng. tr. 1864); Novellen (3 vols, 1890).—Novels: Kinder der Welt (2 vols, 1873; Children of the World, 1882); Merlin (1892).—Plays: Kleine Dramen (2 vols, 1889).—Various: Italienische Dichter seit der Mitte des 18. Jahrhunderts (tr. and essays, 5 vols, 1889–1905).—Letters: Briefwechsel mit J. Burckhardt (1916), mit Th. Storm (1917–18), mit G. Keller (1919), mit E. Geibel (1922), mit Th. Fontane (1928), mit J. V. v. Scheffel (1932), mit M. v. Ebner-Eschenbach (1935).—Gesamtausgabe (38 vols, 1871–1914).

H. Raff, P. H. (1910); H. Spiero, P. H., ein deutscher Lyriker (1910); A. Farinelli, P. H. (1913); R. M. B. Mitchell, H. and his Predecessors in the Theory of the Novelle (1916); M. Quadt, 'Die Einkleidungsform der Novellen P. H.s', in Germ. Rev., II (1927); P. Zincke, P. H.s Novellentechnik (1928); G. Gelosi, P. H.s Leopardi-Übertragungen (1936).
R.W.L.

Heywood, Jasper (*London 1535; †Naples 9 I 1597/8), English Jesuit poet and epigrammatist who translated Seneca; page of honour to princess Elizabeth. In 1562 he went into exile, returning in 1581 as vice-prefect of the Jesuit mission. Was imprisoned 1583–84 and deported in 1585.

The Sixt Tragedie of Seneca, entituled Troas (1559); The Seconde Tragedie of Seneca entituled Thyestes (1560); The first Tragedie of Seneca, intitled Hercules Furens (1561); all three ed. H. de Vocht, Bang's Materialen (1913); poems in Paradyse of Daynty Deuises (1576).
B.L.J.

Heywood, John (*London? 1497?; ∞Elizabeth Rastell; †ibid.? 1580?), English poet and playwright. Originally employed at the court of Henry VIII as a musician, Heywood was charged with raising and training a company of boy-players. His own plays mark a definite stage in the transition from medieval to renaissance drama. They are slight, but evince considerable freshness and vigour of dialogue, and some comic invention and power of characterization. Heywood was known as a wit and published collections of epigrams and proverbs. By his marriage he belonged to the circle of Sir Thomas More; himself a Roman Catholic, he was in highest favour under queen Mary and at her death went for a time into exile.

Johan Johan (1533); The Pardoner and the Frere (1533); The Play of the Wether (1533); The Four Ps (1543–47).—Dramatic Writings, ed. J. S. Farmer (1905).—An 100 Epigrammes (1550); John Heywoodes Woorkes (1562), ed. J. S. Farmer (1906).
J.B.B.

Heywood, Thomas (*Lincolnshire? c. VI 1573/4; ∞London 13 VI 1603 Anne Butler; †ibid. VIII 1641), English poet, dramatist of great versatility who also wrote pageants and prose pamphlets. Probably the son of Robert Heywood, rector of Bothwell and Ashby-cum Fenby, and apparently the Thomas Heywood, pensioner of Emmanuel College, Cambridge (1591), he went straight to London from the university, acting and writing in association with Henslowe to whom he was contracted (25 III 1598). Mentioned by Meres (1598), Heywood joined the Earl of Worcester's company, later Queen Anne's Men (1600). In 1608 he extended his range from plays with translation (through French) of Sallust, and with Troia Britannica (1609) almost all in ottava rima. About this date he probably wrote his ethical and educational defence of the stage, An Apology for Actors (1612). Heywood succeeded Dekker (1631) as writer of mayoral pageants for the City of London, and composed the masque in 1634 with Inigo Jones to celebrate the king's birthday. After The Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels and Dialogues and Dramas (1637) Heywood wrote many pamphlets, some anonymously. A writer of great industry and no small talent he could satisfy the taste of the vulgar with Lucrece and The Four Prentices, and that of the court with The Fair Maid of the West. A great user of dumb show and spectacle, his grasp of the verse techniques of poetic drama is sound; while his plots tend to be too multifarious he can still concentrate attention on a serious theme as in A Woman Killed with Kindness and further realistic atmosphere with a true poetic technique. B.L.J.

A Woman kilde with Kindness (1607), ed. Sir A. W. Ward (1897), K. L. Bates (1917); The Late Lancashire Witches (1634), ed. J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps (1853); Dramatic Works (selections only), ed. J. P. Collier and B. Field (2 vols, 1842–51), R. H. Shepherd (6 vols, 1874); An Apology for Actors (1612), ed. J. P. Collier (1841), R. H. Perkins (1941).

A. M. Clark, 'Bibliography', in Proc. Oxford Biblio. Soc. (1925); O. Cromwell, T. H. (1928); T. S. Eliot, Selected Essays (1932); A. M. Clark, T. H. (1931); F. S. Boas, Introduction to Stuart Drama (1946). J.R.B.

Hickes, George, titular bishop of Thetford (*Kirby Wiske 20 VI 1642; ∞London 13 IX 1679 Frances Marshall; †London 15 XII 1715), English non-juring clergyman, antiquarian and linguistic scholar. After success at Oxford (Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College) he became chaplain to Lauderdale (1676), settling at Alvechurch (1686). A man of stern integrity, Hickes persisted in his studies, despite persecution, inspiring contemporaries and posterity with his fundamental compilations. B.L.J.

Institutiones Grammaticae Anglo-Saxonicae et Moeso-Gothicae (1689); Linguarum veterum septentrionalium Thesaurus grammatico-criticus et archaeologicus (2 vols, 1705).

D. C. Douglas, English scholars (new ed., 1951). J.R.B.

Hicks, William, 'Captain' (*Oxford ?), English editor of drolleries. His title was acquired by drilling men at the Restoration.

Oxford Drollery (1671; 1679); London Drollery (1672). B.L.J.

Hidalgo, Bartolomé José (*Montevideo 24 VIII 1788; †Morón 28 XI 1822), Uruguayan popular poet, one of the earliest to write in the cowboy style that was later to develop into the river Plate gaucho literature (q.v.). He wrote cielitos (a cowboy song-form) for guitar accompaniment but gained fame with his political dialogues in verse between two cowboys who discuss all the events of the years 1820 to 1822.

No complete collection; selections: in anthologies, beginning with La Lira Argentina, ed. M. Leguizamón and M. Falcao Espalter (1824); E. F. Tiscornia, Poetas gauchescos (1940). E.Sa.

Hidāyat, Riza Quli Khan (*Tehran 1800; †ibid. 1871), Persian man of letters, poet and scholar, served under the Qajar dynasty and was highly favoured at the court. Among other posts, he held those of minister of education and director of Dar ul-Funun (the Royal College). In 1851 he was sent as an envoy to Khiva. He describes this journey in his Safar-Nama-ye Khiva. His main works are of documentary character. His Majma' al-Fusaha, which contains biographies of about 700 Persian poets, with anthologies, is of first importance for the study of the subject. Little of his poetry has been published.

Majma' al-Fusaha (2 vols, Tehran, 1887); Riyaz al-Arifin (Tehran, 1887); Farhang-i Anjuman Ara (Tehran, 1871); Safar-Nama-yi Khārazm (Relation de l'Ambassade au Kharezm de Riza Qouly Khan, ed. and tr. C. Schefer, 2 vols, 1876–79). E.Y.

Hiel, Emmanuel (*St Gillis nr Dendermonde 30 V 1834; †Schaarbeek 27 VIII 1899), Flemish poet, wrote songs, lyrical and dramatic poetry, cantatas (De Wind, 1864) and oratorios (Lucifer, 1865; De Schelde, 1866, both set to music by Peter Benoit). A few simple songs by this prolific and unequal writer deserve mention.

Gedichten (1863); Psalmen, zangen en oratorio's (1870); De liefde in het leven (1870); Gedichten (1874); Bloemeken (1876); Liederen voor groote en kleine kinderen (1879); Historische zangen en vaderlandsche liederen (1885); Monodramen en andere gedichten (1893); Symphoniën en andere gezangen (1894); Dromerijen (1895).—Volledige Werken (6 vols, 1933–34). R.F.L.

Hieronymus, St: see Jerome.

Hierta, Lars Johan (*Uppsala 23 I 1801; †Stockholm 20 XI 1872), Swedish publisher, politician and businessman. Founded in Dec. 1830 the Liberal evening paper Aftonbladet, which revolutionized the hitherto heavy and over-specialized Swedish press by its easier style and more universal appeal. Though his Liberalism was doctrinaire and he pandered too much to public opinion, he was a true humanitarian and strove to expedite social reforms.

G. A. Aldén, Lars Hiertas självbiografi (1926); E. Ekman, Svenska tidningskungar (1924); J. Mortensen, Från Aftonbladet till Röda Rummet (2nd ed. 1913). C.H.K.

Higden, Ranulf (†12 III 1363/4), English Benedictine and author of the Polychronicon, a universal history down to his own times which long remained popular. Trevisa's English translation was printed by Caxton.

Polychronicon, ed. Babington and Lumby (1865–86). S.J.L.

Higuchi Ichiyō, pseud. of Higuchi Natsuko (*Tokyo 25 III 1872; †ibid. 23 XI 1896), Japanese author. Born in a poverty-stricken household in the Tokyo slums, she started publishing short stories in 1895. Over twenty came out in the next few months, before her death from tuberculosis. Her writings achieved immediate fame: her style, although difficult, was full of pathos and pity, giving prominence to the emotions of women and children, but leaving the characterization of men vague and shadowy. Her plots give a clear and sympathetic insight into the rigours of contemporary Japanese life.

Takekurabe (1895); Wakare michi (1896); Eng. tr. of both, W. M. Bickerton, in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, 2nd series, VII (1930); Jūsanya (1896). E.B.C.

Hilary (fl. 1125), English poet, studied under Abelard. He wrote mystery plays, a eulogy to Eva, the English recluse, a satire against the pope, and some erotic and descriptive pieces, all in Latin rhymed verse.

Hilarii Versus et Ludi, ed. J. B. Fuller (1929); F. J. E. Raby, Secular Latin Poetry, 2 (1934); P. S. Allen, 'Medieval Latin Lyrics', in Mod. Philol., VI (1908–09). R.R.R.

Hildebert (*Lavardin 1056; †1133), archbishop of Tours (1125), man of letters and poet. He was in charge of the cathedral school at Le Mans, where he became bishop in 1096. He had trouble with William Rufus, his overlord, and other troubles later. His visit to Rome led to the composition of his famous elegies on the Rome of the past and of the present. He was an accomplished versifier and had made a close study of Virgil and Ovid. His poems include epigrams, epitaphs, moral and biblical pieces, a life of St Mary the Egyptian, and a poem De excidio Troiae. His hymn to the Trinity shows a mastery of the new rhythmical verse with two-syllabled rhyme.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 171; some poems in B. Hauréau, Les mélanges poétiques d'H. de L. (1882), and in Anal. Hymn., 50.

A. Dieudonné, H. of L. (1898); A. Wilmart in Rev. Béned., 1933, 1935, 1936, 1937, especially 'Le florilège de Saint-Gatien', ibid. (1936); B. Hauréau, 'Notice sur les sermons attribués à H. de L.', in Notices et extraits des MSS., XXXII. F.J.E.R.

Hildebrand: see Beets, N.

Hildegaersberch, Wiliem van (c.* 1350; †1409 ?), Dutch minstrel. His main output was 'sproken' (see Didactic Poetry), many in a satirical strain. Of historical importance is his fairly long poem Hoe deerste partyen in Holland quamen (on the origin of the struggle between the parties of the Hoeks and the Kabeljauws).

Ed. W. Bisschop and E. Verwijs (1870). J.J.M.

Hildegard of Bingen (*Böckelheim c. 1098; †Rupertsberg 17 IX 1179), German mystic. Aged eight, she was given as an oblate to Jutta von Sponheim, abbess of Disibodenberg. About 7 years later she took the veil and in 1136 became Jutta's successor. About 1149–50 she moved to Bingen and in 1165 founded the monastery of Rupertsberg. Her numerous visions were published between 1141 and 1151 in a work entitled Scivias (Sci vias Domini). She also wrote homilies, prayers, hymns, saints' lives, essays on creation, redemption and the duties of secular judges, as well as medical treatises and mystical interpretations of nature. Canonized in 1928.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 197; H. Liebeschütz, Das allegorische Weltbild der H. v. B. (1930); H. Thomas, Die Naturmystik der H. v. B. (Diss. Leipzig, 1925). R.R.R.

Hilendarsky, Paissiy, also known as Otets Paissiy (*Samokov 1722; †1793), Bulgarian historian, whose only work, the 'Slavo-Bulgarian History', written in 1762, was the main factor which re-established the Bulgarian national consciousness. Paissiy, who was a monk in a monastery on Mt Athos, discovered in the monastery library historical records of the 1st and 2nd Bulgarian empires. Basing himself on these records, he compiled a Bulgarian history. He then left the monastery and on foot journeyed through the whole of Bulgaria, reading his history and encouraging other people to copy it. The book was circulated in this manner for 50 years and is known to have had several thousand 'editions', all handwritten. Though inaccurate and in many ways tendentiously written, the influence it exerted was enormous. It presents one of the few instances in world history when the rebirth of a whole nation has been due primarily to the writing of a single book.

Istoriya Slavyano-Bolgarskaya (Zagreb, 1844); since re-pub. in more than 100 editions, the best known of which are: Y. Ivanov, Istoriya Slavyano-Bolgarskaya (1914) and P. Dinekov, Slavyano Balgarska Istoriya (1942).

M. Drinov, Otets Paissiy i Negovoto Vreme (1871); V. N. Zlatarsky, Istoriyata na Paissiy (1914); I. Shishmanov, Paissiy i Negovata Epoha (1914); B. Penev, Nachalo na Balgarskoto Vazrajdane (1916); B. Penev, Paissiy

Hilendarsky (1918); N. Derjavin, Paissiy Hilendarsky i ego Istoriya (Moscow, 1941). M.P.

Hill, Aaron (*London 10 II 1685; ∞1710 Miss Morris; †Plaistow 8 II 1750), English literary busybody, promoter of ingenious if impracticable business projects, writer of plays, poems and letters, translator of Voltaire's tragedies.

Advice to the Poets. A Poem (1731); Athelwold (play, 1731); Zara (tr. of Voltaire, 1736); Alzira (tr. of Voltaire, 1736); Dramatic Works (2 vols, with Life by 'J. K.', 1760).—Collection of Letters between Mr Aaron Hill, Pope and Others (1751).—Works (4 vols, 1753). R.M.H.

Hill, Thomas (†before 1599), English miscellaneous writer on gardening, arithmetic and astronomy. He translated, from Latin, Cocles' Physiognomy (1550 ?).

The Shaking of the Sheets or the Dance of Death, ed. W. Chappell, in Popular Music of the Olden Time, I (1855). B.L.J.

Hille, Peter (*Erwitzen 11 IX 1854; †Gross-Lichterfelde 7 V 1904), German poet, novelist and playwright. A school-friend of the brothers Hart, like them he was convinced that a change of time demanded a change in poetry. Their thought combined with his poetic genius might have produced the great poet which the naturalistic movement did not beget.

Play: Des Platonikers Sohn (1896).—Novel: Die Sozialisten (1887).—Various: Aus dem Heiligtum der Schönheit, intro. F. Droop (1909).—Ausgewählte Werke, ed. J. Hart (4 vols, 1905).
H. Hart, P. H. (1904); E. Lasker-Schüler, Das P.-H.-Buch (1906); A. Vogedes, P. H. (1947). R.W.L.

Hilman, Johannes (*Amsterdam 29 X 1802; †ibid. 18 XI 1881), Dutch playwright and poet, merchant, bibliophile and patron of the Amsterdam theatre and the university library.

Verse: Verspreide en onuitgegeven gedichten (3 vols, 1875).—Plays: Genoveva (1835); Willem I (1848); De Schijnheilige (1865).
H. C. Rogge, in Levensber. Mij Ned. letterk. (1883). J.W.W.

Hilton, Walter (†24 III 1396), canon of the Augustinian house of Thurgarton, Notts; author of The Scale of Perfection, an influential devotional treatise. On scanty evidence The Cloud of Unknowing is sometimes attributed to him.

There are no scholarly editions. A modernized version of The Scale of Perfection, ed. E. Underhill (1923); and of his Minor Works, ed. D. Jones (1929).
R. W. Chambers, The Continuity of English Prose (1932); H. L. Gardner, 'W. H. and the Authorship of The Cloud of Unknowing', in Rev. Eng. Studies, IX (1933). R.W.B.

Himerius (*Prusias, Bithynia c. 310; †c. 385), Greek rhetorician. Studied and taught in Athens, where Basil and Gregory of Nazianzus were among his pupils. Of his 80 speeches 34 survive, mainly epideictic declamations on traditional themes or ceremonial addresses. Having very little to say, but concentrating on saying it with classicizing perfection of literary form, Himerius tells us little of the life of his time.

Ed. F. Dübner, in A. Westermann, Philostratorum opera (1849).
C. Teuber, Quaestiones Himerianae (1882); H. Schenkl, 'Zur Biographie des Rhetors H.', in Rhein. Museum, 72 (1917–18); A. Colonna, 'Disputationes Himerianae', in Boll. . . . del l'Edizione Nazionale dei Classici Greci e Latini, 1949 (Supp. to Rendiconti dell' Acc. d'Italia). R.B.

Hinton, James (*Reading 1822; ∞1852 Margaret Haddon; †Azores 16 XII 1875), English surgeon and moral philosopher who advocates altruism and seeks in his system of 'actualism' to reconcile science and religion.

The Mystery of Pain (1866); Philosophy and Religion (1881); The Law Breakers and the Coming of the Law (1884); Chapters on the Art of Thinking (1879); Life in Nature, ed. Havelock Ellis (1932).—Life and Letters, ed. E. Hopkins, intro. Sir W. Gull (1878).
C. Haddon, Larger Life: Studies in Hinton's Ethics (1886); E. Ellis, H.: a sketch (1918). R.M.H.

Hipparchus of Nicaea in Bithynia (late 2nd century B.C.), Greek mathematician and astronomer. Only his Commentary on the Phaenomena of Eudoxus and Aratus survives, but much of his work was incorporated in the Syntaxis of Ptolemaeus. He was the first to use trigonometry systematically, and discovered the precession of the equinoxes.

I. Thomas, Greek Mathematical Works, II (Loeb Libr., 1941).
Sir Thomas Heath, A Manual of Greek Mathematics, II (1931). D.J.F.

Hippel, Theodor Gottlieb von (*Gerdauen, East Prussia 31 I 1741; †Königsberg 23 IV 1796), German novelist and dramatist. A headmaster's son, Hippel studied law and enjoyed a successful career in the public service, becoming burgomaster and chief of police in Königsberg in 1780. His novel Lebensläufe, which owes something to Sterne, oddly combines sentimental effusiveness with the dry rationalism of the Aufklärung.

Comedies: Der Mann nach der Uhr (1765); Die ungewöhnlichen Nebenbuhler (1768).—Novels: Lebensläufe nach aufsteigender Linie (4 vols, 1778–81).—Various: Über die Ehe (1774); Über die bürgerliche Verbesserung der Weiber (1792). H.B.G.

Hippias of Elis (late 5th century B.C.), Greek sophist. He travelled widely in Greece and won a great reputation. He claimed to teach a great variety of subjects, from astronomy to handicrafts. Our information comes mostly from Plato's Hippias Minor, Hippias Major and Protagoras.

H. Diels, Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, 2 (6th ed. 1952), tr. K. Freeman, Ancilla to the Pre-Socratic Philosophers (1948).

W. Jaeger, Paideia (1939); K. Freeman, Companion to the Pre-Socratic Philosophers (1946); E. Dupréel, Les Sophistes (1948). D.J.F.

Hippocrates (*Cos 460 B.C.), Greek doctor, belonged to the family of the Asclepiadae in which medicine was traditional. According to Plato (Phaedr. 270c) he emphasized the need of accurate observation of the parts of the body in their interaction and the relation of the body to its environment. Of the works ascribed to him none is certainly his; some (e.g. On the sacred disease, On airs) go back to his time.

Œuvres complètes, ed. E. Littré (1839); Selected works, ed. W. H. S. Jones and E. T. Withington (1923).

C. Singer, Greek biology and Greek medicine (1922); W. Jaeger, Paideia, II (1945). T.B.L.W.

Hipponax, Greek poet of Ephesus; he went into exile at Clazomenae c. 542 B.C. Wrote short poems, largely in iambics and limping iambics, satirizing contemporaries (including the Chian sculptors Bupalus and Athenis), in which he also parodied the epic style.

E. Diehl, Anthologia Lyrica Graeca (1949); J. M. Edmonds, Elegy and Iambus (1931, with tr.). T.B.L.W.

Hiraga Gennai, pseud. of Hiraga Kunitomo (*Shido, Sanuki 1729?; †Edo (= Tokyo) 4 II 1780), Japanese botanist, scholar, writer and dramatist, also known by the pen-name Fūrai Sanjin. Hiraga was one of the pioneers of the introduction of western learning at the time when Japan was closed to foreign intercourse. He developed and described scientific apparatus and scientific experiments. His jōruri (puppet-theatre) plays were very popular. He died in prison after murdering a man in a fit of madness.

Science: Butsuruihin shitsu (1763).—Play: Shinrei Yaguchi no watashi (1770; The mirucle at the ferry of Yaguchi, tr. A. Miyamori, in Tales from Old Japanese Dramas, 1915). E.B.C.

Hirata Atsutane (*Kubota, Akita 16 X 1776; †ibid. 2 XI 1843), Japanese philosopher, scholar, writer and poet. He studied Chinese literature and medicine, but was greatly influenced by the writings of Motoori Morinaga. In 1804 he became a teacher and also practised as a doctor, but his main interest was writing on scholarly subjects. Between 1803 and 1840 (when he was banned from publishing by a government edict) he produced numerous books on theology, philosophy, philology, antiquity, medicine, poetry etc. His writings had a noteworthy effect on the restoration of Shinto as a national religion, and on the revival of the prestige of the imperial family in opposition to the shogunate; they were anti-Chinese and anti-Buddhist, extolling everything Japanese. Some of his books are written in the colloquial, others in a pedantic literary style.

Koshi seibun (1812–18); Koshiden (1812 ff.); Koshichō (1819); Taidō wakumon (date of comp. unknown; Ger. tr. W. Schiffer, in Mon. Nipponica, II, 1939).

E. M. Satow, 'The Revival of Pure Shinto', in Trans. As. Soc. of Japan, III (1875); H. Hammitzsch, 'Hirata Atsutane, ein geistiger Kämpfers Japan', in Mitt. Dt. Ges. Natur- u. Völkerk. Ostasiens, 18 (1936). E.B.C.

Hirtius, Aulus (†43 B.C.), Roman historian, served as an officer of Caesar 54–48, was praetor in 46, prefect of Gaul 45, consul in 44. He made Antony retire from Mutina in 43, but was killed in the action. He added an eighth book to Caesar's De Bello Gallico, and narrated separately the Alexandrian campaign.

O. Seel, Hirtius (Klio, Beiheft, 1935); for texts see Caesar. J.A.W.

Hitomaro: see Kakinomoto no Hitomaro.

Hjärne, Urban (*Skworitz förs. Ingermanland 20 XII 1641; †Stockholm 10 III 1724), Swedish physician, naturalist and writer. As the centre of a group of young university litterati, Hjärne—self-styled 'Celadon'—was a leading exponent of the fashionable pastoral poetry, and he wrote many popular songs. His play Rosimunda, performed in Uppsala to amuse the young Charles XI, was the first Swedish tragedy obeying antique rules.

Självbiografi, ed. H. Schück, in Upsala univ:s årsskrift (1916); O. Strandberg, Urban Hjärnes ungdom och diktning (1942). C.H.K.

Hlaváček, KAREL (*Prague 1874; †ibid. 1898), Czech 'decadent' poet whose work, small in compass and striking in its musicality, shows the influence of the French symbolists.

Dílo, ed. A. Hartl (3 vols, 1930).—F. Soldan, K. H., typ české dekadence (1930). R.A.

Hoadley, BENJAMIN, bishop of Winchester (*Westerham, Kent 14 XI 1676; ∞1701 Sarah Curtis, ∞1745 Mary Newey; †Chelsea 17 IV 1761), English latitudinarian divine, whose compliant writings provoked fierce controversies, Law being one of his opponents.

Nature of Kingdom of Christ (1717); Reasonableness of Conforming to Church of England (1703); Persuasive to Lay Conformity (1704).—Works (3 vols, 1773, with life by his son). R.M.H.

Hobbes, THOMAS (*Malmesbury 5 IV 1588; †Hardwick 4 XII 1679), English philosopher, verse and prose translator and prose writer who was tutor to the Cavendish family of Hardwick for most of his life. Secretary to Bacon sometime between 1621 and 1626, a friend of Herbert of Cherbury, Jonson and other men of letters, Hobbes was 40 or older when, chancing on Euclid, he was diverted into mathematics and into materialistic thinking. Taking refuge in Paris (1640) he stayed abroad for 11 years, for a time tutor to prince Charles. His return and submission to Parliament did less to damage him in the Restoration court, where his wit was welcome, than the religious opinions which brought unpopularity to the last 25 years of his life. Breaking new ground with his political philosophy and materialistic psychology, Hobbes was nevertheless in his critical standards indistinguishable from the neo-classical tradition in reverence for epic and for the poet as teacher, and in distrust of uncontrolled imagination.

B.L.J.

Leviathan (1651), ed. A. D. Lindsay (1914), M. Oakeshott (1946); Opera philosophia (1668), ed. Sir W. Molesworth (16 vols, 1839–45).—H. Macdonald and M. Hargreaves, T. H., a bibliography (1952).

G. C. Robertson, H. (1886); G. Lyon, La Philosophie de H. (1893); L. Stephen, H. (1904); F. Brandt, T. H.'s mechanical conception of Nature (1928); J. Laird, H. (1934); J. E. Bowle, H. and his critics in the 17th century (1951). J.R.B.

Hoby, SIR THOMAS (*Leominster ? 1530 ?; ∞27 VI 1558 Elizabeth Cook; †Paris 13 VII 1566), English diplomat, humanist and translator, who travelled abroad after leaving St John's College, Cambridge (1545), meeting Bucer at Strasbourg (1547). Knighted (9 III 1565/6), he became ambassador to France. Best known for his translation of Castiglione's Courtier, in which, despite occasional mistranslations, he helped to develop English prose, his unpublished diary is even more fluid. B.L.J.

The Courtyer (1561), ed. W. A. Raleigh (1900), W. H. D. Rouse (1928).

W. A. Raleigh, Some Authors (1923).

J.R.B.

Hoccleve or Occleve, THOMAS (c.* 1370; ∞c. 1410; †c. 1450), English Chaucerian poet, clerk in the Privy Seal office; notable for his De Regimine Principum or The Regement of Princes, an English poem in rime-royal on the duties of a ruler, and containing an address to Chaucer.

Works, ed. F. J. Furnivall and I. Gollancz (3 pts, 1892–1924).

H. S. Bennett, Chaucer and the 15th Century (1947). R.W.B.

Hodža, MICHAL MILOSLAV (*Rakoš 22 IX 1811; †Těšín 26 III 1870), Slovak poet and publicist. Hodža was a Protestant pastor who was for a time associated with L. Štúr in his efforts to establish a Slovak literary language. His patriotic activities caused him to be exiled to Těšín in 1868. His best remembered work is the pamphlet Dobruo slovo Slovákom súcim na slovo (Levoča, 1847). R.A.

Hoeck, THEOBALD (*Limbach 10 VIII 1573; †after 1618), German poet, secretary of the Bohemian nobleman Peter Wock von Rosenberg, ennobled 1602. He wrote some of the earliest attempts at baroque courtly lyric in German and is a forerunner of Weckherlin and Opitz, despite his awkward metres and his often rough and popular language. He pointed with patriotic pride to the ancient Teutons as inspiration for the moderns.

Schoenes Blumenfeld (1601), ed. Max Koch (1899).

M. H. Jellinek, 'Beiträge zur Textkritik und Erklärung des Schoenen Blumenfelds, in Zschr. f. dt. Alt., 69 (1932); K. Fleischmann, T. H. und das sprachliche Frühbarock (1937); W. Brauer, 'T. H.', in Zschr. f. dt. Philol., 63 (1938); K. H. Senger, T. H. (Diss. Hamburg, 1939); A. Heusler, Deutsche Versgeschichte, III (1929).

L.W.F.

Hoen, PIETER 'T, pseuds. A. CONTRADUC, A. PRODUC, MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS DE

Jonge, J. A. Schasz M. D. (~Utrecht 18 VIII 1744; †Amersfoort 9 I 1818), Dutch children's poet, leader of the Patriots, editor and pamphleteer.

Verse: Nieuwe proeve van kleine gedichten voor kinderen (6 vols, 1778–79); Fabelen en gedichten voor kinderen (1803).—Plays: Jurjen Lankbein (1778); Nieuwe spectatoriale schouwburg (2 vols, 1782–89); Vaderlandsche schouwburg (3 vols, 1790–93).

W. P. Sautijn Kluit, in Bijdragen voor Gesch. en Oudheid, N. S., 10 (1880); E. Knuttel-Fabius, Oude kinderboeken (1906); L. Wirth, Een eeuw kinderpoëzie (1925). J.W.W.

Hoeven, Willem van der (fl. early 18th century), Dutch playwright and poet, actor in Amsterdam.

Plays: De schrandere tooneelspeelder (1693); 't Koffyhuis (1712); De doodelijke minnenijd (1714).—Verse: De strijd van Bacchus tegen de Indiaanen (1710); Het lusthof Rijnneveen (c. 1715). J.W.W.

Hofdijk, Willem Jakobszoon (*Alkmaar 27 VI 1816; ∞1852 Helena Ukena, ∞1857 Cornelia P. Post, ∞1870 Wilhelmina Horn; †Arnhem 29 VIII 1888), Dutch historian and nationalist poet, writer of historical dramas in verse. His epic poetry in typical late romantic style shows many beautiful passages but there is almost no one wholly acceptable poem.

Verse: Rosamunde (1839); Kennemerland, Balladen (2 vols, 1849–52); Aëddon (1852); Verspreide gedichten (2 vols, 1860); Romantische poëzie (1867); In 't harte van Java (1881).—Prose: Geschied. der Nederl. letterkunde (1853–56); Historische landschappen (1856); Ons voorgeslacht (6 vols, 1858–62); Merkwaardige kasteelen in Nederland (with J. v. Lennep, 6 vols, 1852–61).

E. J. Potgieter, Kritische Studiën, 3 (1877); J. ten Brink, Geschied. Noord Nederl. letteren, 5 (1904, with biblio.); C. T. B. van der Duys, W. J. H. in zijn leven en werken (1890); A. Hendriks, W. J. H. (1928); A. W. Timmerman, Tims herinneringen (1938). J.W.W.

Hoffham, Otto Christiaan Frederik (*Küstrin, Germany 2 VI 1744; ∞1780 Johanna E. Schramm; †Prenslow, Germany 21 I 1799), Dutch poet of witty, mostly blank verse, and burlesque dramas.

Verse: Hekelschriften en andere gedichten (1781); Proeve van slaapdichten (1784).—Prose: Proeve eener theorie van Nederduitsche poëzij (1788).—Plays: Al stond er de galg op! (1783); De broek (1784); De Boerenschouwburg (1801, with life, P. J. Uylenbroek).

J. Hartog, De Spectatoriale geschriften van 1741–1800 (2nd ed., 1890); C. Busken Huet, 'Feith en Kinker', in Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, 24. J.W.W.

Hoffman, Charles Fenno (*New York 7 II 1806; †Harrisburg, Pa. 7 VI 1884), American editor, poet, novelist. Greyslaer (1840), his novel of the Mohawk valley during the Revolution, had four editions in one year. He successively edited several magazines, and wrote delicate verse with a musical lilt.

Love's Calendar, Lays of the Hudson, and Other Poems (1847); The Poems of C. F. H., ed. E. F. Hoffman (1873).

H. F. Barnes, C. F. H. (1930). H.L.C.

Hoffmann, Ernst Theodor Wilhelm, altered Wilhelm to Amadeus in honour of Mozart (*Königsberg 24 I 1776; ∞1802 Maria Thekla Michalina Rohrer; †Berlin 25 VI 1822), German writer, composer and caricaturist. Born of incompatible parents, highly-strung and diversely gifted, Hoffmann endured many vicissitudes, earning his living either in government service or by musical activities. As theatrical composer and designer in Bamberg (1808–13) he was distracted—and inspired—by his frustrated passion for the sixteen-year-old Julia Marc. In his musical criticism at this period he was among Beethoven's earliest supporters. Feeling his own mediocrity as a composer—his opera Undine was performed Berlin 1816—he turned increasingly to writing, and, after returning to an official position in Berlin 1814, was a leading literary figure, till his health failed. In his Märchen and supernatural tales, many of which turn upon the arts, the romantic idiom is reinforced with psychological overtones, with a realism which enhances the sense of hallucination, and often, as in Kater Murr, with ironical or grotesque humour. Their unique flavour carried his legend all over Europe.

Die Elixiere des Teufels (2 vols, 1815); Nachtstücke in Callots Manier (2 vols, 1817); Seltsame Leiden eines Theater-Direktors (1818); Kleinzaches genannt Zinnober (1819); Lebensansichten des Katers Murr nebst fragmentarischer Biographie des Kapellmeisters Johannes Kreisler (2 vols, 1820–22); Prinzessin Brambilla (1821); Meister Floh (1822).—Writings 1809–15 collected into Fantasie-Stücke in Callots Manier (4 vols, 1814–15); writings 1813–21 into Serapions-Brüder (6 vols, 1819–25; tr. A. Ewing, Serapion Brethren, 2 vols, 1886–92).—Sel. tr. Tales of Hoffmann, ed. J. M. Cohen (1951); Gesamtausgabe, ed. G. Ellinger (15 vols, 1912); Historisch-kritische Gesamtausgabe, ed. C. G. v. Maassen (10 vols, 1908–28); Briefe (4 vols, 1912) and Tagebücher (1915), ed. H. v. Müller; Handzeichnungen, ed. W. Steffen and H. v. Müller (1925).

G. Ellinger, E. T. A. H., sein Leben und seine Werke (1894); W. H. Schollenheber, Hoffmanns Persönlichkeit (1922); H. Ochsner, H. als Dichter des Unbewussten (1936); E. von Schenk, E. T. A. H., ein Kampf um das Bild des Menschen (1939); H. W. Hewett-Thayer, H.: author of the Tales (1948); Jean Mistler, H. le fantastique (1951); Mitteilungen der Hoffmann-Gesellschaft (Bamberg, 1939 ff.).

H.A.P.

Hoffmann von Fallersleben, AUGUST HEINRICH (*Fallersleben 2 IV 1798; †Corvey 19 I 1874), German poet and scholar, who, inspired as a patriotic verse-writer by Körner, and as a Germanist by J. Grimm, showed tireless vigour in both fields. He became professor in Breslau 1836, wrote Deutschland über alles on Heligoland 1841, and was dismissed for his political verse 1842. The common touch, which ensured the contemporary popularity of his verse, did not make it memorable; yet a certain proportion, particularly children's songs, has so merged into the national heritage as to seem anonymous.

Horae Belgicae (18 vols, 1830–62); Fundgruben zur Geschichte deutscher Sprache und Literatur (2 vols, 1830–37).—Deutsche Lieder (1815); Bonner Burschenlieder (1819); Die Schöneberger Nachtigall (1822); Mackeriade (1825); Die Schlesische Nachtigall (1825); Alemannische Lieder (1826); Kirchhoflieder (1827); Jägerlieder (1828); Buch der Liebe (1836); Unpolitische Lieder (2 vols, 1840–42); Deutsche Gassenlieder (1843); Fünfzig Kinderlieder (1848); Soldatenlieder (1851); Mein Leben (6 vols, 1868).—Gesammelte Werke, ed. H. Gerstenberg (8 vols, 1890–93); Briefe an Freunde, ed. H. Gerstenberg (1908); Germanistenbriefe von und an H. v. F., ed. F. Behrend (1917).—Sel. tr. J. Legge, Rhyme and Revolution in Germany (1918).

H. Gerstenberg, H. v. F. (1916). H.A.P.

Hoffmanowa, KLEMENTYNA, née Tańska (*Warsaw 23 XI 1798; †Passy 19 IX 1845), Polish novelist. Brought up in the French tradition, she worked as an educationist; after the 1831 rising she left Poland. In Dziennik, the first outstanding Polish novel, she gives a psychological study of a woman.

NOVELS: Listy Elżbiety Rzeczyckiej (1824); Dziennik Franciszki Krasińskiej (1825; The journal of Countess Frances Krasińska, tr. K. Dziekonska, 1896).—MEMOIRS: Pamiętniki (in Pisma pośmiertne; 3 vols, 1849).—Dzieła, ed. N. Zmichowska (10 vols, 1875–77). Some works are in Œuvres choisies, tr. P. Szretter de Szeptycki (1850).

P. Chmielowski, Kl. z Tańskich Hoffmanowa. Zarys biograficzny (1899); S. Wasylewski, 'K. z T. H.', in O. miłosci romantycznej (1921). S.S.

Hofman, JAN BAPTIST (*Courtrai 1758; †ibid. 2 VIII 1835), Flemish poet and playwright. As a Rederijker he won 60-odd literary prizes, wrote 30-odd plays, and introduced the drame bourgeois to Flemish literature.

PLAYS: Justina (1791); Clarinde, of de rampzalige door de liefde (1796); De onverwachte redding (1797).—POETRY: Nederlandsche dichtstukjes (1829). R.F.L.

Hofmann von Hofmannswaldau, CHRISTIAN (*Breslau 25 XII 1617; †ibid. 18 IV 1679), German poet, the central figure of the 'second Silesian School'. He went to school in Danzig, where he met Opitz who influenced him deeply. After European travel he took an administrative post in Breslau and was engaged on diplomatic missions. His poetry shows high technical ability and uses considerable resources of style and learning to achieve emotional effects, which however are not felt but directed by a calculating intellect. His models were Ovid and Marino, whose conceits he imitated and whose lascivious treatment of love he surpassed. His secular poetry shows him as a mainly amoral person devoted to sensual enjoyment. On his death his upright character, generosity and devotion to duty were lamented, qualities which no one would deduce from his secular poetry; perhaps his religious verses, often decried and seldom read, are less insincere than has been thought.

Hundert Grabschriften (1643); Heldenbriefe (1663); Deutsche Übersetzungen und Gedichte (1673); Herrn von Hofmannswaldau und andere Deutschen auserlesene und bissher ungedruckte Gedichte, ed. Benjamin Neukirch (7 vols, 1695–1727); unpub. verse, ed. A. Hübscher in Euphorion, XXVI (1925).

R. Ibel, H. v. H. (1928); H. Heckel, 'H.', in Schlesische Lebensbilder, III (1928); H. Geibel, Der Einfluss Marinos auf H. (1938); K. Francke, 'The Historical Significance of Hofmannswaldau's Heldenbriefe', in Philol. Qu., II; A. Hübscher, 'Die Dichter der Neukirchschen Sammlung', in Euphorion, XXIV (1922); H. Schöffler, Deutscher Osten im deutschen Geist (1940). L.W.F.

Hogg, JAMES (*Ettrick XII 1770; ∞1820 Margaret Phillips; †Eltrive 21 XI 1835), 'the Ettrick Shepherd', Scottish peasant poet. Hogg's literary talent was encouraged by Scott; and his failures as a farmer were balanced by his success in Edinburgh literary society. Much of Hogg's work, in verse and in prose, is undistinguished; but he is a fine narrative poet, especially in handling legend and local tale, an able verse parodist of his contemporaries and a lyric poet of delicacy and melodic beauty.

Scottish Pastorals, Poems, and Songs (1801); The Mountain Bard (1807); The Forest Minstrel (1810); The Queen's Wake (1813); Pilgrims of the Sun (1815); The Poetic Mirror, or the Living Bards of Great Britain (1816); Madoc of the Moor (1816); The Brownie of Bodsbeck and other Tales (1817); The Jacobite Relics of Scotland (1819–21); Winter Evening Tales (1820); The Private Memoirs and Confessions of a Justified Sinner (1824; 1947, with intro. by A. Gide); Dramatic Tales (1825); Queen Hynde (1826); The Shepherd's Calendar (1829); Songs (1831); The Domestic Manners and Private Life of Sir Walter Scott (1834).

H. T. Stephenson, The Ettrick Shepherd: A Biography (1922); E. C. Batho, The Ettrick Shepherd (1927); A. L. Strout, 'The Noctes Ambrosianae and J. H.', in Rev. Eng. Studies (1937). J.K.

Hogg, THOMAS JEFFERSON (*Norton, Durham 24 V 1792; †London 27 VII 1862), English writer, chiefly remembered for his friendship with Shelley.

The Life of Shelley (2 vols, 1858); Shelley at Oxford, ed. R. A. Streatfeild (1904).

W. Scott, Jefferson Hogg (1951). B.H.

Hoghendorp, GIJSBRECHT VAN (*Dordrecht I 1589; †1639), Dutch playwright, officer in the armies of Maurice and Gustavus Adolphus, later living at The Hague. His Xerxes (1616) was in purely classical form; his Treurspel van de Moordt begaan ann Wilhelm van Orangiën (1617), performed in 1617, is halfway between an allegorical play and a classical drama.

F. K. H. Kossmann, De Spelen van G. v. H. (1932). A.M.B.W.

Hohberg, WOLFGANG HELMHARD VON (*Oberthumritz 20 IX 1612; †Regensburg 1688), Austrian poet and Protestant country gentleman, author of one of the few German baroque epic poems and of lyrics in which he aims at a simple and realistic style. His encyclopaedic work on the management of estates, Georgica Curiosa oder Adeliches Landleben (2 vols, 1682), is characteristic.

Hirtenlieder (1661); Die unvergnügte Proserpina (1661); Der Habsburgische Ottobert (3 vols, 1664; epic); Lust- und Arzney-Garten des Propheten Davids (1675).

I. Jerschke, W. H. v. H. (Diss. Munich, 1936); O. Brunner, Adeliges Landleben und europäischer Geist dargestellt am Leben und Werk W. H. v. H.s (1949). L.W.F.

Höijer, BENJAMIN (*Stora Skedvi 1 VI 1767; †Uppsala 13 VI 1812), Swedish philosopher. He eagerly followed and absorbed and as eagerly transmitted German transcendentalism to the young Swedish romantics.

Samlade skrifter (5 vols, 1825–27).

B. Liljekranz, B. H. (1912). C.H.K.

Hojeda, DIEGO DE (*Seville 1571; †Huanaco, Peru 1615), Spanish epic poet. He went to America at an early age and became a Dominican at Lima in 1591, prior at Cuzco in 1609 and at Lima in 1610. After an ecclesiastical dispute he became a simple friar again; he died before he could be reinstated. His religious epic in twelve cantos La Christiada was complete in 1608, published at Seville in 1611. Christ is the hero; the story begins with the Last Supper and ends with the Crucifixion. The devil's plan for thwarting the redemption of mankind is defeated; God's love and his justice are reconciled. The poem is in the Christian tradition of Vida and Tasso. Its plan and execution are masterly. Hojeda's style is always vivid and animated; his emotional range is wide. He successfully combined poetry and preaching. This fine epic is unjustly neglected today.

La Christiada, ed. Corcoran (Washington D.C., 1935).

M. J. Quintana, Sobre la poesía épica castellana (1833); J. Cuervo, El M. Fr. Diego de Ojeda y La Christiada (1898); F. Pierce, The Heroic Poem of the Spanish Golden Age (1947). E.M.W.

Holbach, PAUL HEINRICH DIETRICH, BARON D' (*Heidelsheim, Baden I 1723; †Paris 21 I 1789), French philosophical writer of German origin. He settled in Paris in his youth and was a wealthy patron of the encyclopédistes. His philosophical writings, in which Diderot collaborated, explained sensibility and intellect as functions of matter.

Le Christianisme dévoilé (1761); Le Système de la nature (1770, abr. 1774); La Politique naturelle (1773); Le Système social (1773).

R. Hubert, Civilisation et Christianisme: d'H. et ses amis (1928); P. Naville, D'H. et la philosophie scientifique du 18e siècle (1943); W. H. Wickwar, Baron d'H.: A Prelude to the French Revolution (1935). G.B.

Holberg, LUDVIG, Baron Holberg (*Bergen 3 XII 1684; †Copenhagen 28 I 1754), Danish playwright, satirist, essayist and historian. The son of a Norwegian lieutenant-colonel of peasant stock, he matriculated at Copenhagen in 1702 and after a few short stays in Norway settled permanently in Denmark. A long visit to England (1706–08), and a journey to Paris and Rome (1714–16) were both of the utmost importance to him, since they involved a meeting with modern European ideas, especially French critical philosophy and literature. In 1730, after holding two other chairs at Copenhagen, he became professor of history, his real interest; by then he had already made his name as a creative writer.

Holberg's literary career began with some satirical poems, among which is the great mock-heroic poem Peder Paars, published under the pseudonym of Hans Mikkelsen. For the first Danish theatre Holberg wrote 32 comedies, the first 15 being comedies of character. The other main group is 11 comedies of manners, and in his old age he wrote some moral allegories, greatly inferior to his earlier works. Most important among Holberg's plays are the following: Den politiske Kandestøber, Jean de France, Jeppe paa Bjerget, Jacob von Thyboe, Den Stundesløse, Erasmus Montanus, Henrik og Pernille, De Usynlige, Julestuen and Den pantsatte Bondedreng. Holberg's originality as a playwright is not affected by the fact that he borrowed freely from a variety of sources, from Aristophanes, the Romans, the Italian commedia dell'arte and from Molière whom more than anyone else he resembles. Holberg also wrote a satirical novel Nicolai Klimii Iter Subterraneum and a number of essays and moral thoughts in the Spectator manner. His historical writings are also of importance. He left his large fortune for the re-establishment of the college at Sorø, and for this was made a baron. His name is immortalized as the founder of a modern Danish literature on European lines.

PLAYS: Comoedier (3 vols, 1723–25); Den danske Skueplads (7 vols, 1731–54).—SATIRES: Peder Paars (1719–20), ed. G. Christensen (1949); 4^{re} Skiemte-Digte (1722); Nicolai Klimii Iter Subterraneum (1741), Eng. tr. A Journey to the World Under-Ground (1742).—HISTORICAL WRITINGS: Introduction til de fornemste europæiske Rigers Historie, and Anhang (1711); Introduction til Natur og Folkeretten (1715); Dissertatio de Historicis Danicis (1719); Dissertatio de Nuptiis Propinquorum (1719); Dannemarks og Norges Beskrivelse (1729); Dannemarks Riges Historie (3 vols, 1733), a very meagre summary of this in The History of Norway, . . . from the Union of Calmar by Baron Holberg, ed. A. Andersen Feldborg (1817); Synopsis Historiæ Universalis (1733), An Introduction to Universal History, tr. G. Sharpe (1755); Compendium Geographicum (1733); An Introduction to Universal History, to which is added A Short System of Geography, ed. G. Sharpe (1758); Bergens Beskrivelse (1737); Almindelig Kirkehistorie (1738); Heltehistorier (1739); Jødiske Historie (1742); Heltindehistorier (1745).—ESSAYS AND VARIOUS: Metamorphosis (1726); Epistola ad Virum Perillustrem (1728); Moralske Tanker (1744), ed. F. J. Billeskov-Jansen (1943); Epistler (5 vols, 1748–54; 6 vols, 1944–51); Epigrammatum Libri Septem (1749); Moralske Fabler (1751).—MEMOIRS: Memoirs of L. H. (1827); Memoirer, ed. with annot. F. J. Billeskov-Jansen (1943).—H.'s Breve, ed. V. Dahlerup (1926).—L. H.'s Samlede Skrifter, ed. C. S. Petersen (1913 ff.); Komedierne og de populære Skrifter, ed. F. Bull, G. Christensen, C. Roos, S. P. Thomas, A. H. Winsnes (6 vols, 1922–25).—PLAYS IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION: The Babbling Barber, in The Odd Volume (1826); Erasmus Montanus, tr. T. Weber (1885); Jeppe of the Hill, tr. W. C. Westergaard and M. B. Ruud (1906); Three Comedies by L. H., tr. H. W. L. Hime (1912); Comedies by H., tr. O. J. Campbell and F. Schenk (1914); Four Plays by H., tr. H. Alexander (1946); Seven One Act Plays by H., tr. H. Alexander (1950).

H. Ehrencron-Müller, Bibliografi over Holbergs Skrifter (3 vols, 1933–35); Holberg-Aarbog (6 vols, 1920–25); Werlauff, Historiske Antegninger til Ludvig Holbergs atten første Lystspil (1858).

J. A. Scheibe, Nachricht von dem Leben und den Schriften Holbergs (1764); Georg Brandes, L. H. (1884); L. Daae, L. H. (1886); O. J. Campbell, The Comedies of H. (1914); J. Bing, L. H. (1917); K. Mortensen, L. H. (1925); H. Brix, Ludvig Holbergs Komedier (1942); Th. A. Müller, Den unge H. (1943). E.B.

Holcroft, THOMAS (*Leicester Fields, London 10 XII 1745 (O.S.); ∞1765?; ∞1772 Matilda Tipler; ∞1778?; ∞? Louisa Mercier; †Marylebone 23 III 1809), English novelist, dramatist and democrat.

NOVELS: Alwyn or the Gentleman Comedian (assisted by W. Nicholson, 2 vols, 1780); The Adventures of Hugh Trevor. A Novel (6 vols, 1794).—PLAYS: Duplicity (1781); The Road to Ruin (1792).—AUTOBIOGRAPHY: Memoirs of the late T. H. written by himself, cont. by W. Hazlitt, ed. E. Colby (2 vols, 1925). B.H.

Hölderlin, JOHANN CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH (*Lauffen 20 II 1770; Tübingen 7 VII 1843), German poet. Intended for the church, Hölderlin was educated at the Tübinger Stift. He declined orders, however, and became private tutor in the house of Frau von Kalb. Fragments of his novel Hyperion appeared in Schiller's Neue Thalia in 1793 and 1795. In 1796 he became a tutor in Frankfurt-on-Main and fell deeply in love with his employer's wife, Susette Gontard (the Diotima of his poems), who returned his passion. This was the overwhelming experience of Hölderlin's life. After a quarrel with Gontard in 1798 Hölderlin left and, after an unsuccessful attempt to live by his pen, became again a tutor, first near Constance then at Bordeaux. In 1802 he returned home insane. He recovered and was made librarian at Homburg in 1804. Two years later his insanity returned and he spent the rest of his life in the care of a Tübingen carpenter.

Except for the philosophical novel Hyperion and his translation of two plays of Sophocles, Hölderlin's works were published by friends after his reason had left him. His reputation in his own day was therefore slight. Deeply attached to the classical ideal, he was acutely aware that the Golden Age is beyond recall. The poignancy of human existence overshadowed by death is a recurrent theme of his poetry. The range of his poems, the best of which are written in classical or free verse, is restricted, the depth of his penetration, however, unequalled.

Hyperion (2 vols, 1797–99); Gedichte, ed. L. Uhland and G. Schwab (1826); Sämtliche Werke, ed. C. T. Schwab (2 vols, 1846); ed. N. v. Hellingrath, F. Seebass, L. v. Pigenot (6 vols, 1919–23); ed. F. Beissner (8 vols, 1946 ff.); Briefe, ed. E. Bertram (1935); Poems, tr. M. Hamburger (2nd ed. 1952; good intro.).

W. Dilthey, 'H.', in Das Erlebnis und die Dichtung (1906); F. Zinkernagel, Entstehungsgeschichte von H.s 'Hyperion' (1907); F. Seebass, H.-Bibliographie (1922); W. Böhm, H. (2 vols, 1928–30); H. Neunheuser, Die geistige Entwicklung H.s (1929); W. F. Könitzer, Die Bedeutung des Schicksals bei H. (1932); R. Peacock, H. (London, 1938); E. L. Stahl, H.'s Symbolism (1944); E. Müller, H. (1944); F. Tonnelat, F. H. Son œuvre poétique et sa pensée religieuse (1950). H.B.G.

Holinshed or Hollingshead, RAPHAEL (†Bramcote, Worcs.? 1580?), English chronicler. Little is known of Holinshed's life. Based on an exhaustive study of many authorities, his Chronicles (of which only part is by Holinshed himself) were very widely read and provided the source for many historical plays, among them those of Shakespeare.

The Firste volume of the Chronicles of England, Scotland and Ireland . . . (1577; repr. 6 vols, 1807–08).

W. G. Boswell-Stone, Shakespeare's H. (1896). J.B.B.

Holland, ABRAHAM (†18 II 1625/6), English poet and translator, son of Philemon Holland. His Naumachia is competent and his Caveat to his Muse is entertaining.

Naumachia or Hollands Sea Fight (1622); (Heliodorus) The Faire Æthiopian (1631); Virgils Eclogues (1628); Foure Bookes of Du Bartas (1637).—Hollandi Posthuma (1626). B.L.J.

Holland, JAN: see VITRINGA, ANNES JOHAN.

Holland, PHILEMON (*Chelmsford 1552; ∞1579 Anne Bot or Peynton; †Coventry 9 II 1637), English translator. As 'translator-general of the Elizabethan age', Holland made available in tolerably accurate versions and readable English many important classical authors, including Pliny the Elder, Plutarch and Xenophon. A good classical scholar (he was by profession a schoolmaster), Holland possessed a vivid and familiar, if sometimes over-elaborate, style.

Plutarch's Morals (1603); The Historie of the Twelve Caesars [from Suetonius] (1606), ed. J. H. Freese (1923); The Historie of the World [i.e. Pliny's Natural History] (2 vols, 1612); Cyrupædia (1632). J.B.B.

Holland, SIR RICHARD, or Richard de Holande (fl. 1450), Scottish author of The Buke of the Howlat, a verse bird-allegory after the manner of Chaucer's Parlement of Foules.

Ed. F. J. Amours (1897; Asloan MS.) and W. T. Ritchie (1930; Bannatyne MS.). R.W.B.

Hollonius (or Holle), LUDWIG (fl. 1605). A pastor at Pölitz in Pomerania, Hollonius wrote a play, Somnium vitae humanae (1605), in which the legend of the peasant who dreams he is king for a day is interpreted as an allegory of human life and anticipates the baroque theme of life as a dream.

Ed. F. Spengler (1891).

M. Wehrmann, 'L. H.', in Pommersche Monatsbl. (1889); P. Blum, Die Geschichte vom träumenden Bauern in der Weltliteratur (Prog. Tetschen, 1908); A. Farinelli, La vita è un sogno (1917). D.G.D.

Hollý, JÁN (*Búrsky Sv. Mikuláš 24 III 1785; †Dobrá Voda 14 IV 1849), Slovak poet. Hollý was a Roman Catholic priest in western Slovakia who adopted the type of standard Slovak evolved by Bernolák as the medium for his epics and lyrics in classical metres. The subjects of his epics were taken from the history of the 9th-century Moravian empire (Svatopluk, 1833; Cyrillo-Metodiada, 1835). His lyrics include idylls, modelled on Virgil's Georgics, as well as odes and elegies. All his work aims, in the spirit of the time, at glorifying the Slavs, and especially the Slovaks as the purest representatives of the Slavonic race.

Spisy básnické, ed. J. Viktorin (1863); Básne, I, ed. J. Škultéty (1908).

J. Hodál, J. H., jeho život, diela a pamiatka (1923). R.A.

Holmes, OLIVER WENDELL (*Cambridge, Mass. 29 VIII 1809; ∞1840 Amelia Jackson; †Boston 7 X 1894), American essayist, poet, novelist. From a prominent Boston family, he studied medicine at Harvard and abroad. He was professor of anatomy at Harvard for 35 years, continually turning out amusing verses, essays and medical dissertations. Fame as a writer came when James Russell Lowell, editor of the newly founded Atlantic Monthly, asked him to contribute; his Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table (1858) and its successors mingle miscellaneous facts and fancies, crackle with wit and gaiety. In his 'medicated' novels he used scientific means to show that criminals needed education not punishment. Though much of his light verse and his novels are forgotten he is remembered as the man of science, of wit and imagination—the Autocrat.

NOVELS: Elsie Venner (1861); The Guardian Angel (1867); A Mortal Antipathy (1885).—MISCELLANEOUS: The Professor at the Breakfast-Table (1860); Currents and Counter-Currents in Medical Science (1860); The Poet at the Breakfast-Table (1872); Our Hundred Days in Europe (1887); Over the Teacups (1891).—COLLECTED POEMS: The Poetical Works of O. W. H. (2 vols, 1881).—COLLECTED WRITINGS: Riverside Edition (13 vols, 1891); Representative Selections, ed. S. I. Hayakawa and H. M. Jones (1939).

M. A. De W. Howe, H. of the Breakfast-Table (1939); W. L. Schroeder, O. W. H.: An Appreciation (1909). H.L.C.

Holmström, ISRAEL (*Stockholm c. 1660; †Smorgoni, Lithuania 24 II 1708), Swedish civil servant and poet. He was popular for his burlesques, comic verse and drinking-songs. He was an elegant epigrammist in the French genre and also wrote fables modelled on La Fontaine.

Samlade vitterhetsarbeten af svenska författare, VI, ed. P. Hanselli (1863); M. Lamm, Olof Dalin (1908). C.H.K.

Holtei, KARL VON (*Breslau 24 I 1798; ∞1821 Luise Rogée, actress; †ibid. 12 II 1880), German playwright, poet and novelist, who achieved popular successes in all fields. A picturesque figure, he led a wandering life as actor, reciter and theatre-manager. As a playwright his speciality was operetta; as a poet, Silesian dialect.

Schlesische Gedichte (1830).—PLAYS AND OPERETTAS: Die Wiener in Berlin (1845); Die Berliner in Wien (1846); Der alte Feldherr (1829); Lenore (1829); Ein Trauerspiel in Berlin (1845); Der dumme Peter (1836); Lorbeerbaum und Bettelstab (1839).—NOVELS: Die Vagabunden (4 vols, 1852); Christian Lamsell (5 vols, 1852); Ein Schneider (1854).—Erzählende Schriften (40 vols, 1861–66); Theater (6 vols, 1867); Vierzig Jahren (8 vols, 1843–50); sel. tr., E. B. Impey, Illustrations of German Poetry (1841).

P. Landau, H.'s Romane (1904); A. Moschner, H. als Dramatiker (1911); M. Weller, Die fünf grossen Dramenvorleser (1939). H.A.P.

Hölty, LUDWIG HEINRICH CHRISTOPH (*Mariensee 21 XII 1748; †Hanover 1 IX 1776), German poet. A pastor's son, Hölty, who was delicate, was educated at home. He studied theology at Göttingen, where he joined Boie's circle. He was one of the original members of the Hainbund (q.v.), though he took little part in its extravagances. He died of tuberculosis. Hölty was of a modest and attractive nature. His poems, which during his lifetime appeared in almanacks, especially the Göttingen Musenalmanach, are written in classical metres or in folk-song stanzas. They treat of the sweetness of spring (symbolized by the month of May) and the fleetingness of human life, at the same time revealing a sincere and undoubting religious faith.

Sämtliche hinterlassene Gedichte (2 vols, 1782); Gedichte (1783); Werke, ed. W. Michael (2 vols, 1914–18).

H. Ruete, H.: Sein Leben und Dichten (1883); E. Albert, Das Naturgefühl Höltys (1910). H.B.G.

Holyday, or Holiday, BARTEN (*Oxford 1593?; †ibid. 2 XI 1661), English dramatist, translator and clergyman, whose preaching won praise. He was chaplain to Sir Francis Steuart in Spain, and later to Charles I. James I disliked his Marriage of the Arts at Woodstock.

PLAY: Τεχνογαμία: Or the Marriage of the Arts (1618; 1630), see J. Nichols, Progresses of James I, IV (1828).—VERSE: A Survey of the World (1661).—Motives to a Good Life (1657).—All Horace (based on Hawkins, 1653); Flaccus his Satires (1616, 1617, 1635, 1650). B.L.J.

Home, CECIL: see WEBSTER, JULIA.

Home, JOHN (*Leith 21 IX 1722; ∞1770 Mary Home; †Edinburgh 5 IX 1808), Scottish dramatist. He fought on the Hanoverian side at Falkirk (1746); in 1747 became minister of Athelstaneford and began as a dramatist. Kirk disapprobation of his successful tragedy, Douglas, led him to resign his ministry; he became tutor to the prince of Wales and continued his writing. Hailed in his day as a second Shakespeare, Home had some sense of plot and declamatory power; Douglas (1757) was successfully revived at the Edinburgh Festival, 1950.

Agis (1758); The Siege of Aquileia (1760); Alonzo (1773); Alfred (1778); History of the Rebellion of 1745 (1802).—Works (with a memoir by Henry Mackenzie, 3 vols, 1822).

A. E. Gipson, J. H., a Study of his Life and Works (1917). J.K.

Homer, Greek poet (late 8th century B.C.). Although ancient writers give very different accounts of the date, birthplace and œuvre of Homer, a good early tradition can be distinguished ascribing to him the Iliad, the Odyssey and the (lost) Thebais. By the 7th century B.C. (Hymn to Apollo) he is known as 'the blind man dwelling in rocky Chios'; i.e. if Homer was born in Smyrna, the historical school of Homerid poets knew him as their founder in Chios. The Iliad and the Odyssey can be dated substantially in the second half 8th century B.C. with a few interpolations which have come in during subsequent recital. The Iliad and the Odyssey must have been composed for a great festival, perhaps the festival of Apollo at Delos, and were subsequently recited piecemeal by Homerid rhapsodes all over the Greek world. From the 6th century B.C. they were recited complete every fourth year at the Panathenaea in Athens.

Without contemporary comparative material we cannot decide whether the same man composed the Iliad and the Odyssey but this was the belief of antiquity. Both poems assume a knowledge of the whole corpus of Greek legend to which they can refer briefly. The Iliad tells of the events leading up to the death of Hector in the siege of Troy: its central thread is Achilles' quarrel with Agamemnon, the consequent disasters of the Greeks, Achilles' permission to Patroclus to fight in his armour, the death of Patroclus, Achilles' own intervention, the duel with Hector, and Achilles' permission to Priam to bury Hector. On the central thread are hung many incidents of fighting, camp life, home life, and memories of the past. The Odyssey tells the story of Odysseus' return from Troy to find his wife Penelope beset by suitors whom he kills: this central thread carries descriptions of Odysseus' adventures, Telemachus' journey with memories of the past, home life in Ithaca. The poems have in common a central thread into which relevant digressions are inserted, symmetrical composition of scenes, divine machinery, clear characterization of individuals, particularly Achilles, Hector, Andromache, Odysseus, Penelope, similes from animals and everyday life to illustrate behaviour, extensive use of formulae for stock scenes and of stock phrases for people and objects, ready-made to fit different places in the hexameter line, which nevertheless never detract from the swift brilliant immediacy of the narrative.

Homer stands between two worlds: behind him is a long past and before him the historical Greek polis which is already visible in many of the similes and in the descriptions of city life in Phaeacia and Ithaca. The language with its formulae presupposes a long tradition of oral hexameter poetry; archaeology has proved that Homer's memory goes back to the 16th century B.C. We may suppose that in the Mycenaean period kings had minstrels who sang their exploits including in due course the Trojan war. Through the troubled periods of the Dorian invasion and the migrations the songs were still sung at courts and shrines which preserved a memory of the past: each singing was an improvisation and therefore a modernization so that each was a memory rather than a survival of older songs. The conditions needed to produce our Iliad and Odyssey from this floating mass of legend which each singer crystallized in his own way into song seem to be (a) a festival at which a long epic could be performed, (b) a band of rhapsodes who could recite a long epic in relays, (c) writing, to record a long epic, (d) a genius to put the inherited oral technique to the new purpose of composing a long epic as an artistic whole: this genius we call Homer.

D. B. Monro and T. W. Allen, Homeri opera (1908); A. T. Murray, The Odyssey (1919); The Iliad (1925, with tr.); W. Leaf, H.'s Iliad (1900, with comm.); W. W. Merry, J. Riddell, D. B. Monro, H.'s Odyssey (1886, with comm.); W. B. Stanford, H.'s Odyssey (1947, with comm.).

TRANSLATIONS: G. Chapman (1598); A. Pope (1720–25); A. Lang, W. Leaf, E. Myers, The Iliad (1882); S. H. Butcher, A. Lang, The Odyssey (1879); T. E. Shaw, The Odyssey (1935); E. V. Rieu, The Iliad (1949), The Odyssey (1945).

G. G. A. Murray, Rise of the Greek Epic (1934); C. M. Bowra, Tradition and Design in the Iliad (1930); M. P. Nilsson, H. and Mycenae (1933); J. T. Kakridis, Homeric Researches (1949); H. L. Lorimer, H. and the Monuments (1950); C. M. Bowra, Heroic Poetry (1952). T.B.L.W.

See also TROY, ATREIDAE, HELEN, ODYSSEUS.

Hommius, FESTUS; Frisian: FETSE HOMMINGA (*Jelsum 10 II 1567; †Leyden 5 VII 1642), Dutch theologian, pupil of Gomarus and spiritual leader of the counter-Remonstrants. He wrote Contra-Remonstrantie (1611) and was one of the leading translators of the Bible.

Specimen Contraversarium Belgicarum (1618); Journaal (1620).

P. J. Wyminga, F. H. (1899); De Bie en Loosjes, Biografisch Woordenboek v. d. Prot. Godgel. in Ned., IV (1927). A.M.B.W.

Hondius, Petrus (*1578; †1621), Dutch poet, parson at Terneuzen. He was an excellent botanist, especially fascinated by the 'utility of herbs', like Maerlant was in Der Naturen Bloeme. He edited Dodonaeus' Kruidtboec (1618) and wrote Dapes inemptae of de Moufe-Schans (2nd ed. 1621), and Geschiedenis v. d. Vrijheidsoorlog (unfinished).

J. G. Frederiks 'Over P. H.', in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., VI (1880). A.M.B.W.

Hone, William (*Bath 3 VI 1780; †Tottenham 6 XI 1842), English bookseller and writer, associated with Cruikshank in widely popular political satires, author of compilations showing much recondite reading.

Political House that Jack Built (1819); A Slap at Slop (1820); Apocryphal New Testament (1820); Ancient Mysteries (1823); Every Day Book (weekly miscellany to which Lamb contributed, 1826).

F. Rolleston, Some Account of the Conversion of late W. H., with further particulars of his Life and Extracts from his Correspondence (1853); F. G. Stephen, Memoirs of George Cruikshank (for association with H., 1891); F. W. Hackwood, Life of H. (1912). R.M.H.

Honigh, Cornelis (*Koog aan de Zaan 29 X 1845; ∞1873 A. M. M. L. Eykman; †Zwolle 4 IV 1896), Dutch poet and man of letters, headmaster of a secondary school at Zwolle from 1881, co-editor of De Gids, recast the 4th ed. of Jonckbloet's Geschiedenis der Nederl. letterk. (6 vols, 1888–94).

Mijn lente (1871); Geen zomer (1880).

P. A. M. Boele van Hensbroek, in Levensber. Mij Ned. Letterk. (1897); C. Busken Huet, in Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, 15, 21. J.W.W.

Honorius 'Augustodunensis' (*c. 1090; †c. 1150), of uncertain origin (not of Autun), was a prolific and influential writer, a popularizer of knowledge for the lower clergy. His Elucidarium is a handbook of the faith. The Gemma Animae deals with the Mass and the Divine Office.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 172; J. A. Endres, H. A. (1906); R. Bauerreis, 'Zur Herkunft des H. A.', in Stud. u. Mitt. zur Gesch. d. Bened. Ordens (1935). F.J.E.R.

Hood, Thomas (*London 23 V 1799; ∞1824 Jane Reynolds; †ibid. 3 V 1845), English poet with outstanding gift of humorous wordplay, finding scope in his comic periodicals. Of his graceful, sentimental serious poetry, 'The Song of the Shirt' stirred his age by its social implications.

Ed. Gem (1829); Hood's Own, or Laughter from Year to Year (1839).—Tylney Hall (3-vol. novel, 1824); Poetical Works, ed. W. Jerrold (1906); Whims and Oddities in Prose and Verse (2 vols, 1826–27).

F. F. Broderip, Memorials of H. (2 vols, 1860); W. Jerrold, T. H., his life and times (1907). R.M.H.

Hoofman, Elisabeth Koolaart (*Haarlem 23 II 1664; ∞1693 Pieter Koolaart; †Kassel 4 VI 1736), Dutch poet who, in a difficult life, wrote verse of equal value to that of her contemporaries.

Messias, herderszang (1729); Gedachten over eenige spreuken des Konings Salomon (1734); Naagelaten Gedichten, ed. W. Kops (1744).—W. P. Wolters and H. C. Rogge, Bloemlezing uit de gedichten van E. H. (1871). J.W.W.

Hooft, Pieter Cornelisz (*Amsterdam 16 III 1581; ∞1610 Christina van Erp (†1624), ∞1627 Heleonora Hellemans, widow of Bartelotti; †The Hague 21 V 1647), Dutch poet and writer. Son of an Amsterdam mayor, he received a sound classical education. From 1598 to 1601 he travelled in France and Italy. From Italy which made an impression on him which proved decisive for his life, he sent his fellow members of the 'Egelantier' (q.v.) a Rijmbrief which was still in the Rederijker tradition. Back in Amsterdam, however, he became the refined, aristocratic poet, matured under Italian and classical influence, who served beauty as no Dutch poet had done so far or was to do again for centuries. The majority of his poems between 1601 and 1610 are love lyrics showing great mastery of the language. Both playful and controlled he seems to dance on the surface of life and yet one is aware of the hidden depth of melancholy and passion underneath. At the same time he wrote the pastoral play Granida with a weak plot, on a well-worn arcadian theme, but with unsurpassed light lyrical passages. He proved unfit for commerce; he read law and was appointed bailiff of Muiden in 1609. There and at Amsterdam he gathered round him a circle of friends, all of them men and women passionately interested in the arts, whether literature or music (his wife was a pupil of Sweelinck) (see Muiderkring). He continued to take an active part in the literary life of Amsterdam and the vicissitudes of the chamber 'Egelantier'. He wrote two historical dramas and a comedy. Geeraerdt van Velsen (1613) was partly inspired by his environment at Muiden, partly the result of his increasing interest in history and statecraft. His comedy Warenar (1616), adapted from Plautus' Aulularia, was a box-office success and compensated the loss on the staging of Baeto, his other great drama. He himself observed that the writing took him only 9 days—this by way of an excuse for such a frivolous work. But for all that it is, with Breero's Spaanse Brabander, the best Dutch comedy of the century: full of wit and fun without being coarse. His interest in history continued to increase and he set himself to write the Nederlandse Historiën (2 vols, 1642, 1654). Modelled on Tacitus, it is terse, difficult and at times obscure, but at the same time virile and rich in content. Hooft is the best Dutch prose writer of the 17th century, the greatest poet of the first half of this century and the purest renaissance artist of his country.

Achilles ende Polyxena (1598); Theseus en Ariadne (1602); Granida (1605); Paris' oordeel (1607); Baeto oft Oorsprong der Hollanderen (1617); Lo Ipocrito (1617; after Aretino, unpub.); Gedichten (1636); Leven van Hendrik de Groote (1624); Rampsaaligheden der Verheffinge van den Huize Medicis (1638).

J. v. Vloten, Brieven van P. C. H. (1855); P. Leendertz, Volledige uitgave der Gedichten (2 vols, 1871–75; 2nd ed. F. A. Stoett, 1899); Volledige Werken, ed. W. G. Hellinga and others (1954 ff.).

Gielen, Romein and others, P. C. H., dichter, dramaturg, geschiedschrijver en magistraat (1947); G. Brandt, Het Leeven van Hooft (1677); Busken Huet, Litt. Fantasiën, I and XVIII; G. Kalff, 'Hooft's Lyriek', in De Gids (1900); J. Koopmans, 'Hooft als Allegorist', Letterk. Studien (1906); P. Leendertz, Jr., Bibliografie der Werken van P. C. H. (1931); G. Kazemier, Het Vers Hooft (1932); J. D. M. Cornelissen, H. en Tacitus (1938); Th. H. d'Angremond, P. C. H.'s Achilles en Polyxena (1943); F. Veenstra, Bijdrage tot de kennis v. d. invloeden op Hooft (1946); Annie Romein-Verschoor, P. C. Hooft (1947); H. W. van Tricht, P. C. H. (2 vols, 1950–51); R. C. Bakhuizen van den Brink, 'Hooft's Warenar', in Studiën en Schetsen, III; J. Prinsen JLzn., P. C. H. (1922); A. Donkersloot, 'De verzen van H. voor Brechje Spieghel', in Festbundel de Vooys (1940); H. Bruch, P. C. H. Boexken van Cornelius Tacitus: van de gelegentheit, zeeden ende volken van Germaniën (1943); 5 poems by H., tr. Sir Herbert Grierson in The Flute etc. (1931), repr. in Two Dutch Poets; while Batavian Anthology by J. Browning and H. S. van Dyk contains trs of 3 songs, 2 choruses from Granida and Baeto and a fragment of Geeraerdt v. Velsen. See also biblio. in J. L. Walch, Nieuw Handboek etc. (1949) pp. 3857. A.M.B.W.

Hooft, Willem Dircksz (*Amsterdam 1594; †V 1658), Dutch playwright, member of the chamber 'Egelantier' and the board of the Amsterdam theatre. He wrote unedifying farces on sometimes edifying subjects.

Jan Saly (1622); Doortrapte Melis de Metselaer (1623); Andrea de Pierre Peerdekooper (1628); Styve Piet (1628); De hedendaegsche Verloren Soon (1630).

J. F. Haverman, W. D. H. en zijn Kluchten (1895); Ch. M. Dozy, 'W. D. H.', in Oud-Holland, VI. A.M.B.W.

Hooge, Romeyn de (*Amsterdam IX 1645; †Haarlem 10 VI 1708), Dutch artist and writer. A famous engraver, he was involved in 'Nil Volentibus Arduum' (q.v.) and also became a target for Bidloo's mockery in Midas. He retaliated in a cartoon. In 1688 he founded a drawing academy in Haarlem.

Schouburg der Nederlandse veranderingen (1674); Relation du voyage de sa majesté britanique en Hollande (1692); Esopus in Europa (40 pts, 1701–02); Spiegel van Staat des Ver. Nederlands (2 vols, 1706–07).

M. Roest, 'R. de H.', in Navorscher, VII (1857); F. W. D. C. A. v. Hattum, 'Boekillustraties van R. de H.', Imp., II (1942; with short biblio.). A.M.B.W.

Hoogstraten, David Fransz. van (*Rotterdam 14 III 1658; †ibid. 21 XI 1724), Dutch scholar, translator and poet; also polemic writer in the 'poets' war'.

Rijmoeffeningen (1678, with P. Rabus); Gedichten (1697); Esopische fabelen van Fedrus (1703).

P. Vlaming, in Davidis Hoogstrateni Poemata (1728); Th. Nolen, Iets over D. v. H. en de letterkundige twisten van zijn tijd (1886); E. F. Kossmann, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot de geschied. van het Ned. Tooneel (1915). J.W.W.

Hoogstraten, Frans van (*Rotterdam 1632; †ibid. 1696), Dutch poet and bookseller, translated much from the Latin, e.g. More's Utopia (1660), and wrote edifying poems. His Voorhof der Ziele (1668) is a poem to 60 prints by Romeyn de Hooge. A.M.B.W.

Hoogstraten, Jan van (*Rotterdam 26 I 1662; †Gouda 1756), Dutch scholar and bookseller, brother and antagonist of David v. Hoogstraten; commemorative and epic poet.

Minnezangen en drinkliederen (1701); Mengelzangen en liederen (1710); De Kruysheld of het leven van den grooten Apostel Paulus (1712); Mengelpoëzij of verscheyde gedigten (5 vols, 1714–20).

J. te Winkel, Ontwikkelingsgang der Ned. letterk., 5 (1924). J.W.W.

Hoogstraten, Samuel van (*1627; †1678), Dutch poet and painter, pupil of Rembrandt. In his own time his art criticism was taken seriously. He wrote a few foolishly ornate novels and lyrical poems.

Inleiding tot de Hoogeschool der Schilderkunst (1678); De Gestrafte Ontschaking of Zeeghafte herstelling van den jongen Haegaeveld, versiert met wonderlijke bejegeningen der Hollandsche Nimfen (1669); Herstelde Zeeg-Triomf van Karel de Tweede (1660).

G. H. Veth, in Oud-Holland, VII (1889). A.M.B.W.

Hoogvliet, Arnold (*Vlaardingen 3 VII 1687; ∞1735 Ida van der Ruyt; †ibid. 17 X 1763), Dutch poet. His melodious epic poem, Abraham de Aartsvader (1727), excels in good comparisons and descriptions of nature and in construction.

P. Ovidius Naso, Feestdagen (1719); Mengeldichten (2 vols, 1737–53); Zijdebalen, Hofdicht (1740).

Witsen Geysbeek, in Biografisch, anthologisch en critisch woordenboek (1822); W. Kloos, in Een daad van eenvoudige rechtvaardigheid (1909); J. Koopmans, in De Nieuwe Taalgids, 12 (1918); G. Knuvelder, Handboek van de Geschiedenis Nederl. letteren, 2 (1949). J.W.W.

Hook, Theodore Edward (*London 22 IX 1788; †ibid. 24 VIII 1841), English novelist, whose narratives influenced the tone of Dickens's early work; a writer of farces and lampoons, and a brilliant practical joker.

Sayings and Doings (9 vols, 1826–29); Maxwell (1830); Fathers and Sons (3 vols, 1842).

J. G. Lockhart, T. H.: a Sketch (1853); R. H. Dalton Barham, Life and Remains of H. (1849); M. F. Brightfield, T. H. and his Novels (1928). R.M.H.

Hook, Walter Farquhar, dean of Chichester (*London 13 III 1798; ∞1829 Anna Johnstone; †Chichester 20 IX 1875), English divine and man of letters, of ardent social interests.

Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Biography (8 vols, 1842–52); Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury (12 vols, 1860–76); Parish Sermons, ed. W. Hook (1879).

W. R. W. Stephens, Life and Letters of H. (1878). R.M.H.

Hooker, Richard (*Heavitree, nr Exeter III 1553/4; ∞London 1588 Joan Churchman; †Bishopsbourne, nr Canterbury 2 XI 1600), English divine, a prose writer with a wide range of learning, including Greek and Hebrew, and a lover of music and poetry. From Exeter he went to Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Expelled (1579) he took orders (1581). He is best known for his Ecclesiastical Policy.

Ecclesiasticall Politie (8 bks, 1593–1661), bk 1 ed. R. W. Church (1868), bk 5 ed. R. Bayne (1902), bk 8 ed. R. A. Houk (1931); Works, ed. J. Gauden (1662), J. Keble (3 vols, 1836), rev. ed. R. W. Church and F. Paget (1888).

I. Walton, Life (new ed. 1858); C. J. Sisson, The Judicious marriage of Mr H. (1940); F. J. J. Shirley, R. H. and contemporary political ideas (1944). J.R.B.

Hookes, Nicholas (*London 1628; ∞Elizabeth?; †ibid. 7 XI 1712), English poet, contemporary at Westminster School with Dryden, preceding him to Trinity College, Cambridge.

Amanda (1653; repr. 1923); Miscellanea Poetica (1653).

'Hook', in Thomas Campbell, Specimens of the British Poets (1819). B.L.J.

Hoop, Adriaan van der (*Rotterdam 17 VI 1802; ∞1826 Dorothea W. Engels; †ibid. 4 XI 1841), Dutch poet and editor, self-taught with strong foreign influences; the romantic pose and aggressiveness were not intrinsically justified in his epic, dramatic and critical writings.

Verse: Poëzy (1830); Warschau (1832); Willem Tell (1832); Leyden ontzet in 1574 (1833); Het slot van IJsselmonde (1834); De Renegaat (1837); Columbus (1840); Lente en Herfst (1842).—Gedichten (4 vols, 1859–61).—Plays: Hugo en Elvire (1831); Johanna Shore (1834); De Horoscoop (1838); Han van IJsland (1838).

J. Koopmans, in De Beweging, 2 (1906); C. G. N. de Vooys, ibid. 12 (1917). J.W.W.

Hope, Thomas (*Amsterdam c. 1770; ∞1806 Louisa Beresford; †London 3 II 1831), English author and virtuoso, writer of works on costume and furniture and of one novel, of Byronic flavour, in picaresque tradition.

Household Furniture and Interior Decoration (1807); Costume of the Ancients (2 vols, 1809); Designs of Modern Costume (1812).—Novel: Anastasius, or Memoirs of a Greek writer at the close of the 18th Century (1819). R.M.H.

Hopkins, Charles (*Exeter c. 1664; †London ? c. 1700), English poet and playwright whose ease is deceptively 'natural' and who wrote with care, borrowing from Shakespeare, Fletcher and Dryden for his Boadicea. Generally popular, Hopkins was praised by Dryden.

Verse: Epistolary Poems (1694); White-hall (1698, etc.).—Drama: Pyrrhus, King of Epirus (1695); Boadicea (1697). B.L.J.

Hopkins, Gerard Manley (*Stratford, Essex 28 VII 1844; †Dublin 8 VI 1889), English poet and Jesuit priest. In 1866 Hopkins became a Roman Catholic, worked for a while as a parish priest in Liverpool and Glasgow and spent the rest of his life teaching in Stonyhurst College and University College, Dublin. Hopkins's verse is the expression of his religious faith and struggle. Its stylistic interest is great—he experimented in sprung rhythm, which is based on metrical regularity and syllabic freedom; in syntactical compression; and in word coinage. But his manner is inseparable from his vision. Abruptness, ellipses and startling compound-words (brown-as-dawning-skinned, between-pie, wolfsnow) are the objective correlative for his inner battles and his exploration of the individuality ('thisness') of men and objects. After Bridges's calculatedly delayed publication of Hopkins's poems in 1918 he became one of the strongest (if not always the happiest) influences on modern poetry.

Poems of G. M. H., ed. Robert Bridges (1918); rev. C. Williams (1930); The Letters of G. M. H. to Robert Bridges, ed. C. C. Abbott (2 vols, 1935); The Notebooks and Papers of G. M. H., ed. H. House (1937).

J. Pick, G. M. H., Poet and Priest (1942); E. Ruggles, G. M. H. (1947); W. H. Gardner, G. M. H. (2 vols, vol. I rev. 1948, vol. II 1949); Immortal Diamond, ed. N. Weyand (1949, a Jesuit symposium; interesting for its glossary, biblio. and an essay on sprung rhythm).

B.H.

Hopkins, JOHN (□Great Waldingfield, Suffolk 23 X 1570), English schoolmaster (in Suffolk?) and afterwards rector of Great Waldingfield. His name is always associated with that of Sternhold, whose metrical versions of the psalms Hopkins published with additions of his own.

All such Psalms of David as Thomas Sternhold didde in his lifetime draw into English metre (1549; contains 37 versions by Sternhold and 7 by H.); another ed. William Wittingham (1556, with an additional 7 versions), 1st complete ed. 1561 (with additions by Kethe, Norton, Marckant and Pullain); Dictionary of Hymnology, ed. J. Julian (1892). J.B.B.

Hopkins, JOHN (*1 I 1674/5), English verse-writer, author of Pindarics, who apologized for rhyming Paradise Lost when he 'did not so well Perceive, the majesty . . . of Mr Milton's Style'.

Milton's Paradise Lost, imitated in rhyme (1699); Amasia. A Collection of Poems (1700)

B.L.J.

Hopkinson, FRANCIS (*Philadelphia 2 X 1737; ∞1768 Ann Borden; †ibid. 9 V 1791), American essayist, poet, musician, painter. He signed the Declaration of Independence, designed the U.S. flag. He wrote graceful Addisonian essays, as well as satires on contemporary affairs.

POEMS: The Battle of the Kegs (1779); A Set of Eight Songs (1788).—PROSE: A Pretty Story (1774).—The Miscellaneous Essays and Occasional Writings of F. H. (3 vols, 1792).

G. E. Hastings, The Life and Works of F. H. (1926). H.L.C.

Hopper, NORA (*Exeter 1871; ∞5 III 1901 W. H. Chesson; †England 14 IV 1906), Irish minor poet, associated with the Irish Literary Revival and influenced by W. B. Yeats.

Under Quicken Boughs (1896); Songs of the Morning (1900); Aquamarines (1902); Selected Poems (1906); Ballads in Prose (1894).

R.McH.

Horace (QUINTUS HORATIUS FLACCUS) (*Venusia 8 XII 65; †Rome 27 XI 8 B.C.), Latin poet. Horace was brought by his father, a freedman of modest circumstances, to Rome, where he received the best available education. While completing his studies at Athens (44) he was enlisted to the cause of M. Brutus and served as a tribunus militum under him until his defeat at Philippi (42). Returning to Italy he was compelled by the confiscation of his paternal estate to seek employment as a minor civil servant and commenced writing his Epodes (published 30) and Satires (Bk 1 pub. 35; Bk 2, 30). Becoming known in literary circles he was introduced in 38 by Virgil and Varius to Maecenas, who admitted him to his intimate circle of friends and in a few years gave him the Sabine farm celebrated in his poetry.

The earlier satires show Horace in a bitter invective mood, but this passed as his circumstances improved, and in the later satires, as in the first book of the Epistles (pub. 20) he gives a genial criticism of life and manners, in strong contrast with the burning indignation of Juvenal. He is more frankly revealing of his own life and character than any other Latin poet. In the Satires too, as well as in the second book of the Epistles and Ars Poetica, both published towards the end of his life, he is seen as a literary critic of importance.

Three books of the Odes were published in 23. These poems range widely from love-pieces of the lightest nature to grave moral and national themes. As a lyricist he is to be contrasted with Catullus both in his limited emotional range and, above all, in the exquisite perfection of form which he attained. The Carmen Saeculare and Book 4 of the Odes were published in 17 and 13 B.C.

Ed. R. Bentley (1711); ed. J. C. Orelli–I. G. Baiter–G. Hirschfelder–W. Mewes (2 vols, 4th ed. 1886–92); E. C. Wickham (2 vols, 3rd ed. 1896–91); O. Keller–A. Holder (2 vols, 2nd ed. 1899–25); F. Klingner (2nd ed. 1950). Satires, Epistles, Ars Poetica, tr. H. R. Fairclough (Loeb Libr. 1929); Odes, Epodes, tr. C. E. Bennett (Loeb Libr. 1914); Odes, Epodes, tr. A. D. Godley (1898).

W. Y. Sellar, H. and the Elegiac Poets (1892); J. F. D'Alton, H. and his age (1917); A. Y. Campbell, H., a new interpretation (1924); T. R. Glover, H., a return to allegiance (1932); L. P. Wilkinson, H. and his Lyric poetry (1945). A.J.D.

Horman, WILLIAM (*Salisbury c. 1450; †Eton 12 IV 1535), vice-provost of Eton, author of a Vulgaria, a collection of sentences in Latin and English, and of the Antibossicon, a defence of William Lily's grammar against an attack by Robert Whitinton ('Bossus').

Vulgaria, pr. Pynson (1519), W. de Worde (1530), repr. M. R. James (1926); Antibossicon G. Hormani ad G. Lilium, pr. Pynson (1521). R.W.B.

Horne, RICHARD HENRY or HENGIST (*London 1 I 1803; ∞1847 Miss Foggs; †Margate 13 III 1883), English playwright and poet, of adventurous life; author, with Elizabeth Barrett, of inept criticism The New Spirit of the Age (2 vols, 1844). His tragedies, despite a certain grandeur of construction and poetic intensity (which also marked his epic Orion (1843), sold at a farthing a copy), were never performed.

Cosmo De Medici (1837); Death of Marlowe (1837); Laura Dibalzo (1880); Australian Facts and Prospects (with life, 1859).

Letters of E. B. B. addressed to R. H. H. (2 vols, 1877). R.M.H.

Horne, THOMAS HARTWELL (*London 20 X 1780; ∞1812 Sarah Millard; †ibid. 27 I 1862), English biblical scholar and bibliographer, whose Introduction to Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures (1818) was in his days a vanguard work passing through many editions.

Brief View of Necessity and Truth of Christian Revelation (1800).

S. A. Cheyne, Reminiscences of T. H. H. (1862). R.M.H.

Hortensius, QUINTUS H. HORTALUS (*114; †50 B.C.), Roman orator, was Cicero's chief forensic rival. He wholeheartedly supported the senate and thus came into conflict with Cicero over Pompey's extraordinary commands in 67 and 66. In oratory his style was 'Asian' and overflorid, but to his copiousness he united a quick and acute brain. No works survive.

For Cicero's estimate of him see Brutus; on 'Asian' rhetoric see E. Norden, Die antike Kunstprosa (1915). J.A.W.

Horwitz, BELA (also known as BELA CHASAN), 18th-century Yiddish writer, author of the oldest history of Prague Jewry.

Geschichte des Hauses David (1705). J.S.

Hoskins, JOHN (*Monnington-upon-Wye 1566?; ∞Bath 1 VIII 1601 Benedicta Bourne; †Morehampton, Herefordshire 27 VIII 1638), English lawyer, poet and wit, a patron of writers, including Ben Jonson. Hoskins was a friend of Sidney's on whose Arcadia he commented in his Directions.

Directions for Speech and Style, ed. H. H. Hudson (1936).

L. B. Osborn, Life, Letters and Writings of J. H. (1937). B.L.J.

Hostos, EUGENIO MARÍA DE (*Mayagüez, Puerto Rico 11 I 1839; †Dominican Republic 11 VIII 1903), indefatigable educator, writer and agitator for the independence of the Spanish West Indies. Deeply influenced by the krausistas during his education in Spain and later by positivism, Hostos is neither an original nor compelling thinker; his writing is brilliant but vague. His best work is the Diario, the best-known, Moral Social (1888).

Obras completas (20 vols, 1939); Hostos (an anthology; Colección El Pensamiento de América, 13, 1944); Moral social, in Grandes Escritores de América series (1939). E.Sa.

Hostrup, JENS CHRISTIAN (*Copenhagen 20 V 1818; ∞1848 Henriette Vilhelmine Louise Mantzius, ∞1855 Christiane Georgine Elisabeth Hauch; †Frederiksberg 21 XI 1892), Danish poet and playwright. As a student of theology at Copenhagen he began to write poetry and plays, usually in an undergraduate setting. His plays are good theatre and have gained great popularity, but they have no high literary value. In his old age he wrote a counterpart to Ibsen's Doll's House entitled Eva.

PLAYS: Komedier (3 vols, 1900).—VERSE: Sange og Digte fra 30 Aar (1872); Sange og Digte fra de senere Aar (1884); Efterladte Digte (1893).—MEMOIRS: Erindringer fra min Barndom og Ungdom (1891); Senere Livserindringer (1893).—Poetiske Skrifter (5 vols, 1852–55).

Breve fra og til C. H. (1897); Helge Hostrup, J. C. H. (1916). E.B.

Hou FANG-YÜ (□Shang-ch'iu 1618; †ibid. 1655), Chinese essayist. Hou, the son of a prominent politician, enjoyed a brilliant reputation in politico-literary circles of the late-Ming period. He is the hero of K'ung

Shang-jên's famous play, T'ao-hua shan. His essay-style was modelled on the ku-wên of Ou-yang Hsiu.

Chuang-hui t'ang wên-chi (1656).
A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Houbraken, Arnold (*Dordrecht 28 III 1660; †Amsterdam 14 X 1719), Dutch painter, etcher and writer whose De Groote Schouwburg der Nederlandsche Kunstschilders en schilderessen (3 vols, 1718–21) is still of importance.

C. Hofstede de Groot, A. H. in seiner Bedeutung für die holländische Kunstgeschichte (1891). J.W.W.

Houdar de La Motte, Antoine, otherwise known as Lamotte-Houdar(t) (*Paris 17 ? I 1672; †Paris 26 XII 1731), French writer. He was a prolific but undistinguished dramatist and poet, whose verse rendering of the Iliad (1714) reopened the quarrel of the ancients and the moderns (see C. Perrault), which now became a debate on the 18th-century conception of poetry.

Verse: Odes (1709); Fables (1719).—Plays: Les Macchabées (1721); Romulus (1722); Inès de Castro (1723); Le Magnifique (1731).—Œuvres de théâtre (2 vols, 1730); Œuvres complètes (11 vols, 1754); Paradoxes littéraires de H. de La M. (his critical writings), ed. Jullien (1859).
P. Dupont, H. de La M. (1898). G.B.

Houghton, Richard Monckton Milnes, 1st Baron (*London 19 VI 1809; ∞1851 Hon. Annabel Crewe; †Vichy 11 VIII 1885), English poet and man of letters. His poetry has graceful charm and at the same time a compelling quality, which is seen particularly in such poems as 'The Beating of my own Heart' and 'Strangers Yet'.

Poetry for the People (1840); Palm Leaves (1848); The Poetical Works of R. M. M. (2 vols, 1876); The Influence of Homer (1829); The Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of John Keats (2 vols, 1848; repr. 1927); Monographs (1873).
J. Pope-Hennessy, Monckton Milnes; the years of promise 1809–1851 (1949); T. W. Reid, The Life, Letters and Friendships of R. M. M., First Lord H. (2 vols, 1890). B.H.

Hout, Jan van (*Leyden 14 XII 1542; ∞Lijsbeth Reyersd. van Wing (†1605); †12 II 1609), Dutch poet, prose writer and playwright; from 1564 secretary of Leyden. His literary remains are slight; his poetry and prose are renaissance in form; his only known drama (Lotteryspel) on the other hand is still in the Rederijker tradition which, incidentally, he fought tooth and nail, especially in the dedication of his lost translation of Buchanan's Franciscanus.

Ed. J. Prinsen, in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., 22–23 (1904).
J. Prinsen, De Nederlandsche Renaissancedichter J. v. H. (1907) and in De Beweging, III (1908); J. C. H. De Pater, J. v. H. (1947). J.J.M.

Houwaert, Jan Baptist (*Brussels 1533; †11 III 1599), Dutch playwright and prolific poet. In addition to translations from the Latin he wrote lyrical poems, long didactical poems such as Den Generalen Loop der Werelt (1612), Paraensesis Politica (1614), Milenus Clachte (1577–78), Pegasides Pleyn ofte Den Lusthof der Maechden (1582–83), De vier Wterste (1583) and plays in the Rederijker tradition, such as Handel der Amoreusheyt, bevattende dry excellente, constighe soetvloeyende poetische spelen van sinnen, van Jupiter en Yo (1583), Een tragedie vander Orloghen, Die Comedie van den Peys and a dialogue Virtutem dilige (all three unpublished, written before 1596). In him the Rederijker tradition and renaissance as well as Protestantism and humanism struggle for supremacy.

Bibl. Belg. H 13–34, 89–189; F. v. Veerdeghem and O. van Daele, in Bull. Acad. royale de Belg., 3e série (1893); F. v. Veerdeghem, in Nederl. Museum (1894); J. F. Vanderheyden, in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., 51; W. de Vreese, in Het Boek, N. R. XXII; G. A. Nauta, in Tijdschr. v. Nederl. T. en Lett., 61; W. v. Eeghem, in Versl. Med. Kon. Vlaamse Ac. (1940); J. J. Mak, in Nieuwe Taalg. (1951). J.J.M.

Hoveden, John of and Roger of: see Howden.

Howard, Edward (*London XI 1624), English essayist, poet and dramatist whose preface to The Women's Conquest (1671) urges blank verse as preferable to couplets in drama. His The Change of Croones was admired by Pepys but led to political disfavour. Howard's translation of Cicero's De Amicitia into heroic couplets (1674) is a tour de force. B.L.J.

Howard, Edward Grenville George (†30 XII 1841), English writer of sea-stories, sometime shipmate of Marryat and his sub-editor at the Metropolitan Magazine.

Rattlin the Reefer, ed. Captain Marryat (3 vols, 1836); Jack Ashore (3 vols, 1840); Sir Henry Morgan the Buccaneer (3 vols, 1842). R.M.H.

Howard, Henry, Earl of Surrey (*Hunsdon ? 1517 ?; ∞c. I–c. IV 1532 Lady Frances de Vere; †London 20 I 1546/7), English poet. As companion to Henry VIII's illegitimate son, the duke of Richmond, he visited France (1532). Earl Marshal at the trial of Anne Boleyn (1536) and active against the Pilgrimage of Grace, Surrey later held military commands of forces in France (1543–45); nevertheless, he was executed on a trumped-up charge of high treason. Unjustifiably notorious for pride, Surrey was brave, modest and generous. He successfully followed Romance lyrical models; his translation is smooth and strong.

The Poems of H. H., Earl of S., ed. F. M. Padelford (1928).
E. Casady, H. H., Earl of S. (1938).
B.L.J.

Howard, H. L.: see Wells, Charles Jeremiah.

Howard, Sir Robert (*1626; ∞Mrs Uphill, ∞Lady Honora O'Brien, ∞?, ∞26 II 1692/3 Annabella Dives; †London 3 IX 1698), English politician and dramatist; knighted at Newbury (29 VI 1644); imprisoned in Windsor Castle during the Commonwealth; sat in Parliament after the Restoration and held posts in the Treasury. Howard collaborated with Dryden in The Indian Queen (1665), but they were involved later in controversy in which Howard consistently opposed rhyme on naturalistic grounds.

Four New Plays (1665), repr. with The Duke of Lerma as Five New Plays (1692).—Poems (1660; 1696); The History of Religion (1694; as The Growth of Deism, 1709).
Dryden and H., ed. D. D. Arundell (1929); F. R. Scott, The Life and Works of Sir R. H. (1946). B.L.J.

Howden (Hoveden), John of (†1275), English poet, clerk to Eleanor, widow of Henry III. His Practica Chilindri is an astronomical work. His poems, in Latin, are mystical and devotional. The best-known is Philomena, of which he made an Anglo-Norman version.

Practica Chilindri, ed. E. Brock (1868); Philomena, ed. C. Blume (1930); other poems, ed. F. J. E. Raby, in Surtees Soc. (1939).
L. W. Stone, 'Jean de Howden', in Romania (1945). F.J.E.R.

Howden (Hoveden), Roger of (†c. 1201), English historian, was a clerk in the chancery of Henry II whom he accompanied to France in 1173–74 and for whom he acted as legate in 1175. He became parson of Howden before 1176. In 1189 he served as itinerant justice of the forests in Northumberland, Cumberland and Yorkshire. His chronicle runs from 732 to 1201 and is of exceptional value for the last nine years.

Chronica Rogeri de Hovedene, ed. W. Stubbs (4 vols, 1868–71); F. Barlow, 'R. of H.', in Eng. Hist. Rev., 65 (1950). R.R.R.

Howe, John (*Loughborough 17 V 1630; †London 2 IV 1705), English theologian, minister at Great Torrington, Devon, and resident chaplain to Oliver Cromwell at Whitehall. His writings are turgid in style but sound and vigorous in content.

A Treatise on delighting in God (1670); Union among Protestants (1683); A Redeemer's tears wept over lost souls (1684).
H. Rogers, Life and Character of H. (rev. ed. 1863).

Howell, James (*Llangammarch, Breconshire ? 1594 ?; □Holborn 3 XI 1666), English pamphleteer and letter-writer. 1623, Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford; foreign travel, 1616–24; imprisoned in the Fleet, 1643–51, as a debtor; he wrote many pamphlets there. In 1661 he was appointed Historiographer Royal. Howell had a facile pen, a wide knowledge of languages and a great interest in contemporary politics. He is now remembered as the writer of Epistolae Ho-Elianae, essays of some charm written in the epistolary form.

Δενδρολογία: Dodona's Grove, or, the Vocall Forest (1640; repr. 1644, 1645, 1649); Instructions for Forreine Travell (1642, 1650, 1868); Epistolae Ho-Elianae, vol. I, 1645; vol. II, 1647; vols I–III, 1650 (called '2nd ed.'); vols I–IV, 1655 (called '3rd ed.'); standard ed. J. Jacobs (2 vols, 1890–92).
W. H. Vann, Notes On the Writings of J. H. (1924); E. Bensly, 'Additional Notes on the Familiar Letters of J. H.', in Aberystwyth Studies, VIII (1926). C.P.

Howell, Thomas (*Dunster ?; fl. 1567–81), English poet who was under the patronage of the Pembroke and Talbot families. He wrote with care lyrics on conventional subjects, which are often tuneful. His sonnets resemble Shakespeare's.

Howell, His Devises (1581), ed. Sir Walter Raleigh (1906); The Poems of T. H., ed. A. B. Grosart, Occasional Issues, III (1879).
B.L.J.

Howitt, Mary, née Bothan (*Coleford, Glos 12 III 1799; ∞1821 William Howitt; †Rome 30 I 1888) and Howitt, William (*Heanor, Derby. 18 XII 1792; †Rome 3 III 1879), English miscellaneous writers, joint authors of number of works in poetry and prose. Mary translated Hans Andersen and Fredrika Bremer.

Verse: Book of the Seasons (1831); The Forest Minstrel (1822); Desolation of Eyam

(1827).—Prose: Literature and Romance of Northern Europe (1852).—W. Howitt: Homes and Haunts of most Eminent British Poets (1849); History of Priestcraft (1833).

M. Howitt, Life of M. H. (1889); A. M. H. Watt, Pioneers of Spiritual Reformation (1883; for W. Howitt). R.M.H.

Hoy, Thomas (*London 12 XII 1659; †Jamaica ? c. 1718), English physician and verse translator of Musaeus and Ovid, who went to Merchant Taylors' School (1672), became a probationer fellow of St John's College, Oxford, and regius professor of physic.

Agathocles the Sicilian Usurper (1683).—Translations: Two Essays (Musaeus, Hero and Leander; Ovid, Art of Love, Bk I, 1692). B.L.J.

Hoz y Mota, Juan Claudio de (*Madrid 1622; †Madrid ? 1714 ?), Spanish dramatist. He is a minor figure who dramatized one of Zayas's novels with some success Other plays by him influenced Rivas, Zorrilla and Hartzenbusch.

Bibl. Autores Esp., XLIX. E.M.W.

Hraban: see Rabanus Maurus.

Hrotsvitha (fl. 960), Latin dramatist; of noble Saxon birth; nun at Gandersheim. Her 'dramas' (series of rhythmical prose dialogues, in imitation of Terence) deal with penitents and martyrs, but it is the vivid portrayal of sin (in Abraham a brothel scene) or an episode of farce which now interest us. Other works are legends in hexameters (amongst them Theophilus, the medieval Faust) and the Gesta Oddonis, written for abbess Gerberg, niece of Otto I. Hrotsvitha's works are part of the Ottonian renaissance; they were first noticed by Conrad Celtis (1501).

Hrotsvithæ opera, ed. K. Strecker (2nd ed. 1930); Ger. tr. in P. v. Winterfeld, Deutsche Dichter des lat. MAs. (3rd and 4th eds 1922); The non-dramatic works, tr. Sister M. G. Wiegand (1936); The plays, tr. H. J. W. Tillyard (1923).

J. Körner, Bibliographisches Handbuch (1949; for further reference). F.P.P.

Hsi K‘ang (▫Chih, Anhui 223; †Lo-yang 262), Chinese poet, musician and Taoist philosopher. While living at Shan-yang (north of the capital, Lo-yang), Hsi became one of a celebrated literary-philosophical coterie, 'The Seven Sages of the Bamboo Grove' (fl. c. 245–55) whose interests were poetry, music and Taoist alchemy. He seems to have kept away from contemporary politics but involvement by a friend brought his execution. Although much of his writing was soon lost, a number of his philosophical essays, of considerable interest, and his famous Ch‘in-fu have survived.

Hsi K‘ang and his Poetical Essay on the Lute, tr. R. H. van Gulik (Tokyo, 1941).—Collected Works: Hsi Chung-san chi (select tr. in E. von Zach, Sinologische Beiträge, II, Batavia, 1935; G. Margouliès, Anthologie Raisonnée de la Litt. Chin., 1948). A.R.D.

Hsiao T‘ung (*501; †Nanking 531), Chinese prince. His Wên-hsüan, the oldest extant anthology of a comprehensive kind, has preserved many early poems and prose-pieces. His method of selection, which he defines in a preface, epitomized the contemporary view of literature as an art of belles-lettres.

Wên-hsüan (completed c. 530), pref. tr. in G. Margouliès, Le 'Fou' dans le Wen-Siuan (1925). A.R.D.

Hsieh Ling-yün (▫Yang-hsia 385; †Kuang-chou 433), Chinese poet. Hsieh inherited the title of Duke K‘ang-lo. He served Liu Yü who became first emperor of the Liu-sung dynasty (420). Later he was implicated in various plots and was executed. A fine nature poet, he developed parallelism which was to become one of the main elements in the T‘ang dynasty 'regulated' verse (lü-shih).

Hsieh K‘ang-lo chi (select tr. in E. von Zach, Sinologische Beiträge, II, Batavia, 1935). A.R.D.

Hsieh T‘iao (▫Yang-hsia 464; †Nanking 499), Chinese poet. Hsieh is associated with Shên Yo and others under the designation of the 'Yung-ming period poets' (483–93); in their discussions the T‘ang dynasty 'regulated' poetry is supposed to have its beginnings. Hsieh, who was the best poet of the group, foreshadows, in his four-line poems, the T‘ang chüeh-chü ('stop-short').

Hsieh Hsüan-ch‘êng chi (select tr. in E. von Zach, Sinologische Beiträge, II, Batavia, 1935; G. Margouliès, Anthologie Raisonnée de la Litt. Chin., 1948). A.R.D.

Hsü Kuang-ch‘i (▫Shanghai 24 IV 1562; †Peking 8 XI 1633), Chinese scholar. After his appointment to the Hanlin academy (1604), Hsü became the first translator of European books, rendering Euclid and other works on mathematics, astronomy etc. into Chinese, with the aid of Matteo Ricci. He spent the rest of his life in the advocacy of Christianity (he had been baptized in 1603) and the introduction of western sciences and military weapons.

Hsü Wên-ting kung chi (1896; new eds with additions 1909, 1933).

L. Pfister, 'Notices Biographiques et Bibliographiques', Variétés Sinologiques, 59 (Shanghai, 1932); A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Hsü LING (□T'an, Shantung 507; †583), Chinese poet. Hsü achieved high office under the short-lived Liang and Ch'ên dynasties. His name is coupled with that of Yü Hsin to typify the poetic style of the 6th century. His work shows great concern for musical effect and comes near to the T'ang dynasty 'regulated' verse. He also compiled an important poetry anthology (Yü-t'ai hsin-yung). A.R.D.

Hsü SHÊN (□Chao-ling), Chinese scholar. Opinons on the dates of Hsü's life vary between c. 75–105 and c. 58–147. His is the earliest extant etymological and palaeographical Chinese dictionary (Shuo-wên chieh-tzŭ (completed c. 100, now normally pr. with commentary of Tuan Yü-ts'ai, 1813–15). His studies on the classics, wu-ching i-i (incorporated in Chêng Hsüan's Po wu-ching i-i), were much respected by his contemporaries. A.R.D.

Hsüan-tsang, religious name of Ch'ên ? I (*602; †Ch'ang-an 664), Chinese Buddhist monk. From his pilgrimage to India (c. 629–c. 645) he returned to Ch'ang-an with many scriptures and other sacred objects. In 646 he presented to emperor T'ai-tsung a record of his travels, later edited and published by his disciple, Pien-chi. He passed the rest of his life in translating the scriptures which he had secured. Seventy-five of his translations remain in the Chinese Tripitaka. He became a 'hero' of later fiction.

Ta-T'ang hsi-yu chi (648; Mémoires sur les Contrées occidentales, tr. S. Julien, 2 vols, 1857–58; Buddhist Records of the Western World, tr. S. Beal, 2 vols, 1906); Wei-shih êrh-shih lun ([Hsüan-tsang's translation of Vijñaptimātratāsiddhi; Vimśatika of Vasubandhu], tr. C. H. Hamilton, 1938).

S. Julien, Histoire de la vie de Hiouen-Thsang et de ses voyages dans l'Inde (1853; tr. of biog. by Hsüan-tsang's disciples, Hui-li and Yen-ts'ung); S. Beal, Life of Hiuen-tsiang (1888; as last); T. Watters, On Yuan Chwang's travels in India (2 vols, 1904–05); R. Grousset, In the Footsteps of the Buddha (1932); A. Waley, The Real Tripitaka (1952). A.R.D.

Hsün-tzŭ, 'MASTER HSÜN', title of HSÜN K'UANG (*Chao state c. 300 B.C. ?), Chinese philosopher. The only certain date in Hsün-tzŭ's career is 255 when he was made magistrate of Lan-ling in the state of Ch'u. He first spent a long period (c. 285–265 ?) in Ch'i, attracted by the renown of the Chi-hsia 'academy'. His magistracy at Lan-ling appears to have been held for two periods (255–246 ? and 240–237 ?); in the interval he visited Chao and Ch'in. Confucian ideas were subjected by him to a far greater systematization than by Mêng-tzŭ. Avowing a fundamental disbelief in the essential goodness of human nature, maintained by Mêng-tzŭ, he insisted on the importance of education and fixed rules of conduct (li). It was his influence rather than Mêng-tzŭ's that prevailed in Confucianism of the late 3rd and 2nd century. The book, Hsün-tzŭ, shows a general homogeneity, apart from the last five chapters which are probably an addition, and a fine prose style.

The Works of Hsüntze, tr. H. H. Dubs (1928); J. J. L. Duyvendak, 'Hsün-tzŭ on the Rectification of Names', in T'oung Pao, XXIII (1924) and 'Notes on Dubs' tr. of Hsün-tzŭ', ibid., XXIX (1932).

H. H. Dubs, Hsüntze, the Moulder of Ancient Confucianism (1927); J. J. L. Duyvendak, 'The Chronology of Hsün-tzŭ', in T'oung Pao, XXVI (1929). A.R.D.

Hu TS'ÊNG, 9th-century Chinese poet. Hu wrote a large number of historical poems (yung-shih shih) which though untypical of T'ang poetry, enjoyed great popularity in the succeeding centuries; they are frequently quoted in Ming historical novels. His poetry was equally popular in Japan (15th–16th century) for its lucidity of expression.

An-ting chi (collected works). A.R.D.

Huang CHING-JÊN (*Kao-ch'un 20 II 1749; †Yün-ch'êng 25 V 1783), Chinese poet. Huang had for much of his life to endure poverty. Although he won early recognition as a poet, he continually failed in the civil service examinations and was forced to take private secretarial posts. Finally in 1782 he abandoned himself to a life of pleasure. His poems, often pessimistic in expression, achieve some of the spontaneity of his great model, Li Po, in their sincere treatment of emotions.

Liang-tang hsüan ch'üan-chi (1858).

A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Huang T'ING-CHIEN (□Fen-ning, Kiangsi 1045; †I-chou, Kwangsi 1105), Chinese poet. Huang's reputation was already growing when he asked Su Shih to accept him as a 'disciple' (c. 1077). With the return of Su and the 'conservatives' to power (1086) he was given a literary post and commissioned with others to write the history of emperor Shên-tsung's reign (1068–85; the period of Wang An-shih's reforms). When the reform party regained its influence (1094) he was banished and spent the rest of his life in provincial posts. Like Su, he was famous also as a calligrapher. In his poetry he strove for originality of expression; his tz'ŭ are distinguished by skilful use of colloquialisms. His style found many imitators who formed the 'Kiangsi' school.

Shan-ku chi (select tr. in G. Margouliès, Anthologie Raisonnée de la Litt. Ch., 1948). A.R.D.

Huang Tsung-hsi (*Yü-yao 24 IX 1610; †ibid, 12 VIII 1695), Chinese scholar and political thinker. Huang played a prominent part in the political strife of the late Ming period. After the fall of the dynasty he gave himself entirely to study. His Ming-ju hsüeh-an (wr. 1676), a critical history of Ming philosophers, achieves considerable objectivity despite his own adherence to Wang Yang-ming. He left unfinished a similar work on Sung and Yüan philosophers, Sung Yuan hsüeh-an, completed by various hands, 1846. His small book on political theory, Ming-i tai-fang lu (wr. 1662), had great influence upon the reformers at the end of the Manchu dynasty.

A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Huarte de San Juan, Juan (*San Juan de Pie de Puerto 1530?; †Linares 1591?), Spanish medical writer. He practised medicine in northern Andalusia. His Examen de ingenios para las ciencias, a well-written and learned treatise on the qualities of the mind in relation to those of the body, was published in 1575, included in the Index of 1581 and reissued, purged, by his son in 1594. It was much read in England.

Ed. R. Sanz (1930); Examen de ingenios, the examination of men's wits, tr. R. C[arew] (1594).

M. de Iriarte, H. de S. J. y su Examen de ingenios (1948); A. Farinelli, Dos excéntricos (1936). E.M.W.

Hubert, Antonis de (*Zierikzee 1590; †Leyden 1636), Dutch poet, attorney at Zierikzee, later lived at Amsterdam where he met Reael, Hooft and Vondel. His versification of the psalms (1624) is distinguished by the purity of his Dutch. He served on the committee for the translation of the Bible at Leyden.

J. H. de Stoppelaar, De Zelandica Gente de Huybert (1852). A.M.B.W.

Huc, Evariste Regis (*Toulouse 1 VI 1813; †Paris 25 III 1860), French missionary and writer. His Souvenirs of his great journey to China (1850) were translated by Hyatt in 1852.

L'Empire Chinois (1854, tr. 1855); Le Christianisme en Chine (1857, tr. 1858).

Prince Henri d'Orléans, E.R.H. et ses critiques (1893).

Huch, Friedrich (*Brunswick 19 VI 1873; †Munich 12 V 1913), German novelist. He cultivated the particularly German genre, 'Bildungsroman'. His Peter Michel (1901) may be interpreted as a counterpart to Goethe's Wilhelm Meister, just as Die Geschwister (1903) is related to Goethe's Wahlverwandtschaften. But in all his novels the characteristics of a later period are apparent: decadent characters, psychological analysis, and dream visions intruding into a realistic world.

Mao (1907); Pitt und Fox (1909); Enzio (1911).—Gesammelte Werke, intro. Thomas Mann (4 vols, 1925).

N. Jollos, F. H. und sein Werk (1930); R. Denecke, F. H. und die Problematik der bürgerlichen Welt (1937). R.W.L.

Huchown or Sir Hugh of Eglinton?, 14th-century poet, presumably Scottish (or West Midland?); only The Pistill of Susan is firmly attributable to him.

'The Pistill of Susan', ed. F. J. Amours in Scottish Alliterative Poems (1891–97); S. O. Andrew, 'H.'s Works', in Rev. Eng. Studies, V (1929). R.W.B.

Hue de Rotelande, 12th-century Anglo-Norman poet, living in N.W. Herefordshire. His two Old French romances (c. 1185) have a Greco-Byzantine colouring. Ipomedon, unusually realistic in style, develops round the three days' tournament and the conquest of the unknown fair. Protheselaus, dedicated to Gilbert Fitz-Baderon of Monmouth (†1191), is a sequel with many chivalrous adventures and a slight love interest. Hue's popularity is shown by Middle English versions of Ipomedon, a work known also to Ulrich Füetrer.

Ipomedon, ed. E. Koelbing and E. Koschwitz (1889); Protheselaus, ed. F. Kluckow (1924). M.F.L.

Huet, Conrad Busken, pseuds. Thrasybulus, Een geabonneerde op het Bijblad, Fantasio (*The Hague 28 XII 1826; ∞1859 Anna van der Tholl; †Paris 1 V 1886), Dutch critic, historian, journalist and prose writer. He studied theology at Leiden, was first a parson, later co-editor of De Gids and a great friend of Potgieter's with whom he left De Gids after an editorial conflict, mainly because of Huet's criticism of the liberal government which he later continued in the East Indies. His censorship of the daily press in the East Indies was strongly resented, in particular by Potgieter, whose friendship gradually weakened. In 1876 Huet settled in Paris. His sketches and novels, though interesting, are hardly well done; it is impossible, however, to overrate the importance of his Litterarische Fantasiën en Kritieken, finally collected into 26 volumes (1881–88); because of their wit and merry sarcasm they still make fascinating reading, and the exactness of his critical assessments has been confirmed in most cases. Huet was at his most brilliant when he found fault and only at the end of his life, in his masterpiece, Het Land van Rembrandt (3 vols, 1882–84, Rembrandt's Heimat, Germ. tr. M. Mohr and G. v. d. Ropp, 1886–87), did he attain a certain harmony between praise and blame; it was the first Dutch cultural history, ingenious and subjective in composition and style.

Huet was still more fascinating, if possible, as a writer of letters, interesting in the Brieven aan Potgieter (ed. Verwey, 3 vols, 1925), engaging in those to his wife, Brieven van Cd. B. H. (ed. A. and G. B. H., 2 vols, 1890).

Brieven over den Bijbel (1858); Overdrukjes, schetsen en verhalen (1858); Kanselredenen (1861); Toespraken (1864); Lidewijde (1868); Robert Bruce's leerjaren (1898); Josefine (1898); Nationale vertoogen (2 vols, 1876); Potgieter 1860–1875. Persoonlijke Herinneringen (1877); Van Napels naar Amsterdam (1877); Parijs en omstreken (1878); Europeesche brieven (2 vols, 1878); Het land van Rubens (1879), The land of Rubens, Eng. tr. A. D. van Dam (1888).—Letters (to van Vloten) in De Twintigste Eeuw, 8 (1902); (to A. H. Bisschops Grevelink) in Groot Nederland (1928).

C. Hasselaar (Mrs B. Huet), in De Gids (1880); Quack, ibid. (1886); A. G. van Hamel, in Mannen van Beteekenis, 18 (1887); A. Pierson, 'Jongere Tijdgenooten', in Verspreide Geschriften, 1st series, I; J. B. Meerkerk, B. H. (1911); J. Saks, Potgieter en B. H. (1927); J. Tielrooy, C. B. H. et la littér. franç. (1923); J. Romein, in Erflaters van onze beschaving, 4 (1940); G. Colmjon, C. B. H. (1943); C. G. N. de Vooys, C. B. H. (1949); S. A. Naber, Vier Tijdgenooten (1894); H. J. Polak, 'Tweeërlei letterkundige kritiek', in De Gids (1891); C. G. N. de Vooys, 'Potgieter en B. H. als critici', in Letterkundige Studiën (1910); E. J. Potgieter, Kritische Studiën, 3; L. van Deyssel, 'Lidewijde', in Verzamelde Opstellen, I; F. Coenen, in Groot Nederland (1916); J. Tielrooy, 'De stijl van B. H.', in De Nieuwe Taalgids, 21 (1927). J.W.W.

Huet, PIERRE-DANIEL (*Caen 8 II 1630; †Paris 26 I 1721), French theologian; tutor, with Bossuet, to the dauphin. After much travel he settled (1711) in a Jesuit establishment in Paris, and wrote. He also edited the classics for his pupil (Delphin ed.) and studied the origins of romances.

Demonstratio Evangelica (1679); A History of Cartesian Philosophy (1692); Traité philosophique de la faiblesse d'esprit humain (posth., Amsterdam 1722).

C. J. G. Bartholomess, Vie de H. (1850); A. Dupont, P.-D. A. et l'exégèse comparatiste du XVIIe siècle (1930).

Hugh of St Victor (*1096; †1141), of Saxon birth, was educated at Hamersleben and then pursued his encyclopaedic studies at St Victor, teaching there until his death, and becoming famous as a prolific writer. It was his aim to gather all that was necessary in secular learning and in the knowledge of the scriptures and the Fathers in the service of a mystical theology. His Didascalion sets out his programme of learning, and his De sacramentis is, in effect, a summa theologiae.

Migne, Patr. Lat., 175–177.—H. Ostler, Die Psychologie des H. v. St V. (1906). F.J.E.R.

Hugh Primas OF ORLEANS (fl. 1136), French Latin poet, taught in Orleans and Paris. His rhythmical poems display his personality—his love of wine, of gambling, of women, and the ups and downs of his changeful life. He lived on the bounty of any who would help him, and vented his satire on those who became tired of him. His fellow scholars named him Primate and he was supreme in his easy mastery of rhythm and rhyme as well as of the leonine hexameter.

Die Oxforder Gedichte des Primas, ed. W. Meyer in Gött. Nachr. (1907). F.J.E.R.

Hughes, JOHN (*Marlborough 29 I 1676/7; †London 17 II 1719/20), English poet, dramatist, essayist and translator who contributed to the Tatler, Spectator and Guardian. Educated at a dissenting academy in Little Britain, London, with Isaac Watts and Samuel Say, he showed a liking for poetry and music. Still young, he had a post in the Ordinance Office, acting as secretary to several commissions purchasing land for the royal docks at Portsmouth and Chatham. His Siege of Damascus (1720), a tragedy, is the best of his poetic works, but the opera Calypso and Telemachus (1712) also received applause. He became affluent only with the appointment as secretary to the commissioners of the peace in the Court of Chancery. A friend of Addison whom he persuaded to produce Cato, Hughes has been warmly praised by Steele and seems to have been pleasant and talented. Writing on a variety of subjects, and translating from Fontenelle, he shows an easy, readable style, wearing his cloak of learning with the ease required by contemporary fashion. His edition of Spenser (1715) was unrivalled for nearly a century. B.L.J.

Poems on Several Occasions, with some select Essays in Prose, ed. W. Duncombe (1735); Collected Poems in Johnson, 22; Anderson, 7; Chalmers, 10; The Ecstasy (1720); The Letters of Abelard and Heloise (1722).—OPERA: Apollo and Daphne (1716).—PERIODICAL: The Lay Monk (1713–14, with Sir R. Blackmore).

S. Johnson, Life of J. H., in Lives, ed. G. Birkbeck Hill, II (1905). J.R.B.

Hughes, JOHN CEIRIOG: see CEIRIOG.

Hughes, THOMAS (fl. 1587), English dramatist, born in Cheshire and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge (1571) becoming a fellow (1576). Later a member of Gray's Inn he had chief share in the Misfortunes of Arthur, played before queen Elizabeth at Greenwich (8 II 1587/8).

The Misfortunes of Arthur (1587; repr. J. W. Cunliffe, Early English Classical Tragedies, 1912). B.L.J.

Hughes, THOMAS (*Uffington, Berks 29 X 1822; ∞1848 Frances Ford; †Brighton 21 III 1896), English novelist. Hughes was an active Christian Socialist reformer but is chiefly remembered for Tom Brown's Schooldays (1856).

The Scouring of the White Horse (1850); Tom Brown at Oxford (1866).

E. C. Mack and W. H. G. Armitage, T. H. (1953). B.H.

Hugo, COUNT of Montfort (Bregenz) (1357–1425), from 1388 Landvogt of Aargau and Thurgau, from 1415 governor of Styria. The 'Minnedienst' expected of a 14th-century noble, Hugo absolves mainly in gauche homage (including verse letters, duly dated) to his own (third) wife. Poems entitled Rede record his reflections on religion. A mediocre poet but an interesting figure. Melodies by his 'faithful servant Bürk Mangolt' are preserved.

H. v. M., ed. J. E. Wackernell (1881); Die Lieder des H. v. M. mit den Melodien des B. M., ed. P. Runge (1906). F.P.P.

Hugo, VICTOR-MARIE (*Besançon 26 II 1802; ∞1822 Adèle Foucher; †Paris 23 V 1885), French poet, novelist and playwright; son of General Léopold-Sigisbert Hugo. His early years were spent in the train of Napoleon's armies. The most stirring experiences of his childhood were his visits to Italy (1808) and Spain (1811–12). His studies were planned with a military career in mind, but his real vocation soon became apparent. At the age of 17 he founded a literary review, Le Conservateur littéraire, which ran for two years. When he was 20 he produced his first collection of verse (Odes et poésies diverses), followed by Nouvelles Odes (1824) and by Odes et Ballades (1826). The latter title was used again two years later for a volume combining the three collections. In 1823 Hugo wrote his first novel, Han d'Islande, and followed it up in 1826 with Bug-Jargal. His first published play, Cromwell, appeared in 1827, with a preface which, in spite of its dubious premises and conclusions, became a document of singular importance in literary history. The genre which it sought to justify—the romantic drama—was put to a crucial test in 1830 on the occasion of the production of Hernani. The ensuing quarrel—'la bataille d'Hernani'—established Hugo's leadership in the literary life of his time, a leadership further strengthened by the publication of his great historical novel, Notre-Dame de Paris (1831). His subsequent plays, however (Marion de Lorme, 1831; Le Roi s'amuse, 1832; Lucrèce Borgia, 1833; and Ruy Blas, 1838), met with varying degrees of success, and after the failure of Les Burgraves (1843), in which he had attempted to use the stage as the meeting point of lyric and epic poetry, he turned away from the theatre without abandoning drama. All his life he continued to add plays to his Théâtre en liberté (pub. 1886). His real medium was revealed in Les Orientales (1829), a book of verse which, in spite of the emphasis placed on subject-matter, represented the triumph of poetic imagery and technical skill. Such conventional features as it still contained gradually disappeared in the subsequent books—Les Feuilles d'Automne (1831), Les Chants du Crépuscule (1835), Les Voix intérieures (1837) and Les Rayons et les Ombres (1840)—which displayed a genuine freedom in the interpretation of nature, a freedom due to the poet's greater powers of observation and imaginative expression. Between 1843 and 1852 Hugo published nothing, and the poems written during those years were included in later collections. Outwardly it seemed that the pause was due to the tragic death of his daughter Léopoldine (1843). The same period of Hugo's life saw the awakening of his political ambitions. He had been in turn an ardent royalist, an admirer of Napoleon and a supporter of the July monarchy (he became Pair de France in 1845) until his faith in democracy supplanted his earlier beliefs and allegiances. In 1848 he was elected one of the 'representatives of the people' and in the following year became a member for Paris of the Assemblée nationale. After the coup d'état of 1851, however, he had to flee the country to avoid reprisals for his uncompromising opposition to Louis Napoleon. He went to Belgium, thence to Jersey and finally to Guernsey, where he lived from 1855 to 1870. While his exile undoubtedly added to his political stature, it also brought him back to poetry. The eloquent satirical and epic verse of Les Châtiments (1853), still inspired by political passion, was followed by a series of works which rank among the greatest in modern literature. In Les Contemplations (1856) he created—and lived—the myth of the poet as a seer. Then came the two most striking visions of his poetic universe—La Fin de Satan and Dieu (published posthumously in 1886–91)—the first two panels of a projected triptych. The third was La Légende des Siècles (1859, 1877 and 1883), an epic of mankind and the epitome of Hugo's poetic experiments. He may have sought relief from these monumental tasks in the ribald fantasy of Les Chansons des rues et des bois (1865); yet in the three great novels which belong to the same period—Les Misérables (1862), Les Travailleurs de la Mer (1866) and L'Homme qui rit (1869)—his visionary world intrudes significantly upon passages of realistic narrative. His exile ended on 5 IX 1870 when he returned to Paris—an elder statesman embodying the somewhat outmoded republican virtues, but acclaimed as a hero. Memorable political and patriotic manifestations took place on his 80th birthday and again on his death in 1885. He was given a state funeral as the foremost man of letters of his time and a champion of the humanitarian ideal. But the Hugo who was honoured in this fashion was not the one whose work and influence have survived. He anticipated nearly all the innovations of later schools of poetry, and it is significant that, despite the vagaries of the critics' judgment, poets of our own time look upon Hugo as their predecessor, no less important than Baudelaire or Lautréamont. But his real greatness lay in his creative vigour, in his power to reflect the varied aspirations of his century and yet remain throughout a living force in the process of poetical discovery. Even his faults and eccentricities did not divert him from the true path of his genius. Mystical and philosophic preoccupations and spiritualist experiences, once apprehended and conveyed through the symbolism of the night and the sea, became an integral part of his imaginative creation, and even grandiloquence and over-emphasis were often inseparable from his most lucid moments and his consummate mastery of expression. The profound unity of his work combined with so much diversity and with the resolute dedication of a long and immensely active life to his poetic task makes him appear to us today as an example of artistic endeavour unparalleled in modern times.

Le Dernier Jour d'un Condamné (1829); Le Rhin (1842); Napoléon-le-Petit (1852); Histoire d'un Crime (wr. 1852, pub. 1877); William Shakespeare (1864); L'Année terrible (1872); Quatre-vingt-treize (1874); L'Art d'être grand-père (1877); Les Quatre Vents de l'esprit (1881); Choses vues (1887–1900); Toute la Lyre (1887).—Edition de l'Imprimerie Nationale (45 vols, best and most complete ed.); La Légende des Siècles, crit. ed., P. Berret (1920). A vast collection of letters Hugo received from his loyal mistress, Juliette Drouet, between 1833 and 1883 is still awaiting complete publication.

L. Mabilleau, V. H. (1893); C. Renouvier, V. H. le philosophe (1900); A. Joussain, L'Esthétique de V. H. (1920); G. Simon, Les Tables tournantes de Jersey (1923); P. Berret, V. H. (1927); D. Saurat, La religion de V. H. (1929); J.-B. Barrère, La Fantaisie de V. H. (1949–51); H. Guillemin, V. H. par lui-même (1951). J.G.

Hugo von Trimberg (c. 1230–1313), German moralist, schoolmaster of Bamberg who from 1290 wrote and revised his Renner (25,000 lines), a 'discursive' moral philosophy and burgher encyclopaedia, incorporating his impressive knowledge of the main classics, the Fathers, the Bible, Freidank and the sciences, anecdote and social satire. About 60 MSS and a print prove its popularity; it interested Gottsched and Lessing. His Latin Registrum multorum auctorum in Goliardic verse is often informative.

Ed. G. Ehrismann (1908–11); selected passages in J. Kürschner, Dt. Nat.-Lit., XII.

L. Behrendt, The ethical teaching of H. of T. (1926). F.P.P.

Hugues de Berzé (*1150?; †1219), French poet, lord of Berzé-le-Châtel in Burgundy. He wrote, after crusading experiences (1201), his didactic Bible (1215 ?), an exhortation to prepare for death. Five lyric poems also survive. Not a professional writer, he has some literary merit.

Bible au seigneur de B., ed. F. Lecoy (1939). F. Lecoy, 'Pour la chronologie d'H. de B.', in Romania, 67 (1942–43). M.F.L.

Hugues d'Oisy (*1150?; †1190?), French poet. Of noble birth and châtelain of Cambrai, he initiated his kinsman Conon de Béthune into lyric poetry. He wrote a light satirical piece, the Tournoiement des Dames (1180).

Tournoiement des Dames, ed. A. Jeanroy, in Romania, 28 (1899); lyrics, ed. J. Bédier and P. Aubry, in Chansons de Croisade (1909).
P. A. Becker, 'Die Kreuzzuglieder von Conon de Béthune und Huon d'Oisi', in Zeitsch. f. franz. Spr. und Lit., 64 (1942). M.F.L.

Hui SHIH (†c. 310 B.C.), Chinese philosopher. Hui was minister of Wei under king Hui (370–319 B.C.) and again under his successor, Hsiang. His theory of cognition appears to have greatly influenced Chuang-tzŭ whom he met in Sung between 322 and 319. The book, Hui-tzŭ, is lost; his dialectics are now known only from Chuang-tzŭ (his teaching is explicitly described in ch. 33).

A. Forke, 'The Chinese Sophists', in Jour. N. China Branch Roy. As. Soc., 34 (1901–02). A.R.D.

Hui TUNG (▫Yüan-ho, Kiangsu 18 XI 1697; †17/27 VI 1758), Chinese scholar. Hui came of a well-known scholarly family; he received from his father, Hui Shih-ch'i (1671–1741), the view-point of the 'Han-hsüeh' school. In their philological approach Hui and his disciples accepted, often too uncritically, the judgments of the Han dynasty scholars as being nearest in time to the Confucian classics, but they effectively disputed the dominance of the 'theological' attitude of the Sung dynasty neo-Confucians. His chief interest was in the I-ching.

Chou-i shu (c. 1759); I Han-hsüeh; Chou-i pên-i pien-chêng; Ku-wên shang-shu k'ao (c. 1774); Chiu-ching ku-i (c. 1775).
A. W. Hummel, Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period, I (1943). A.R.D.

Huisinga Bakker, PIETER (*Huizinge, Groningen 1713; †Amsterdam 12 X 1801), Dutch poet and prose writer whose careful verse is unjustly forgotten.

Poëzij (3 vols, 1763–90); Amsterdam (1782); Leeven van Jan Wagenaar (1776); Beschouwing van den ouden gebrekkelijken en sedert verbeterden trant onzer Nederduitsche verzen, in Werken Mij Nederl. Letterk.,V (1783). J.W.W.

Huitfeldt, ARILD (*Bergenhus 11 IX 1546; †Herlufsholm 16 XII 1609), Danish historian. He belonged to one of the most prominent noble families and became chancellor of Denmark. He was the first to write a history of Denmark after Saxo Grammaticus.

Danmarckis Rigis Krønicke fra Kong Dan og indtil Kong Knud den Siette (10 vols, 1595–1604).
H. F. Rørdam, Historieskriveren A. H. (1896); E. Jørgensen, Historieforskning og Historieskrivning i Danmark (1931). E.B.

Humbert de Montmoret (†c. 1525), French neo-Latin poet. One of the earliest poets in France to write patriotic poems on the model of the classical epic.

Bellum Rauenne (1513); Duodecim silue (n.d.).—D. Murarasu, La poésie néolatine (1928). F.W.

Humboldt, (FRIEDRICH HEINRICH) ALEXANDER VON (*Berlin 14 IX 1769; †ibid. 6 V 1859), German scientist and explorer. During the 1820s he lived in Paris, publishing accounts of his travels in 30 volumes.

Kosmos [an encyclopaedia account of the physical universe] (4 vols, 1845, 1847, 1850, 1858).
R. H. Stoddard, Life, Travels and Books of A. von H. (1860); L. Doering, Wesen und Aufgaben der Geographie bei A. von H. (1931).

Humboldt, (KARL) WILHELM VON (*Potsdam 22 VI 1767; †Tegel 8 IV 1835), German philologist, brother of Alexander. He was the virtual founder of Berlin university, but retired from politics in 1819 and devoted himself to linguistic research. His influence greatly extended the application of philology to general sociological and historical questions.

Gesammelte Werke (7 vols, 1841–52; new ed. 16 vols, 1903–36).
A. Leitzmann, W. v. H. (1919); S. A. Kaehler, W. v. H. und der Staat (1927). D.H.

Hume, DAVID (*Edinburgh 26 IV 1711; †ibid. 25 VIII 1776), Scottish philosopher and historian. He turned from the law and spent the years 1734–37 in study in France. His first publication, the Treatise, which contains the fullest exposition of his philosophy, was little noticed; with the appearance of his Essays his reputation began to rise. In 1752 he was appointed Keeper of the Advocates' Library; and thereafter held a number of secretarial posts. His History, though it linked his name with that of Gibbon in his day, is now prized more as a literary classic than a dependable historical work. In philosophy he developed the psychology of Locke and Berkeley, finding the source of cognition in sensory impression and reflection. One of his most important contributions to philosophy is the denial of experiential or formal proof of causality. Hume explains moral principles in terms of habit and social custom; his attitude to religious belief is sceptical. Religion arises 'from the incessant hopes and fears which actuate the human mind'. Hume's philosophy stimulated the great Scottish school of Reid and Dugald Stewart.

A Treatise of Human Nature (3 vols, 1739–40); Essays Moral and Political (2 vols, 1741–42); Philosophical Essays concerning Human Understanding (1748); An Enquiry concerning the Principles of Morals (1751); Political Discourses (1752); Essays and Treatises (4 vols, 1753–54); The History of England (5 vols, 1754–61); Four Dissertations (1757); The Life of David Hume, Esq. Written by Himself (1777); Two Essays (1777); Dialogues concerning Natural Religion (1779). A Treatise of Human Nature and Dialogues, ed. T. H. Green and T. H. Grose (2 vols, 1874); Essays, ed. Green and Grose (2 vols, 1875); Dialogues, ed. B. McEwen (1907); Political Discourses, ed. W. B. Robertson (1908).

T. H. Huxley, Hume (1879); E. Albee, H.'s Ethical System (1897); G. H. Sabine, H.'s Contribution to Historical Method (1906); C. D. Broad, H.'s Theory of the Credibility of Miracles (1916); C. W. Hendel, Studies in the Philosophy of H. (1925); A. Leroy, La critique et la religion chez D. H. (1930); J. Laird, H.'s Philosophy of Human Nature (1933); N. Kemp Smith, The Philosophy of D. H. (1941).

J.K.

Humfrey, LAURENCE (*Newport Pagnel c. 1527; ∞Joan Inkfordby; †Oxford 1 II 1589/90), Protestant theologian and president of Magdalen College, Oxford. One of the Marian exiles, he was later known as 'Papistomastix'. S.J.L.

Hung SHÊNG (▫Hangchow 1646?; †ibid. 1704), Chinese dramatist, was a disciple of Wang Shih-chên, and also intimate with Chu I-tsun and Chao Chih-hsin, after his entry into the imperial academy. His Ch'ang-shêng tien (c. 1684) was praised by emperor K'anghsi and had many private performances in the houses of officials. One such performance in 1689 during a period of court mourning brought his dismissal from the academy, and he spent his last years in poverty. The theme of the Ch'ang-shêng tien, the famous love-story of the T'ang emperor, Hsüan-tsung, and Yang Kuei-fei is in no way original but its treatment with fine poetry gained it lasting esteem. None of Hung's other seven plays had a like success. A.R.D.

Hunnis, WILLIAM (†1597), English musician and poet. As Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal (1566) Hunnis arranged performances of plays by his charges. He versified psalms and wrote minor religious poems.

Certayne Psalmes (1549); A Hyve full of Hunnye (1578); Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soule (1583); Hunnes Recreations (1588).

C. C. Stopes, 'W. H. and the Revels of the Chapel Royal', in Bang's Materialen, 29 (1910).

W.A.A.

Hunt, JAMES HENRY LEIGH (*Southgate, Mddx 19 X 1784; ∞1809 Marianne Kent; †Putney 28 VIII 1859), English critic, poet and journalist. Hunt followed Coleridge and Lamb at Christ's Hospital and in 1808 began to edit The Examiner with his brother John. Their attacks on the Prince Regent took Leigh to a gaily decorated cell in prison. From 1818 to 1821 he published a series of charming essays under the title of The Indicator. Hunt was a generous critic and friend and influenced and encouraged young writers (Keats and Shelley, for instance). His bitter attack on Byron rose out of their uncongenial association in Italy where they collaborated in The Liberal (1822). His privately circulated Christianism (1832; afterwards published as The Religion of the Heart, 1853) secured him Carlyle's friendship. In 1834 he founded The London Journal, another vehicle for his colourful essays; this was continued until 1836. Hunt's facile verse is forgotten but his essays and Autobiography (1858)—intelligent, frank and dramatic—are still read.

The Feast of the Poets (1814); The Story of Rimini (narrative poem, 1816); Foliage (1818); Lord Byron and his Contemporaries (1828); The Palfrey (poem, 1842); Sir Ralph Esher (novel, 1834); A Legend of Florence (play, 1840); Imagination and Fancy (1844); Wit and Humour (1846); The Town (2 vols, 1848); The Old Court Suburb (1855).—The Poetical Works of L. H., ed. H. S. Mitford (1923); Selected Essays, ed. J. B. Priestley (1929).

E. Blunden, H.: a Biography (1930).

B.H.

Huon de Mery, 13th-century French poet. A Benedictine monk living in Paris, he wrote Li Tournoiemenz d'Antecrist (c. 1235), an allegorical romance about repentance. Influenced by courtly writers like Chrétien de Troyes and Raoul de Houdenc, the work has literary distinction.

Ed. G. Wimmer (1888). M.F.L.

Huonder, GION ANTONI (*Mustér 18 XI 1824; †Chur 18 III 1867), Ræto-Romansch poet, who had an unhappy career. His poetical output was small, but some of his poems are almost perfect: they express, poetically but with quite unique intensity, the ideal of the mountain peasantry, freedom in poverty.

Poesias e prosa (1924). R.R.B.

Huon le Roi de Cambrai (fl. 13th century), French poet, author of two moral works (La Vie de Saint Quentin, before 1248, ed. A. Långfors and W. Söderhjelm, 1909) and Les Regrets de Notre Dame (between 1270 and 1275, ed. A. Långfors, 1907). A further series of poems (ed. Långfors, 1913) attributed to the Roi de Cambrai are probably by Huon. These are: Li Abecés par Ekivoche (on the symbolic meaning of the letters of the alphabet), L'Ave Maria en Roumans (moralizing glosses on the Ave), and La Descrissions des Relegions (characteristics and defects of the monastic orders). Finally, two fabliaux (ed. Långfors, 3rd ed. 1927), Le Vair Palefroi by Huon le Roi and La Male Honte by Huon de Cambrai may also be his work. Both are innocuous: the former, the simple tale of a girl who escapes from an unwelcome marriage thanks to the fleetness of her lover's palfrey and the befuddled state of the bridal party, is related with humour and finished narrative art. F.W.

Hurban, Jozef (L'udovít) Miloslav (*Devín 24 IV 1836; †Hlboké 21 II 1888), Slovak novelist, poet and critic. A Slovak country pastor, Hurban was closely associated with L'. Štúr in the establishment and propagation of modern standard Slovak, though he was not always insistent on the supersession of Czech as a literary language for the Slovaks. His work as a critic (especially in the periodical Slovenské pohl'ady, which he founded in 1846) was authoritative for his contemporaries. His original literary work comprises epics and novels on early Slovak and Slavonic history.

Verse: Svatba krále velko-moravského (1842).—Novel: Gottšalk (1861); Olejkár (1846, in book form 1889).—L'udovít Štúr (in Slovenské pohl'ady, 1881–84; in book form, 3 vols, 1928–42).

S. Št. Osuský, Filozofia štúrovcov, II: Hurbanova filozofia (1928). R.A.

Hurtado de Mendoza, Antonio (*Castro de Urdiales 1586; †Madrid 1644), Spanish poet and dramatist. He was a courtier who wrote for the court theatre. His El marido hace mujer is the source of Molière's L'école des maris. Sir Richard Fanshawe translated his Querer por sólo querer into English (Fiestas de Aranjuez; Querer por solo querer, 1671). His works are refined, ingenious and courtly.

Bibl. Autores Esp., XVI, XLII, XLV; Nue. Bibl. Autores Esp., XVII. E.M.W.

Hurtado de Mendoza, Diego (*Granada 1503; †Madrid 1575), Spanish poet, historian and humanist. He was of noble family, studied at Salamanca and executed important diplomatic missions for Charles V in England, Venice, Rome and at the Council of Trent. He incurred Philip II's disapproval and retired from court life in 1568. He read Greek, Hebrew and Arabic. His collection of manuscripts passed to the Escurial after his death. He wrote verse with more fluency than care, but some of his lyrics and burlesque verses are very well turned. His letter to Boscán and his classical fables in octavas are competent. The Lazarillo de Tormes (q.v.) has been attributed to him. His finest work is the prose history of the rebellion of the moriscos of Granada in 1568–71; this is modelled on Sallust and Tacitus and is brilliantly written. It was published posthumously in 1627. He also wrote some amusing prose satires.

Bibl. Autores Esp., XXI, XXXII, XXXVI; 'Poésies burlesques et satiriques inédites', ed. A. Morel-Fatio in Jahrb. f. rom. und engl. Sprache und Lit., II (1875); Obras poéticas, ed. W. I. Knapp (1877).

A. Paz y Melia, Sales españolas, I (1890); A. González Palencia and E. Mele, Vida y obras de don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza (3 vols, 1940–43); R. Foulché-Delbosc, in Revue Hispanique: I, 1894; II, 1895; V, 1898; VII, 1900; XXIII, 1910; XXXI, 1914; XXXII, 1914; XXXV, 1915. E.M.W.

Hurtado de Toledo, Luis: see Carvajal, Micael de.

Hus, Jan (*Husinec 1369?; †Constance 6 VII 1415), Czech religious reformer, theologian and philologist. Hus came to Prague university from his southern Bohemian home in the 1390s, took his master's degree in 1396 and was ordained in 1400. In 1402, when rector of the university, he began to preach a series of sermons in the Bethlehem chapel which gained him a popular reputation as a moralist, as well as bringing him to the favourable notice of the Bohemian court. From then on he was active as a religious reformer, writing and preaching on theological issues. His acknowledged master was the Englishman John Wyclif, though he was far from accepting all Wyclif's doctrines. The disturbances that followed his public condemnation of the sale of indulgences in 1412 caused him to leave Prague for a time and continue his writing and meditation in various provincial retreats. He failed to clear himself of the charge of heresy before the council of Constance and was convicted of heresy and burnt at the stake. His place as a Czech national figure and a religious reformer of European importance was already assured.

Apart from his Latin and Czech theological writings and his letters (especially those written in prison at Constance) Hus is remembered for his Czech hymns and for his reform of Czech orthography (De orthographia bohemica, 1410).

Latin works, ed. V. Flajšhans (1903–08); Sermones in Bethlehem 1410–11, ed. V. Flajšhans, in Věstník Král. čes. spol. nauk (1938–42); Magistri Iohannis Hus Quodlibet, ed. B. Ryba (1948); Betlemské texty, ed. B. Ryba (1951).—Czech works, M. J. Husi Sebrané spisy české, ed. K. J. Erben (3 vols, 1865–68), ed. V. Flajšhans (1903–08).—John Hus, Letters with introductions and explanatory notes, ed. H. B. Workman and R. M. Pope (1904).

A. H. Wratislaw, J. H. (1882); Count F. Lützow, The Life and Times of Master J. H. (1909); V. Novotný and V. Kybal, J. H. (5 vols, 1919–27); R. R. Betts, 'J. H.', in History (1939); P. Roubiczek and J. Kalmer, Warrior of God: the life and times of J. H. (1947); F. M. Bartoš, Literární činnost M. J. Husi (1948). R.A.

Husson, JULES-FRANÇOIS FÉLIX: see CHAMPFLEURY.

Hussovius (HUSSOWSKI), MIKOŁAJ (*Hussów c. 1475–85; †after 1533), Polish-Latin poet. Of low birth, he served with Bishop Ciołek. His main poem (Carmen . . .) written in good Latin gives a fine description of the beauties of the Polish landscape.

VERSE: Carmen de statura, feritate et venatione bisontis (1523); De vita et gestis divi Hyacinthi (1525). Carmina (1894; crit. ed. with intro., J. Pelczar).

J. Kallenbach, 'O żywiole rodzimym w poezji M. Hussowskiego', in Charisteria de Morawski (1922). S.S.

Hutcheson, FRANCIS (*Dublin 8 VIII 1694; †Glasgow 1 XI 1746), Irish philosopher. He was destined for the Presbyterian ministry but his Enquiry into Beauty and Virtue (1720) won him recognition as a philosopher and he was elected to the chair of moral philosophy at Glasgow. It was Hutcheson who coined the phrase 'moral sense' (the power of recognizing moral attributes in action) which has passed into common

System of M with l
T. l
Scott, religion

AKSHARA GRANTHALAYA
ACC.NO. 107705

Hutchinson, LUCY, née Apsley (*London 29 I 1619/20; ∞3 VII 1638 John Hutchinson; †c. 1676 ?), English author and translator of Lucretius best known for her biography of her husband the Parliamentarian, who died in prison after the Restoration despite her efforts to obtain his release.

Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, ed. Sir C. H. Firth (1906). B.L.J.

Huth, ALFRED HENRY (*London 14 I 1850; †ibid. 14 X 1910), English bibliophile, part founder of the Bibliographical Society.

The Marriage of Near Kin (1875); Life of Henry Thomas Buckle (2 vols, 1880); Speculum Humanae Salvationis (1888); tr. Goethe's Faust, Part I (1889, rev. ed. 1912); Travel and Adventures of Matthew Dudgeon (1894).

Huth, HENRY (*London 17 IV 1815; †ibid. 10 XII 1878), English bibliophile and banker. He collected his famous library of early printed books with advice from the historian H. T. Buckle. He was a president of the Philobiblion Society.

S. de Ricci, English Collectors of Books (1930).

Hutten, ULRICH VON (*Steckelberg Castle 21 IV 1488; †Ufenau, Lake Zürich VIII or IX 1523), German knight and humanist. After a turbulent youth became a militant humanist, supported Luther, attacked the papacy, had his health undermined by syphilis and died a fugitive in Switzerland. Employing stinging satire and invective, Hutten wrote Latin dialogues modelled on Lucian, attacking tyrannical rulers (Phalarismus, 1516) and the papacy (Vadiscus, 1520), glorifying the emperor and the German national spirit (Inspicientes, 1520; Arminius, 1524) and describing his own personal fortunes (Fortuna, 1519; Febris, 1519). After 1520 he wrote in German and introduced the dialogue form into the popular literature of the time (Gesprächsbüchlein, 1521). He wrote many of the letters in Part II of the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum (q.v.). The figure of Hutten as a warrior of freedom helping to herald the Reformation in Germany, has been much romanticized by his countrymen and often given literary treatment.

Querelae (1510); Exhortatio (1512); Nemo (1512–18); Aula (1518); Gesprächsbüchlein, ed. R. Zoozmann (1905); Arminius, ed. P. Sparmberg (1920); Hutteni Opera, ed. E. Böcking (7 vols, 1859–70); Deutsche Schriften, ed. S. Szamatólski (1891).

D. F. Strauss, U. v. H. (1858; new ed. O. Clemen, 1938; Eng. tr. 1874); P. Kalkoff, U. v. H. und die Reformation (1920); H. Holborn, U. v. H. (1929; rev. Eng. ed. 1937); G. Ritter, U. v. H. (1941). D.G.D.

Hutton, Richard Holt (*Leeds 2 VI 1826; ∞1851 Anne Roscoe, ∞1858 Eliza Roscoe; †Twickenham 9 IX 1897), English theologian and man of letters; literary editor of The Spectator, author of works defending Christianity against rationalists.

Essays, Theological and Literary (2 vols, 1871); Memoirs of Cardinal Newman (1891).
J. Hogben, H. of the Spectator (1900). R.M.H.

Huxley, Thomas Henry (*Ealing 4 V 1825; ∞1855 H. A. Heathorn; †Bastbourne 29 VI 1895), English biologist. Huxley's researches began with the study of marine organisms on his voyage in H.M.S. Rattlesnake, and he soon became Fellow of the Royal Society and left the navy to lecture at the Royal School of Mines. His later researches and speculations were devoted to the confirmation and extension of evolutionary theory. His writings are graceful and lucid and did much to foster interest in science. A keen philosopher, he brought a scientific mind to bear on metaphysical and theological problems.

Man's Place in Nature (1863); Hume (1879); Science and Culture and Other Essays (1881); Evolution and Ethics (1893); Collected Essays by T. H. H. (9 vols, 1894–1908).
P. Chalmers Mitchell, T. H. H., a Sketch of his Life and Work (1900); L. Huxley, The Life and Letters of T. H. H. (2 vols, 1900); E. Clodd, T. H. H. (1902); J. R. Ainsworth Davies, T. H. H. (1907). B.H.

Huybert, Petrus Antonius de (*The Hague 25 I 1693; †ibid. 19 VI, 1780) Dutch poet, important in the 'poets' war' (1715–16), as a writer of comedies under the motto 'per gradus ad scientiam', and as a translator.

Verse: Dichtlievende uitspanningen (with J. J. Mauricius, 1753).—Farces: De dwarsdrijfster (1718); De vermiste molenaar (1712); Het onbestorven weeuwtje (1718). J.W.W.

Huydecoper, Balthazar (*Amsterdam 10 IV 1695; †ibid. 23 IX 1778), Dutch man of letters, poet and playwright, alderman of Amsterdam, pioneer of critical editions.

Brieven van P. C. Hooft (1738); Rijmkroniek van Melis Stoke (3 vols, 1772); Proeve van taal- en dichtkunde in vrijmoedige aanmerkingen op Vondel's vertaalde herscheppingen van Ovidius (3 vols, 1730).—Verse: Gedichten (1788).—Plays: Arsaces (1715); Achilles (1719).
G. D. J. Schotel, Commentatio de meritis B. Huydecoperi (1833–34); H. A. Ett, B. H. (1947) and in Tijdschr. Ned. Taal en Letterk., 67 (1950). J.W.W.

Huygens, Constantijn (*The Hague 4 IX 1596; ∞6 IV 1627 Susanna van Baerle (†10 V 1637); †ibid. 1687), Dutch poet and statesman. An unusually intelligent youth, he was given an excellent education and at an early age excelled in several branches of learning and art. He wrote poetry in Latin, French, Italian, Dutch, composed music and was secretary to four Oranges in succession. Before entering the service of Frederick Henry in 1625 he repeatedly visited England as secretary to a Dutch envoy. All through his life he regarded his literary activity as Korenbloemen ('cornflowers') in the fertile field of his political work. In this he felt akin first to Cats—they were both Calvinists and humanists and he dedicated his satire Costelyck Mal (1621) to him—later more to Hooft and the Muiderkring (q.v.). Although a deeply emotional nature, as a poet he is intellectual. The swiftness of his mind and his addiction to play on words render him difficult to read. His admiration for John Donne and his marriage (his wife was a précieuse) enhanced this leaning. More pointed and wittier than Cats, he is less refined than Hooft. Especially in his farces and in some of his epigrams he indulges his tendency to coarse jokes. He chooses his subjects from his own life or from the society in which he moves, or gives character sketches. Level-headed though not pedestrian, a singer who seldom soars, a didactic poet without pedantry—he is a good representative of the 17th-century Dutchman.

D'Uytlandighe Herder (1622); Dagwerck (1639); Hofwyck (1651); Cluyswerck (1683); Scheepspraet (1625); Voorhout (1621); Stedestemmen (1624); Zeestraet (1666); Zede-printen (1623); Oogentroost (1647); Sneldichten; Trijntje Cornelis (1653, farce). Six translated poems in Batavian Anthology by John Bowring and H. S. van Dyk (1824).—Collected Verse: Korenbloemen (1658, extended in 1672).
J. A. Worp, De Gedichten van C. H. (9 vols, 1892–99) and De briefwisseling van C. H. (5 vols, 1911–17); Th. Jorissen, Mémoires de C. H. (1873); J. H. W. Unger, Dagboek van C. H. (1885); H.'s De Vita Propria, ed. P. Hofman Peerlkamp (1817); H. J. Eymael, 'John Donne's invloed op C. H.', in De Gids, II (1891), Huygens Studiën (1886); P. Valkhoff, 'C. H., homme d'état et poète hollandais et ses amitiés françaises', in Gazette de Hollande (1925–26); G. Cohen, 'Descartes en C. H.', in Haagsch Maandblad, II (1928); F. den Eerzamen, 'H. en de Bijbel', in Nieuwe Taalgids (1928); Margery Lane, 'C. H.', in Wetenschappelijke Bladen, II (1931); F. A. Stoett,

'H.'s Zedeprint: een professor', in Nieuwe Taalgids, XXX; C. L. Thyssen-Schoute, 'C. H. en Rabelais', in Tijdschr. v. Ned. T. en Lett., LVII; W. J. A. Jonckbloet and J. P. Land, Musique et Musiciens au XVIIe siècle. Correspondance et œuvres musicales de C. H. (1882); A. G. H. Bacherach, Sir Constantijn Huygens and some trends in the literature and art of 17th-century England and Holland (1953). A.M.B.W.

Huysmans, Joris-Karl [Charles Marie Georges] (*Paris 5 II 1848; †Paris 12 V 1907), French novelist. The son of a Dutch father, Huysmans described himself as 'un hollandais putréfié de parisianisme'. The influence of Baudelaire manifest in his early prose poems Le Drageoir aux Épices (1874) soon gave way to that of realism, in his first novel Marthe, histoire d'une fille (1876) which, together with an article in defence of Zola's L'Assommoir (1877), led to the founding of the naturalist school of writers. Huysmans dedicated his novel Les Sœurs Vatard (1879) to Zola and contributed a short story, Sac au dos, to the Soirées de Médan (1880). The influence of Baudelaire again asserted itself, however, when turning from the purely 'documentary' aspect of naturalism, Huysmans began to analyse the spiritual side of modern life, in A rebours (1884) and Là-bas (1891), and in his studies of the impressionist painters in L'Art moderne (1883) and Certains (1889). The contrast between his spiritual ideals and the peculiar naturalism of his expression which is his most personal and individual contribution to literature is best seen in En route (1895) and La Cathédrale (1898), both written after his conversion to Catholicism in 1892.

Croquis parisiens (1880); En ménage (1881); A vau-l'eau (1882); La Bièvre et Saint-Séverin (1898); L'Oblat (1903); Trois primitifs (1904). —Œuvres complètes, ed. L. Descaves (16 vols, 1928–34).

H. Bachelin, Du naturalisme littéraire au naturalisme mystique (1926); L. Deffoux, H. sous plusieurs aspects (1927); H. Trudgian, L'esthétique de H. (1934). T.W.

Hyatt, Stanley Portal (*1877; †30 VI 1914), Rhodesian novelist. He went to Rhodesia in 1899 and before cattle disease ruined him, became the largest native trader in east Matabeleland. His novels are mostly tales of adventure with a Rhodesian setting.

Marcus Hay (1907); The Little Brown Brother (1908); Biffel, a Trek Ox (1909); The Marriage of Hilary Carden (1909); The Northward Trek (1909); Black Sheep (1909); The Law of the Bolo (1910); The Land of Promises (1911); The Makers of Mischief (1911); The Way of the Cardines (1913); The Black Peril of Peihoo (1914); A Man from the Past (1915); The Mammoth (1916). E.R.S.

Hyde, Edward, Earl of Clarendon (*Denton, Wilts ? 18 II 1608/9; ∞1629 ? Anne Ayliffe, ∞10 VII 1634 Frances Aylesbury; †Rouen 9 XII 1674), English statesman and historian of outstanding prose style, loyal to the Stewarts, who was eventually impeached and disgraced when lord chancellor (1667). A man of wide interests he was a frequenter of Falkland's house in the 1630s. Later chancellor of the university of Oxford he left his name to its press which still benefits from the royalties of his History. B.L.J.

The History of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in England (3 vols, 1702–04); The History of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in Ireland (1719–20), both ed. W. D. Macray (6 vols, 1888).

C. H. Firth, Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, in Eng. Hist. Rev. (1904) and E. H. Earl of Clarendon (1909); Sir H. Craik, Life of Edward Earl of Clarendon (2 vols, 1911); L. C. Knights, 'Reflections on Clarendon's History of the Rebellion', in Scrutiny (1948). J.R.B.

Hyginus, Roman mythographer of uncertain date, wrote Genealogiae, a handbook of mythology, which frequently shows misunderstanding of Greek sources, and Poetica Astronomica, an account of the constellations with the myths attached to them.

Ed. H. J. Rose (1934); A van Staveren, Mythographi Latini (1742; with comm.). J.A.W.

Hynd, John (fl. 1606), English romance-writer; graduated at Cambridge; wrote after the style of Greene, interspersing his prose with verse.

Prose Fiction: The Historie of Lysimachus and Varrona (1604); Eliosto Libidinoso (1606). —Prose Tract: The Mirrour of Worldly Fame (1603; repr. Harleian Misc. II, 1809). B.L.J.

Hyperides (*389; †323 B.C.), Athenian orator, supported Demosthenes and died, as he had lived, opposing Macedon. Four fragmentary speeches (one prosecuting Demosthenes, in the Harpalus case, with obvious regret for a lost master, one Against Athenogenes, of a lighter, romantic interest) justify the ancients' high estimation of him. He has at times an almost Demosthenean fervour, and a wit and delicacy of feeling which are his own.

Ed. F. G. Kenyon (1907); C. Jensen (1917); G. Colin (1946; with Fr. tr.); Funeral Oration, tr. A. S. Way, in Speeches in Thucydides (1934).

A. and M. Croiset, Histoire de la littérature grecque, IV (1947); J. F. Dobson, The Greek Orators (1919). J.H.K.

ಗ್ರಂಥಾಲಯ
ಕನ್ನಡ ವಿಶ್ವವಿದ್ಯಾಲಯ - ಹಂಪಿ
ವಿದ್ಯಾರಣ್ಯ

ವರ್ಗೀಕರಣ ಸಂಖ್ಯೆ : 803 CAS

ಪರಿಗ್ರಹಣ ಸಂಖ್ಯೆ : 107705

ಪುಸ್ತಕವನ್ನು ಕೊನೆಯಲ್ಲಿ ನಮೂದಿಸಲಾಗಿರುವ ದಿನದಂದು ಅಥವಾ ಅದಕ್ಕೆ ಮುನ್ನ ಹಿಂದಿರುಗಿಸಬೇಕು. ತಡವಾದ ಪ್ರತಿದಿನಕ್ಕೆ ನಿಯಮಾನುಸಾರ ದಂಡ ಶುಲ್ಕ ವಿಧಿಸಲಾಗುವುದು.

ವರ್ಗೀಕರಣ ಸಂಖ್ಯೆ 803 CAS
ಲೇಖಕ S.H. STEINBERG